BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURES

Another triumphant release for the Broadway Universal Features brand. A big beautiful play, known from coast to coast as one of Augustus Thomas's masterpieces of the speaking stage. Staged and acted as are all productions of Hobart Bosworth with a realism and fine acting that are as enjoyable as they are rare. If the average feature concern produced a play as big as this they would charge you $25 to $65 rental, and the picture would be worth it as a feature release. But how could the average Exhibitor make any money at the top price? That is the question for you to consider. As a Broadway Universal Feature it is released on the regular Universal Program at so slight an advance in cost over the regular seven-feature program that any Exhibitor can book it, show it to packed houses, and make the money he is in business to get. Wire or write your Exchange immediately for release date and full particulars, and do it now.

3 Big Reasons Why Exhibitors Are Contracting For The SOUTH AMERICAN TRAVEL PICTURES

Variety to your program Travel Pictures lend variety to your program, which is a necessity to attract and hold a class patronage. The big metropolitan theatres are cutting out the slap-stick, wild west one reelers, and running scenics instead. There are sound business reasons for it—people get tired of the same old thing—they want something new. Do you insure their finding it in your theatre?

Interest for everyone At this time everyone is interested in South America. The press is giving columns and columns of publicity. The trade searchlight is focused on South America. Are you capitalizing on this interest and showing Paramount South American Travel Pictures?

Real Value Any pictures attracting new people and that keep them coming to your theatre, are the kind of pictures which are valuable to you. Are you attracting new people by using the Paramount South American Travel Pictures?

ACTION ALL THE WAY

Every foot of South American Travel Pictures teems with action; nothing inanimate or just pretty, but big, live subjects—pulsing with life—showing the twelve republics that make up the "Great Continent of Opportunity." Every foot of film filled with action—action—action!

November 1st. 1915
it will release exclusively through Paramount Pictures Corporation an extraordinary photoplay production of Geraldine Farrar
(by arrangement with Morris Gest.)
in
produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

Newspapers of the Nation Praise Production.

Kitty Kelly in the Chicago Tribune:—
"World's Greatest Newspaper"

"One cannot do justice to 'Carmen'. It is a picture of finesse, encompassing the sincere efforts of a great player—even to the point of very rough treatment accorded the expensive person of a prima donna—of a great director and of a loyal studio support. It is no Sunday school play, this picture of the classic heart bandit. There's a plentiful showing of emotions as they are, not as they are refined by civilization and the 'what will people say' idea, but it is all done with a swift deftness that makes the point without the wearisome tediousness of other directors less artistic than Cecil de Mille."

Grenville Vernon in the New York Tribune:—

"The most interesting example of the new art of the photoplay. Miss Farrar's personality is admirably suited to the screen, and her facial expression was excellent."

The Denver Post:—

"It has been an eventful week in the theatres. It was the 'movies' however, that took the honors by the film appearance of Geraldine Farrar and the expensive 'Carmen."

San Francisco Call & Post:—

"Geraldine Farrar's 'Carmen' makes as dramatic an appeal to the eye as her voice ever did to the ear. The resolution of Geraldine Farrar, the beautiful and gifted star, to employ her talents in the attaining of success in the films is one of the greatest steps in advancing the dignity of the motion pictures. Miss Farrar's 'Carmen' in the films is the greatest triumph the motion picture has yet achieved over the speaking stage."

Moving Picture World--Oct. 9, 1915

"The comedy is all action—There is a pleasing absence of slapstick play—With its accessories of good photography and above-mentioned attributes of direction and cast it bids fair for a large following in leading picture houses."

Dramatic Mirror--Oct. 6, 1915

"Max Figman makes a thoroughly delightful 'Blackie Daw', and Burr McIntosh displays the suave smooth unctuousness of George Randolph Chester's mythical character in a manner so convincing that one almost imagines that he has just stepped from the pages of the book. The Whartons should be highly commended. If the following episodes are as entertaining as the first this should prove to be a mighty good and mighty profitable serial picture."

Motion Picture News--Oct. 9, 1915

"Burr McIntosh as 'Wallingford' and Max Figman as 'Blackie Daw' are of just the type we have imagined all these characters. The humor which is the basis of the whole picture is a refreshing relief from the slapstick sort which has played so large a part in series pictures of the past."

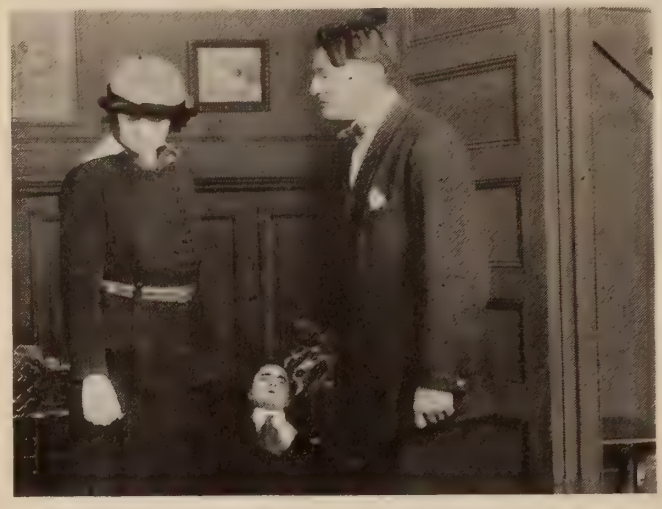
Triangle Spells Dollars to These Men

Hulsey, of Texas, doesn't think in nickels and dimes. He thinks in big sums—like a regular Texan. A hundred thousand a year won't stop Hulsey. So—his theatres in Dallas, Waco, Galveston and Houston are all in the TRIANGLE now.



And Jake Wells—everybody knows Wells. He has come into the TRIANGLE GARDEN, because he wants the best. So Richmond and Norfolk will have TRIANGLE SERVICE. Costs don't worry Wells. He's after results.

Simpson and Gordon, of Rochester, made a success of their Regent Theatre. But it wasn't big enough. Now they've bought a little insurance for more success —they've joined the TRIANGLE FAMILY.

Out in Seattle, there's a man by the name of Jensen. You'll find him at the Liberty Theatre. Jensen will spend money if you can show him something worth while to spend it on. He's a TRIANGLE recruit—for nearly as much money as the President of the United States gets.

TRIANGLE and success are interchangeable terms to these men—they investigated: then they bought. Doesn't this evidence affect you?

"THE TRUTH ABOUT HELEN"

A 4-act feature of fast action that knits an absorbing plot of love, lust and politics.

A LOVING, impulsive girl is eloping—the machine breaks down—they have to go to a nearby hotel. Then scandal with its forked tongue pins the girl on its fiery coals. She is helplessly caught in political machinations which are most adroitly screened, dramatically and tensely playing with the girl's life and love—but true to rotten politics and its underground methods. A Real drama of feature fullness of interest of the new Edison standard, not to be measured in mere footage. Direction Frank McGlynn. Friday, November 12.

Henry B. Walthall depicts Poe's anguish over starving wife

In a tumble down hut at Fordham, in the outskirts of New York City, Edgar Allan Poe sat by the bed of his dying wife.

The snow sifted through the poor patched roof and broken door, and the midnight winds swept it in drifts across the floor.

The beautiful young wife was wrapped in Poe's old army coat, her only covering. She needed warmth and food, but Poe was penniless.

In the night hours he watched his adored wife, starving, shivering with cold, until death released her.

His sensitive soul was torn with horror and despair. But his genius burned clear. Out of blood and anguish was born what has since been acknowledged as one of the greatest masterpieces of the English language—"The Raven."

Essanay has created a wonderfully artistic six act photoplay of "The Raven," founded on Poe's life as presented in the widely known novel and play by George C. Hazelton, and directed by Charles J. Brabin.

HENRY B. WALTHALL, the living image of Poe, with Warda Howard, the great emotional actress, make of this masterpiece a drama that throbs with life and intense action.

The Reviewer, The Producer and the Exhibitor

THERE are so many false notions about what the reviewing attitude of a trade paper toward pictures should be, that it is time some of these notions were exploded and exploded for good.

One of these is, that any picture which violates the canons of art should be condemned.

Another is, that every review should be a masterpiece of literary effort, in which is displayed in all its variegated completeness, the reviewer's "preparedness" on the English language.

A third is, that the reviewer is infallible, and that any picture which he does not like, must, therefore, be a poor picture.

The most pernicious of these is probably the last, and it is usually to be found in company with the second.

We beg to disagree emphatically with each and all of these theories.

THE whole matter of trade reviewing can be summed up in these words:

1. The reviewer on a trade paper is, in reality, the projection room representative of the exhibitor.

2. As such, he is concerned first and principally, with the box-office—that is, the money-making-possibilities, of the pictures he reviews.

3. The box-office success of a picture does not depend upon its artistic or theoretical perfection.

4. The reviewer's personal opinion of a picture is absolutely worthless, unless he is certain it will agree with the opinion of the thousands who will see that picture at their theatres.

THE reviewer, we repeat, is the representative of the exhibitor in the producers' projection rooms.

He is not writing to please the manufacturer. He is not writing to please himself.

He is looking at every picture because the exhibitor cannot be there to see it himself, and it is his duty to see the picture as the exhibitor would see it if he were there.

Now the exhibitor is a business man. He is not an expert on high art, or on theories of dramatic construction, or on philosophies of emotion and life. He is a business man—and his chief business is to know and to recognize at sight, what the people, to whom he caters, want.

THE men and women of the audience are not experts, either, nor analysts, nor critics. They endorse a picture, or condemn it, as a whole. They do not and cannot resolve it into its component parts, and weigh the value of each element in the total strength of the picture. They do not and cannot appraise it by abstract standards. They like a picture—or they don't like it. That is all.

And over and over, audiences have applauded pictures which violated artistic dogmas, which were founded upon strained psychology, which have scandalized dramatic technicians because of their loose construction, which have been badly set, and indifferently acted—because they liked them, in spite of those weaknesses. And over and over again they have failed to be impressed by pictures which were sumptuously and correctly staged, admirably acted and satisfied every dramatic nicety—simply and solely because they "didn't like them," in spite of those elements of strength.

IN other words, a picture may violate, at a score of points, the trained critic's sense of what a good picture should be, and pack the theatres—and a picture may be hailed as a masterpiece by the critics, and go begging for patronage.

Art and success are quite independent of each other. When they meet it is an accident. When they don't, it is a misfortune.

But the public is the arbiter of success, and the public is not an art authority. It knows what it wants. If it can have that want supplied in an artistic manner, well and good. If not, art may whistle. It will have what it wants.

IF art were synonymous with success, Isadora Duncan would have packed them in at the Century for a year, and "Chin-Chin" would have closed the first week.

If art and success were inseparable, "The Old Homestead" would have perished under a blizzard of paper, and Percy Mackaye's blank verse dramas would be household words in every American home.

It is such people the exhibitor is bound to represent. And it is such a public the trade reviewer must keep in mind in every review.

There are millions of motion picture patrons, with all kinds of tastes for all kinds of pictures—with a leniency of judgment for detail, but a fastidious insistence that the total effect of the picture be to their liking.

The best picture made will not satisfy every one of these millions; the poorest will find many receptive audiences among them. And what the public standard of judgment is, no man has ever discovered, so that he could reduce it to a formula, and turn out successes with mathematical certainty.

Vol. XII November 6, 1915. No. 18

UNDER such conditions, it is not for one reviewer, or any number of reviewers to condemn a picture before it has reached and been passed upon by the public, whose opinion alone is worth anything to the exhibitor and the producer.

This does not mean that every picture shall be uniformly praised. It does not mean that every fault shall be ignored.

What it does mean is this:

To the reviewers of a trade paper, every finished picture is first, a product to be marketed, and last, a work of art.

As such, the main question to be answered by the trade reviewer is—will this picture make money for the exhibitor who books it, and how many possible reasons are there for supposing it will?

DOES it need to be repeated that this applies to the review pages, and to those alone? In editorials, in special articles, the journal can and should assail every weakness in the producing end of the business, and continually demand progress and improvement in every department of the studio. But its reviews should not be converted into either editorials or special articles on these subjects, at the expense of a picture as yet untried by the public.

This does not involve representing the picture to be something it is not. It is only emphasizing what the picture is. It is, as a matter of fact, the one safeguard against that fatal attitude of mind into which all reviewers and critics are prone to fall—the attitude which assumes that, because a picture is not all it ought to be, it is commercially and to the public, worth nothing.

IN about four cases out of ten, it is self-evident that the picture, masterpiece or no masterpiece, will be a money-maker. When the reviewer has said so, he is through.

In the other six, the exhibitor alone can be the judge, and he cannot always tell until he has tried it on an audience. When such a picture is to be reviewed, there is only one thing for the reviewer to do—inform the exhibitor of the picture's effect as a whole, of its contents, and its obviously strong and obviously weak features, and without pronouncing any verdict himself, leave the exhibitor to determine upon the entire evidence, not whether it is a good picture or a poor picture, but whether it is a good picture or a poor picture for his theatre.

The reviewer may enumerate any catalogue of defects he pleases, but unless absolutely certain of his ground, he must not lead the exhibitor to believe that anyone of these faults, or all of them combined, make it impossible for him to book and profit with that picture.

THIS is the only attitude a trade paper can assume, on its review pages, in fairness to the producer and the exhibitor. On any other page in the magazine any propaganda for the uplift and improvement of pictures may be undertaken at any length, in any form. But never on the review pages, at the expense of any particular picture which still has a reputation and an income to earn for its producer.

This in fairness to the exhibitor, be it repeated.

For it is just as wrong to assure an exhibitor he cannot make money with a picture on which other exhibitors' experience will prove that he can, as it is to assure him he can make money by booking a picture on which other exhibitors have lost, or will lose.

TO see the picture as the exhibitor would see it if he were there—this is the whole duty of the trade reviewer in the projection room; this is and always has been the reviewing policy of Motion Picture News.

Stage Stars in Pictures

THE dramatic critic of a New York daily, who is quite distinct from his New York confreres in that he evidently studies pictures while he also criticizes them, makes a pertinent observation.

Why, he asks, do not some eminent stage stars who appear in pictures perfect themselves in photoplay technic?

The query is a timely one.

The answer undoubtedly is that "some" stars not only do not take the picture seriously, but see no necessity for so doing. The attraction the picture offers is the salary given, as one star frankly admitted just the other day. As a vehicle for the expression of their art, they do not comprehend and hence do not recognize the motion picture.

WHICH state of affairs is not only unfortunate for the pictures in which such stars appear, but also and decidedly unfortunate for the stars themselves. The picture, it would seem, can stand the results of this strange lack of understanding far better than the stars who are guilty of it.

A noted prima donna recently scored a dramatic triumph in a picture. Her acting is splendid and the whole reason for her success is summed up in her own sincere statement, that she found in motion photography a freer, better medium of expression than the operatic stage. She acts because she knows and feels her medium.

The consequences of this understanding of and devotion to her work in pictures are not only contributory to motion picture art, but, and in a marked degree, to the prima donna's own reputation and popularity.

Wherein lies a lesson for "some" stars who appear—not to their own best credit—in motion pictures.

Table of contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

Kansas Will Present Solid Front Against Censorship

As Outcome of the State Convention Held in Pittsburg on October 18-19, Exchange Men and Exhibitors Form the Amusement Association of Kansas, Which Will Take the Active Work of Fighting for Saner Censor Laws from the Shoulders of the League

Kansas City, Oct. 26.

THE Amusement Association of Kansas, an organization of exhibitors and exchange men, was the outcome of the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, Kansas Branch, and the Film Exchange Men's Association of Kansas City, that was held in Pittsburg, Kansas, on October 18 and 19.

This new association will take the active work from the shoulders of the league and the exchange men's association in their fight against unfair censorship that is now being enforced in the Western state. The plans for it were worked out by big men who have been against the censorship law as it is practiced here.

It has been said that the Kansas exhibitors have been lax and that it was a hard matter to get them to attend a convention, but this time they turned out in full force, and along with the assistance of the exchange men of Kansas City that went in a body, the new association was formed.

It went with a vim when it was mentioned that the two organizations should combine in their efforts to secure a saner censorship in the state of Kansas, where conditions have reached an almost intolerable condition in the way of expenses for the censoring of pictures for exhibition in that state. It was pointed out by one of the exhibitors that his tax, in which was included the cost of censoring, averaged about 40 per cent. on his investment. It is conditions like these that will have to be overcome, and it is the object of the new organization to overcome them.

At an open meeting the first day of the convention it was suggested that a committee be appointed from those who were present to devise ways and means of getting the exhibitors and exchange men together for the purpose of combating the censorship law in its present form.

Committee Appointed

A committee composed of E. R. Pearson, Kansas City manager of V-L-S-E; Charles Harden, Fox Film Corporation's manager in Kansas City; Ross C. Cropper, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company of Kansas City; P. J. Concannon, an exhibitor from Emporia; Fred Savage, an exhibitor from Hutchinson, and W. M. Willeys, an exhibitor from Mulberry, took this in hand and reported later in the day with a copy of resolutions, which were submitted to the Exhibitors League.

At a night meeting the league adopted them with a few minor changes which were agreeable to all concerned.

The constitution and by-laws that were adopted follow:

Whereas, The enactment and enforcement of hostile, burdensome, un-American and intolerable censorship laws as relating to the exhibition of motion pictures in the state of Kansas has brought about a condition which threatens the stability and prosperity of the industry; and

Whereas, In the administration of the laws the exhibitors have met with what seems to them an unreasonably strict, prejudicial interpretation thereof, now therefore

Be it resolved, That the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, Kansas Branch, in convention assembled, on this eighteenth day of October, 1915, at Pittsburg, Kansas, in recognition of the paramount importance of securing an abatement of these conditions, does hereby pledge its membership to the support of an organization to be known as the Amusement Association of Kansas and to have for the purpose of its existence general protection of the amusement interests against any and all impositions of whatever nature, as well as the improvement and upbuilding thereof in all matters, and to bring into close bonds of fellowship all and sundry interests directly or indirectly concerned; and

Be it resolved, That the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, Kansas Branch, through its executive committee and members, urgently admonish all to whom the privilege of membership has been extended to avail themselves thereof, sincere in the belief and firm in the conviction that by this means may be met and mastered the intolerable conditions that now exist.

Declaration of Principles

First.—We favor in every branch and department of the business of public amusement a policy of clean, honorable, honest and ethical business practice and in fair dealing in all relations with the public and with each other.

Second.—We utterly condemn the exhibition at any place at any time of any lewd, indecent, suggestive or immoral play, act, performance or motion picture film, and pledge this association and its membership to the active and energetic suppression of any such play, act, performance or motion picture film.

Third.—This association stands pledged and committed to a constant effort to improve and upbuild the quality of the public exhibitions given by its membership and the places in which they are held or given.

Fourth.—We favor protecting our membership against fraudulent action or practice, against impostors and impositions of whatever nature.

The Constitution

The objects and purposes of this association shall be to bring together in close bonds of association all persons interested in the business of public amusement in the state of Kansas and to foster and develop social and commercial relations between them and to protect its membership against fraud or unfair practices of any nature, regardless of by whom or what interest attempted, and to develop and upbuild the business of public amusement in accordance with the declaration and principles which appear above and to which this association is committed.

Its membership shall consist of owners, proprietors, stockholders, lessees, managers, partners, and employes in or of theatres of all classes, film exchanges, film or vaudeville booking agencies, scenic studios, motion picture theatre supply concerns, theatrical seating concerns, baseball, summer park and airdome enterprises and kindred and allied concerns and others having a financial interest in the business of public amusement subject to the action of the membership committee.

The convention was a huge success in every way. It was predicted by some before the date set for the meeting that it would be next to impossible to get the exhibitors to attend. But they came from all parts of the state and were well repaid for attending. All were enthusiastic about the meeting and all were up in arms about the huge censorship tax that they are compelled to pay.

The general concensus of opinion was not to try to have the law repealed in its entirety, but to have it amended in such a way that it would not work such a hardship upon the exhibitors and exchanges. Several of the prominent men in the convention were in favor of this, while some of the most rabid were in favor of an attempt to repeal the law in its entirety. The question of how to eliminate the obstruction will be worked out later.

The second day of the convention the Rev. Festus Foster, one of the censors, turned up and came in and talked to the exchange men and exhibitors. He said that he himself was not in favor of the high tax that the moving picture exhibitors were compelled to pay for the censoring of their films, but that he was in favor of censorship. He is of the opinion that the law could be amended and that he thought the tax should be just enough to pay the cost of such censoring.

Kansas President Speaks

Another speaker prominent among the exhibitors was W. B. Moore, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, Kansas Branch. He operates a picture show in the state, and his taxes amount to about forty per cent. on his investment.

Practically everyone of the two hundred present had something to say about censorship.

E. C. Mills, who has fought censorship and Sunday closing in Oklahoma and Texas, attended the convention as a representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, and no amount of praise will repay him for his invaluable service.

The officers of the new association elected to serve for the coming year are: Carl Mensing, of Leavenworth, president; W. H. Willey, of Mulberry, vice-president; E. H. Meyn, of Kansas City, Kansas, treasurer; and J. E. Foland, of Motion Picture News, secretary.

Exchanges Represented

The following are the exchanges and the representatives they had at the conevntion: V-L-S-E, E. R. Pearson, L. J. Scott and H. E. Stahler; Mutual Film Corporation, F. L. Kiltz, E. C. Mills, William Warner and L. B. Douglas; Fox Film Corporation, Chas. W. Harden, E. H. Wachter, and W. B. Emrich; Universal Film and Supply Company, R. C. Cropper and C. W. Paramount and K. and E. in $2,000,000 Company

W. W. Hodkinson, in Joining Hands with the Celebrated Theatrical Producing Firm, Extends His Service to Cities Not Yet Reached by Film Corporation

THE Paramount Pictures Corporation has signed contracts with Klaw and Erlanger by the terms of which a new $2,000,000 corporation, to be known as the Paramount-Klaw and Erlanger Company, has been formed.

The executive board of the new corporation will consist of W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company; Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company; Marc Klaw, Abraham L. Erlanger and Raymond Pawley, treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

An associate board of directors will be announced later.

The purpose of the new organization will be to extend Paramount service to cities which it has not yet reached, and to procure suitable theatres in these cities for the showing of Paramount pictures.

At its formation as the first feature program company in the motion picture business, a year and a half ago, the Paramount Pictures Corporation instituted the continuous service system of booking photoplays, which has been used successfully in the legitimate theatre by Klaw and Erlanger, and it was therefore natural that these two interests should form an alliance.

It was announced that it is not the intention of this new organization to fight anyone, or to usurp the place of anyone. It is merely to extend the service of a company which already exists, and to better generally the exhibition of motion pictures throughout the country; it will not interfere with the present interests of the Paramount Pictures Corporation or its feature-producing companies, the Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Oliver Morosco and Pallas Pictures, Inc., on the one hand, or Klaw and Erlanger on the other—which means that the present relations of the theatres booking the service of either of these organizations will not be disturbed.

Launching the first feature program in the face of terrific odds, instituting policies which were unheard of in the motion picture business, Paramount proved that its ideas were correct. Today, bigger and better theatres, such as the Strand in New York, have sprung up throughout the country, and in every instance the backbone of their program is Paramount pictures. Automobiles are now seen at motion picture theatres, and people in evening dress attend.

Longer runs and rebookings, with the added value of national advertising, have proved successful—ideas which had their conception in the mind of W. W. Hodkinson, and their fulfillment in the operations of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Thought was evinced in every dealing of the big company—everything was planned ahead. The largest advertising campaign ever launched in the motion picture business was not begun without nearly a year of investigation on the part of Howard E. Spaulding.

It was supplemented by publicity and advertising helps to the exhibitor.

Step by step Paramount has spread its gospel throughout the country—higher prices, better theatres, better patrons and better music.

The alliance of two such companies was bound to come in the natural sequence of events. It marks, apparently, the signing of the peace pact between the silent and spoken drama.

UNIVERSAL BEAUTIES IN PALACE THEATRE FASHION SHOW

Five beauties from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company appeared in the Palace theatre's Fall Fashion show as a part of the $1,000,000 display of gems, gowns, furs, lingerie, hats, feathers, sport clothes and boots from the supreme creative artists in style.

The Universal beauties were Violet Mersereau, Rosemary Theby, Dorothy Phillips, Betty Gray and Edna Hunter. Their gowns were designed by Harry Collins, costumer of 29 West Thirty-eighth street, New York City.

Mutual Companies Increasing Production Activity

Gaumont, Thanhouser and American Film Make Preparations to Meet Demand for More Subjects—"Seventh Noon," a Masterpicture, for Release November 7

THE announcement of extensive plans for increased activity in various Mutual Film Corporation producing companies comes from the home office simultaneously with that of a number of unusual photo-dramas, which will appear in the near future on the Mutual program. Its new program is now practically complete, save for the final arrangements concerning Vogue comedies, forthcoming in a few days.

Announcement of the most recently perfected plan of changes in equipment and working arrangements comes from the Gaumont studio at Flushing, L. I. In order to handle its four Mutual brands—the tri-weekly Rialto Star Features, in which a well-known Broadway player has the leading role; the weekly Casino Star Comedy, split-reel scenic and animated comic; "See America First" and "Keeping Up with the Joneses," and the "Mutual News Weekly," the Gaumont company will open up a winter studio in South Jacksonville, Fla. Details were given in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Thirty thousand dollars is being expended by the Thanhouser company for a glass studio at Jacksonville, Fla., as also announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, which will be ready for occupation on December 1. At that time some of the New Rochelle contingency will go South, where the beautiful scenery of Florida, the West Indies and the Bermudas will be used as the setting for one and multiple-reel drama and comedy for the Mutual.

Simultaneously, two companies will go to the Hudson Bay country to produce dramas of life in the frozen North. Activities will by no means be slackened in New Rochelle. No changes will be made at present in the Thanhouser's output of Mutual pictures—the two Falstaff comedies, one multiple reel and one part drama, of weekly release, a bi-weekly Than-o-play multiple reel production, and an occasional Masterpicture.

While the American Film Corporation announces no important immediate changes in production or equipment, it is sending to the Mutual program of November 11, as a Masterpicture, "The End of the Road," a picturization of that play by H. Grattan Donnelly, which first went to the public under the title of "Carolina." May Allison and Harold Lockwood play in this Masterpicture.

The most recent addition to the David Horsley players, announcement has just come, is Irving Cummings, the leading man of the Mutual's serial, "The Diamond from the Sky."

Another Masterpicture which will be released as a special in the Mutual program on November 7, is "The Seventh Noon," in which Ernest Glendenning, the popular young actor, plays the leading role. "The Seventh Noon" was originally a book from the pen of Frederick Orin Bartlett.

STEEN GETS FRANCHISE FOR ONE REEL COMEDY ON ASSOCIATED

A. G. Steen, president of the Steen Film Producing Company, Philadelphia, has been in New York negotiating for a franchise with the Associated, and after a thorough investigation has finally closed a deal for a franchise of a one-reel comedy weekly.

Mr. Steen originally started the Steen Feature Film Exchange in Baltimore, ten years ago, and afterwards purchased several theatres, which he operated successfully. He was the manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. He has an interest in the Tri-State Feature Film Co. of Philadelphia and Baltimore, and was one of the prime movers in the formation of the Kriterion, and owner of the rights for that program for Eastern Pennsylvania.

Rothapfel Meets Capital City Film Men on His Tour

Gathering Is Second in the Countrywide Trip of Master-Manager Under Auspices of the Mutual, and Is Presided Over by B. C. Cunningham, of the Company's Exchange in Washington, D. C.—Hotel Raleigh Is Scene of Meeting, Where in the Oak Room, the Guests Listen to Talk on Exhibitor Management

Washington, D. C., Oct. 26.

THE meeting of S. L. Rothapfel with the exhibitors and exchangemen of the National Capital, marked a significant unity of the motion picture and the press, which promises not only to strengthen this co-operation in Washington, but will be felt elsewhere.

The gathering was the second of the series known as the Rothapfel-Mutual tour, given under the auspices of the local Mutual film exchange, of which B. C. Cunningham is manager. The oak parlor of the Raleigh hotel was thrown open to the film men, who gathered informally, smoked and were served a buffet repast.

This was not merely for the devotees of the Mutual program or features, nor to exploit in any way the films of these manufactures, which was demonstrated by the presence of exchangemen and exhibitors showing films of all programs. There was a spirit of fellowship which possibly no other film man could have created except Mr. Rothapfel, who is known in every corner of the country for his success.

The significance of the unity of the press and pictures was demonstrated at the offset when the speaker of the evening was introduced, not by someone of the Mutual office, nor yet by an exhibitor, but by the only motion picture editor of the city, Gardner Mack, of the Times. By curious coincidence Mr. Mack has had the opportunity of watching the career of Mr. Rothapfel, from the small theatre to the New York Strand, and was therefore well fitted to present him to his exhibitor associates.

Theatres Should Be Distinctive

"Individuality," said Mr. Rothapfel, "is the keynote of success. "Make your theatre and your pictures, and your music, different from the other fellow. Don't enter the exhibitor's field with the idea of competition and beating the other fellow down the street out. Spend your time attending to your own affairs, and let the other fellow attend to his.

"There are many things that make for the success of a picture or a theatre, and one of the chief things to accomplish is to have faith in yourself, and make your people have faith in you. The old theory of giving the public what it wants, and the Barnum adage of "the public wants to be fooled," are out-of-date now.

"Put your show above the public," he accentuated. "Make the public look up to you, and make the public want what you want to give them. That's the road to success. And the public is not going to be fooled, either. It is a wise public today; not the public Barnum was dealing with, and you must be wiser than your public."

Mr. Rothapfel touched upon the chief point in the presentation of the picture, of the lights, the music, the stage decorations and minor details. "I believe in lights," he reminded his hearers, "and I believe in music, and these can be combined to make wonderful effects upon your audiences. More than this, I believe in the psychological point, which can win against the greatest odds."

The speaker gave some prophecies of the film industry which interested his hearers. He predicted the death of the so-called multi-reel features, and the return to three reels of good, meaty stories, and an increased favor of the educational picture if properly presented. He predicted the open market and declared himself ready to forward this spirit.

Hope in Board of Trade

He dwelt upon the significance of the Motion Picture National Board of Trade, and of the things it had accomplished in its short life. He touched upon censorship, which he denounced emphatically, and he urged the co-operation of exhibitors and all interested in the industry and the local press in every city.

Tom Moore, the pioneer exhibitor of Washington, was called upon to make a few remarks. He said that Mr. Rothapfel had started so many new ideas working as to what he could do in his several theatres that he did not want to interrupt them. A. Brylawski, of the Brylawski chain of theatres, was also called upon to speak, as was H. C. Gove, of the Columbia Photograph Company. The meeting closed with individual discourses in a heart-to-heart fashion.

Gardner Mack, of the Times, as chairman was a moving spirit during the evening introducing speakers, suggesting topics of discussion, and creating an informality that resulted in many questions being asked and solved by this man of success.

Among those present were: B. C. Cunningham, manager of the Mutual Film Exchange; T. C. Brainard, manager of the Herald and general manager of Harper Bros.; J. F. McDonald and H. G. Bierman, of the Mutual; Geo. M. Mann, of the Paramount Exchange; Gardner Mack, photoplay and dramatic editor of the Washington Times; Ralph Graves, dramatic editor of the Washington Post; C. Plunkett, manager of the Plaza; J. Wrenn, manager of the Strand; Arthur Robb, manager of the Garden; Tom Moore, president of Moore's Enterprises; Catherine Lay Howe; J. A. Cunningham, of Baltimore; Victor Abbey, of the North American Film Corporation; A. Brylawski, of the Brylawski Enterprises; Harry Wolfe, of the Cosmos; A. B. Spellbring, manager of the Motion Picture Operators' Union; Silas Bent, special press representative of the Rothapfel-Mutual tour; J. G. Bodine, manager of the Empire; W. B. Peckham, of the Southern Railway; C. W. Michael, of the Baltimore American; G. M. McDonald, manager of the Apollo; H. H. Smith, of Baltimore; H. C. Grove, of the Columbia Phonograph Company; M. Costello, of the American; W. O. Kolb, president of the Empire Theatre Company, and A. J. Eichelberger and F. H. Smith, also officers of this company; G. C. Schulz, manager of Penn Gardens; E. B. McCurdy, of Baltimore, and Willard Howe, of Motion Picture News.

Rothapfel, at Banquet in Philadelphia, Predicts Return to Shorter Plays in Next Year or Two

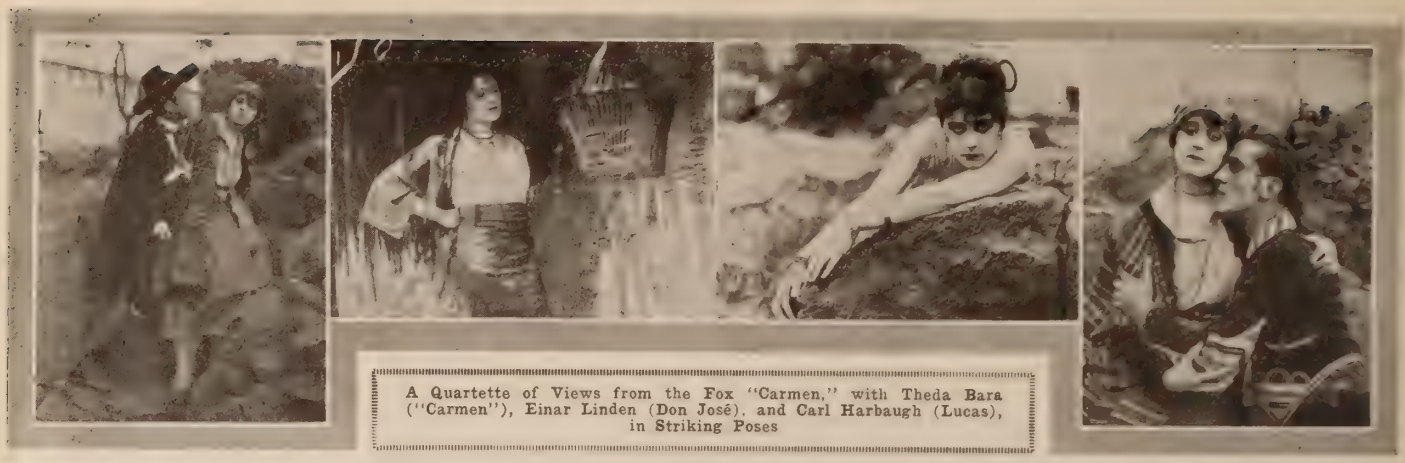
Philadelphia, Oct. 26.



THE speech of S. L. Rothapfel at the banquet engineered by the manager of the Mutual Exchange in Philadelphia, C. G. Powell, was an inspiration to every exhibitor. The short notice of the affair prevented many from attending, but those who were present were amply repaid. Mr. Rothapfel is no orator in the strict sense of the term, but he has the quality which made his heart to heart talk more interesting than the finest outburst of a trained speaker.

As man to man he told of his own experience and encouraged his audience to believe that each one of them could have, if not a Strand, at least a better and more profitable theatre than he is now running. Mr. Rothapfel prophesied a great change in the motion picture business in the next year or two.

He foresees the return of shorter photo plays as good and better than the long features so eagerly sought after at present. An open market and fair competition was strongly urged by the speaker. While giving due meed of praise to John R. Freuler, the Mutual's president, who conceived this tour, Mr. Rothapfel made it clear that his primary object in undertaking the trip was to help the exhibitor.

Ed. J. O'Keefe, of the City Square theatre, Atlantic City, acted as toastmaster. After Mr. Rothapfel had finished his talk, which brought out as his salient points the advice to the exhibitors to use their brains and to be individual, there was an informal discussion, several exhibitors being called upon for short talks.

Jay Emanuel, of the Ridge; M. A. Benn, of the A. B. C.; J. Jeffries, of the Roxborough; H. Stamper, of the Tioga, were the speakers and voiced the problems that confront the exhibitor away from the centre of the big city. Mr. Rothapfel threshed out each problem as well as the very late hour permitted, and made a definite promise that as soon as this tour was over, he would come back to Philadelphia on "his own hook" and personally visit these theatres in order to study local conditions and show how each of the houses could be made "different" and incidentally bring in a greater revenue than at present.

Owing to the eagerness to have as much of Mr. Rothapfel as possible, the proposed picture show was dispensed with.

Amongst those present at the banquet held at the Continental Hotel, were: Leroy B. Reinert, of the Cozy and Savoy theatres, Reading, Pa.; J. W. Pope, of the Continental Exchange; Herbert Givens, of Paramount; J. Battersby, of the Central Market Street Company; F. Howard, of the Tioga; J. Dougherty, of the Bijou; Silas Bent, of the Mutual publicity staff; Steve Talbott, of the Billboard; F. Armato, of the Evening Telegraph; E. Plow, of the Evening Ledger; C. L-KO APPOINTS KINGSBURY AS SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE

Henry "Pathé" Lehrman, managing director of the L-Ko Motion Picture Company, of Hollywood, Cal., who has been paying New York City an extensive visit in the interests of his Billie Ritchie L-Ko comedies, secured while here the services of Stanley C. Kingsbury to act as his special representative. Mr. Kingsbury has been identified with the film industry for some years past, first entering the business as a showman, having owned and operated one of the first picture houses in Syracuse. Later he became associated with the Warner's Features, being connected with the Buffalo office, from where he was promoted to the managership of their interests in the Dominion of Canada with offices at Toronto.

After serving for some time in that capacity he associated himself with the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., with whom he became widely known in film circles.

Upon his return to the States Mr. Kingsbury again became connected with the Warner's interests which later became the United Film Company.

When Mr. Lehrman came to New York and desired the services of a man of wide experience and extensive acquaintance in the motion picture business, he sought Mr. Kingsbury and after drawing up an agreement satisfactory to both parties, appointed him special representative of the L-Ko Motion Picture Company.

Cameraman Thompson Off to War for Paramount

Expert Photographer, Within Boundaries of All Countries at War at Various Times and Under Fire at Retreat from Mons, Leaves New York for Athens

LEAVING the port of New York on the liner St. Paul, with the statement that by the time he reaches Athens, Greece will be in the war, Donald C. Thompson, expert photographer and globe trotter, has set out for the Balkans in the interest of two organizations of utmost importance in their particular fields, the Paramount Pictures Corporation and the Leslie-Judge Company.

Since the advent of the motion picture, the "camera-reporter" has become more and more significant among the world's news gatherers. This 26-year-old Kansan was one of the first to realize the possibilities of the new branch of the industry. At the Baltimore Democratic Convention three years ago he took his first flier into the films.

The result was such that he added a motion picture camera to his photographic stock and freelanced to such good purpose that he became a charter member in the Unusual Angle Club and distinctly welcome in the offices of the editors.

A confirmed wanderer, he was in Canada at the outbreak of the war and, securing a permit from General Hughes, was able to obtain exclusive photographs of the Canadian contingent. Later he went to France on a freight ship, narrowly escaping destruction when a careless German bomb just missed the tramp steamer on which he did odd jobs for his passage, since mere money meant nothing when it came to getting inside the lines.

While with the English on the continent, Mr. Thompson took some of the most remarkable pictures of the entire war. For seven days and nights he was under steady fire at the retreat from Mons. When asked whether or not filming the battle was as dangerous as fighting he shrugged his shoulders, and said: "Yes, I suppose it is, but if you're going to be killed you will be, so why worry?"

At London he acted as correspondent for the New York World, and later joined the Belgian army. He has been at one time or another with the English, French, Belgians, Germans, Turks, Russians, Serbians and Bulgarians.

Thus he has had a unique opportunity to study the methods of the nations engaged in the war.

Since exclusive rights to the films he takes have been secured by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, Mr. Thompson will be one of the many camera-correspondents who will contribute their quota to the Paramount Newspictures.

In this connection he said: "Knowing the standard of Paramount Pictures and having been taken into the confidence of W. W. Hodkinson as to what his celluloid magazine would contain, I did not further consider other offers that I had, but immediately closed with Walter E. Greene and the Paramount Corporation."

In answer to a question as to minute details of the Newspicture plan, Mr. Greene said, when seen: "Paramount's policy has always been to do things first and talk about them afterwards—if at all. Suffice it to say that the engagement of Mr. Thompson as one of the war-correspondents—and we will have others—is only indicative of our determination to make these films worthy to be classed with other productions of the Paramount Program."

MAKING PICTURES TO MUSIC NEW ESSANAY PLAN

Music with pictures is the innovation introduced by George K. Spoor for the Essanay Company. Mr. Spoor conceived the idea of making pictures to music when Poe's "The Raven" was being produced recently.

"The Raven" is an emotional photoplay so full of big moments that the actors had no time to recover from one before they were in the midst of another. It was for this lack of interlude that music was introduced to keep them up to the pitch. An orchestra will be used at the studio from now on as a result of the success of "The Raven."

NICKOLAUS GOES TO COAST IN EXECUTIVE CAPACITY

John Nickolaus, former head of the Universal West Coast laboratory, who has been in the East for the past year, has been again sent to the West Coast, where he will hold an executive position in the photographic department.

Dailies in Newark, N. J., Adopt Favorable Policy Toward Pictures and Increase Screen Drama News Space on Demand of Public, Who Spend a Million Dollars a Year in Admissions to Photoplay Theatres, Which Form 85 Per Cent. of Amusement Places in That City

Newark, N. J., Oct. 25.

NEWSPAPERS of this city and vicinity have during the past few weeks adopted a policy favorable to the producers and exhibitors of motion pictures. The present attitude of Newark editors was not reached, however, until facts and figures were brought to their attention to support the assertion that the interest of the public in motion pictures was general and of a nature that demands recognition.

The city of Newark has fifty-six picture houses with a seating capacity ranging from 100 to 2,000. Thirty-six of them seat 15,492—an average of about 430. The other twenty are smaller and total about 10,500 seating capacity. This makes a grand total of approximately 30,000 capacity for all the motion picture theatres in Newark. These fifty-six houses show motion picture films exclusively.

In addition to these fifty-six houses are three vaudeville houses where motion pictures are a regular and important feature of the daily program. These three houses, in the aggregate, seat 5,223, or an average of 1,741 each. If this capacity be added to that of the theatres which show photoplays exclusively—and it is proper to do so—it will be seen that Newark offers an opportunity to more than 25,000 of her population to view the photoplays simultaneously.

85 Per Cent. Photoplay Theatres

As against this, Newark's three legitimate houses seat 5,900, the three vaudeville houses 5,223, and its burlesque houses 1,572. To place the situation here in concrete form where only a glance is necessary to show local conditions, the following table may be kept in mind:

Picture houses	56
Vaudeville houses	3
Legitimate houses	3
Burlesque houses	2
Houses dark at present	2

That is to say, about eighty-five per cent. of the theatres in Newark are devoted to the photoplay. But the number of houses is hardly a proper criterion, because playhouses vary so in size and seating capacity. The comparison on this basis is given below:

Picture seats	30,000
Legitimate seats	5,900
Vaudeville seats	5,223
Burlesque seats	1,572
Seats in dark theatres	3,893

In other words, of the approximately 47,000 seats provided for Newark's amusement-loving public in our sixty-six theatres about sixty per cent. are for those who desire to see photoplays.

Records show that enough people gather at the various performances of the picture houses during the course of the day to more than fill them at least once. That means more than 30,000 persons each day attend motion picture theatres in the city of Newark.

Public Pays Million a Year

The average price of admission will reach a trifle more than ten cents, making the total amount paid by the public to view photoplays in Newark every day more than $3,000. It is fair to assert that the figures reach at least $20,000 a week, or more than a million dollars a year.

The lack of interest displayed by newspapers in the screen drama situation in Newark was due entirely to a failure on the part of editors and news writers to recognize the relation of the public to the production and exhibition of motion pictures.

Splendid co-operation has followed the pleasant awakening.

"Paste-Pot and Shears," Selig Weekly Press News, Right Sort of Publicity

"PASTE-POT AND SHEARS," the Selig weekly press news, is an example of the right sort of manufacturer publicity.

In arrangement, in the kind of information it contains, and in the style in which this information is presented, the Selig publication is built along lines really serviceable to the photoplay editor.

In the first place, as will be seen from the cut on this page, the makeup is that of the newspaper itself. Head letters, used on items, and written by a practical newspaper head writer, guide the editor to the story without waste of time, besides furnishing suggestions for his own "heads." They also add to the attractiveness of the sheet. The stores themselves carry a variety of facts, and are devoid of sensationalism. In general, they give synopses and casts, as well as the strong points of coming Selig pictures; interesting incidents that happened during production; who the players are; something about the authors, and anything else that can fairly be called news in the best sense of that term.

The Selig Polyscope Company has recently been conducting a nation-wide campaign among thousands of motion picture exhibitors urging them to increase their prosperity by buying liberal space in their home newspapers to advertise Big Four features. The Selig Company has been advising exhibitors not to squander their money on small, skimpy ads, but to buy quarter, half and full page "spreads" and to buy them regularly. In a recent edition of the Selig "Paste-Pot and Shears" a page ad was printed reproducing in miniature a few ads used by Seattle exhibitors. LA FAYETTE McKEE

Presided at Pigeon Banquet Garbed in British General's Uniform.

Besides being an excellent actor La-Fayette McKee is a pigeon fancier and owner of many rare specimens as well as a large pen of utility birds. He is president of the largest pigeon club west of Chicago. Occasionally his duties to his club and to Director Santschi cause him considerable hurry. For example, while playing the General in "The Vengeance of Rannah" he went to the seashore to do some "water stuff." Time passed quickly for McKee as he realized that he was slated to preside at a pigeon club meeting in Pasadena fifty miles away. McKee finished his work at the seashore, called an auto and hurried to the meeting. There was no time for him to change his clothes and barely time to remove his make-up, consequently he presided in the uniform of a British general.

And another thing: The Selig sheet can be clipped. A good deal of publicity sent out by various manufacturers cannot be, because when the editor is cutting a story out of one page he is cutting up a story on the reverse page. This fault the Selig publication avoids. It is of four pages. On two pages news items are run. On the back of each appears a "house ad," which is to be read, but not clipped. Hence, the news pages stand by themselves.

All of which shows that the Selig people have found out the secret of publicity designed for newspaper use: Give the newspaper what it wants, and in the shape the newspaper wants it. What the newspaper wants is facts; facts served up in convenient form. This formula is so simple that every picture manufacturer ought to have discovered it long ago. Only every picture manufacturer hasn't. The Selig Polyscope Company has.

It has also been waging a campaign to get the exhibitor to advertise in the newspapers.

The success of both these progressive ideas is witnessed in the following excerpts from a letter to Motion Picture News from H. C. Hoagland, of the Selig publicity department:

"Along the lines which you are working we would submit a copy of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, of Saturday, September 4, 1915, in which a very large display ad on page 7 of that prominent newspaper appears. It read as follows: 'Exhibitors of motion pictures should use printers' ink. Two out of three successful movie managers have cultivated increased business by the judicious use of newspaper and other space. Live exhibitors have taken over playhouses which seemed "down and out." By using liberal advertising space and dependable picture-play service they have built up the "down and out" playhouses, until today they are on the broad highway to prosperity. We believe in newspaper space for the exhibitor. We believe when the exhibitor books unusual service he should so inform the public.—The Selig Polyscope Company; reproduced from Paste-Pot and Shears.

"A few weeks ago we published a page announcement in our weekly, Paste-Pot and Shears, urging exhibitors to freely advertise. Our Paste-Pot and Shears goes to the office of nearly every well regulated newspaper in America. Not only the Philadelphia Ledger, but a number of other live newspapers have reproduced our advertising.

"We have on file many unsolicited letters from newspaper men, including such newspapers as the Toronto World, etc., complimenting us on the make-up and the worth of our weekly Paste-Pot and Shears. You will notice if you will read carefully the enclosed current copy, that the articles are not long; that they are attractively written; that they are truthful, and that they are newsy. We also call your attention to the column of original editorial paragraphs, which are used as filler in picture pages, not only in newspapers, but in many first class magazines."

Kalem-Hornung "Stingaree" Ready on November 24

"An Enemy of Mankind" Is First Episode of Series, Released in Two-Reel Instalments, and Is a Prologue, not Written by English Author

"STINGAREE," considered by many to be the best work of E. W. Hornung, has been purchased by Kalem at a cost of $10,000, and the first episode of the series, "An Enemy of Mankind," will be released on Wednesday, November 24. Each episode is complete in two reels, and deals with the central character of Stingaree, a highwayman of the Australian bush, who has foresworn civilization and determines to prey on society.

"An Enemy of Mankind" is in the nature of a prologue, and while dealing with Mr. Hornung's famous character was not written by the English author.

The production was made by the Western Kalem Company at Glendale, California, under the direction of James W. Horne. True Boardman, who has already distinguished himself before the camera because of his fearlessness, was entrusted with the part of Stingaree, and according to advance reports has added to his reputation as a clever actor. Because of his expert horsemanship and crack rifle shooting he was peculiarly adapted to the part.

With the release of the first episode arrangements have been made by the Kalem Company for the publication of the story in several hundred newspapers in all sections of the United States and Canada, the fiction rights having been secured from Charles Scribner's Sons.

Stingaree is first met as an English gentleman of leisure. Through a rapidly moving combination of circumstances he becomes an object of hatred to his young brother. Time after time he attempts to save the youth from himself but is finally made to bear the brunt of a scandal involving the name of a married woman.

Accidentally Stingaree., who is then known as Irving Randolph, his right name, shoots the husband during target practice and to save the family name as well as to avoid arrest on a charge of murder he flees to Australia.

Embittered by the failure of his family to believe in him, and the fact that his engagement has been broken, Irving resolves to be revenged on society for his wrongs. He adopts the name of Stingaree and by his daring hold-ups and fearlessness soon becomes noted throughout the country.

But through it all he maintains a peculiar code of morals, always inflicting punishment where he believes it due, and taking to himself the task of being judge and jury in meting out the penalty. While each episode is complete in itself there is a strong love interest developed that is maintained throughout the series.

The production of the series marks a departure in the field of motion pictures and serves to introduce a character who it is confidently believed will rival the fame he secured in fiction.

Work on "Bella Donna," Checked by Fire, Resumed

Porter and Ford, Until This Week Busy Replacing Lost Scenes of "White Pearl," Now at Liberty to Take Up Pauline Frederick Picture Again

WORK on the picturization of Robert Hichens' "Bella Donna," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred by the Famous Players Film Company, has been resumed under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

The progress of the adaptation of this dramatic and literary success was cut short by the disastrous fire which destroyed the Twenty-sixth street stuido of the concern on September 11.

It was not until this week that the work could be again taken in hand as both directors were engrossed in the replacing of some of the lost scenes in "The White Pearl," which they had completed, with Marie Doro as the star, two weeks before the outbreak of the fire.

Pauline Frederick, Thomas Holding, Julian L'Estrange and several other well-known stage favorites were sent to St. Augustine, Fla., under the guidance of Messrs. Porter and Ford, for the purpose of obtaining the scenes in the desert which form such an important part of the story.

The players had returned to New York with these scenes just two days before the fire and it was feared for several days that this portion of the film, which had been placed in the film vault, was destroyed. The opening of the vault disclosed the fact that the views had been entirely saved from the flames. Now, after a month's delay, the work is being taken up again.

Judges Condemn Censorship at Ohio Convention

Manuel Levine, of Common Pleas, in Talk on "Freedom of the Photoplay" at Cleveland Meeting Regards Picture Suppression in Same Class with Attempts to Stifle the Press and Curb Free Speech, While His Colleague Samuel Kramer Looks to Court Decision for Solution of Censor Question

Cleveland, Oct. 25.

DECIDED action was taken on the question of censorship at the annual meeting of the Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which was just closed at the Hollenden. Public officials and jurists condemned censorship in no uncertain language. The resolution adopted on the censorship question was as follows:

"Resolved, that we are unalterably opposed to motion picture censorship in all and any of its varied forms, knowing from actual experience that the judgment of our patrons, supported by the existing penal laws of Ohio, is all sufficient to meet the so-called evils complained of by the advocates of censorship."

Common Pleas Judge Manuel Levine talked on "The Freedom of the Photoplay" at the banquet that closed the meeting. Judge Levine said that he was opposed to censorship, due to the belief that the law should punish individual offenders and not place guardians over the law-abiding motion picture exhibitors. "There is no more reason for censoring motion pictures than there is for censoring the press or curbing free speech," declared Judge Levine.

This was regarded by the exhibitors as a slap at the censors who are trying to stifle free speech, as flashed on the screen. The case of Samuel Bullock, Cleveland motion picture exhibitor, arrested at the request of the state censors for showing the extract from the Herrington address at the West End Business Men's picnic at Puritan Springs the past summer, was talked over freely and unofficially by the delegates. The outcome of this case is being watched with great interest all over the state, as it will set a precedent on a much-discussed question.

Judge Samuel Kramer declared that, in his opinion, a court decision will be necessary to settle the censorship question, as there are many angles to the case that need elucidation.

Censorship Un-American, Says Benesch

Director of Public Safety A. A. Benesch condemned censorship, saying that it was un-American. He believes that local authorities, not those of the state located at Columbus who are unfamiliar with local conditions and wants of picture theatre patrons, should settle questions that arise regarding pictures. Other speakers were C. E. Baxter, of the city building department; John J. Sullivan, former United States district attorney; Police Prosecutor Silbert, Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Pittsburgh, and M. A. Miller, of New York, who said that censors were needed to censor the censors.

Cleveland delegates, keeping their promise that they would not try to dominate the new organization, which voted unanimously to affiliate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, declined to make any nomination for president or vice-president. The officers are:

President, Lamotte Smith, Alliance; vice-president, Frank Beverstock, Mansfield; secretary, W. H. Horsey, Cleveland; treasurer, Louis H. Becht, Cleveland; national vice-president, representing Ohio, Frank Kenney, Cleveland.

Max Stern, East Liverpool; J. H. Clark, Ashland; and A. A. McGown, Cleveland, were elected members of an executive committee that will serve in conjunction with the officers selected.

Want Curfew for Children

One of the most important question settled was the decision to enforce a curfew for children, which will curtail the practice of children coming in when the doors open for the first evening performance and remaining until the "Good Night" is flashed on the screen. The curfew will not be the usual bell-ringing stunt, but this announcement will be put on the screen each night at 8:45: "It is time that all good children were off home and to bed." At 9 o'clock the attendants will see to it that all juveniles unaccompanied by parents are out of the theatre. No tickets will be sold to children after 7:30 p. m. This plan received the indorsement of Juvenile Judge Addams, who has been striving to end complaints about children being around the theatres at all hours.

It is expected that it will also meet with the approval of teachers in the public schools who have charged on numerous occasions that the motion picture theatres are responsible for sleepy children who come to school dull-eyed and listless after a long sojourn at the shows. The motion picture managers have tried on various occasions to devise some system, but no concerted action was taken until the question was presented at the convention.

Another resolution adopted was one favoring the formation of an auxiliary organization to embrace representatives of all industries allied with the motion picture business. It was recognized that all have interests in common and that all should be affiliated for their common good.

State Headquarters in Cleveland

Headquarters of the state organization will be established in Cleveland, as the delegates regard Cleveland as the mainspring of the motion picture industry in Ohio. This city also will be the center of the fight on the censorship question. Chairman Williams, of the state board, is aware of this fact, for he has been spending considerable time in Cleveland of late.

A merry fight was staged for the next convention, with about half a dozen cities in the race. When the smoke of the battle cleared, it was found that Canton had won the coveted honor.

An elaborate entertainment program was provided for the delegates, who were taken on auto rides about the city, visiting the National Carbon Company's works, lithograph plants, film exchanges and "taking in" new photoplays.

Nance O'Neil Signs with Lubin for Feature Series

Scenario Staff Will Submit for Consideration of Star Original Five-Reel Scripts and a Special Company Will Be Selected for Her Support

THROUGH the earnest efforts of Messrs. Singhi and Lowry of the Lubin company, Nance O'Neil, the American emotional actress, has been persuaded to abandon her contemplated theatrical tour, and has signed a contract with the Lubin company for her appearance in a series of feature pictures to be released through the V-L-S-E offices.

The vehicles in which Miss O'Neil will make her appearance under the Lubin banner have not as yet been definitely decided upon, and before making a decision there will be a careful consideration of the stock of motion picture rights at hand in the scenario department.

In addition, each of the following writers of the Lubin staff, Anthony P. Kelly, Louis Reeves Harrison, Mark Swan, Daniel Ellis, Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman and George Hennessy will submit an original five real script, consideration of which will be given seriously along with the possible adaptation of stage successes. Miss O'Neil will be consulted, and her choice will receive the recognition.

Edgar Lewis, now in Gallup, N. M., whither he has gone from the Grand Canyon of Arizona to complete filming of "The Great Divide," will begin work on the new feature with Miss O'Neil, immediately uopn completion of his present picture, on his arrival in Philadelphia.

In support of Miss O'Neil there will be engaged a special company of stars, which it is the intent of the Lubin company to hold intact as far as possible through the entire series of pictures featuring Miss O'Neil.

GLIMPSES OF A FEW NOTABLE SCENES IN FAMOUS PLAYERS' ADAPTATION OF "MADAME BUTTERFLY"

THIS SCREEN VERSION OF JOHN LUTHER LONG'S CLASSIC, STARRING MARY PICKFORD, WILL BE RELEASED NOV. 8 THROUGH PARAMOUNT

"SIDNEY DREW DAY" ESTABLISHED IN POPULAR FAVOR

"Sidney Drew Day," inaugurated by the Vitagraph company that exhibitors may know definitely when to expect a release in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are featured, has become an established institution with theatre managers and motion picture fans all over the country. This talented pair are the two busiest players of the Vitagraph Stock Company, as the arrangement calls for a comedy release every Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Drew not only enact the principal characters, but Mr. Drew directs all the picture stories, while his wife is responsible for the majority of the picturizations. Commencing Friday, November 1, the releases for the month will include four of the most comprehensive comedies to which he has attached his name, including "Beautiful Thoughts," "Romantic Reggie," "Diplomatic Henry" and "All for the Love of a Girl," which will be given to the public each succeeding Friday, in the order named.

"BLOOM CENTER" DIRECTOR A FIRM BELIEVER IN REALISM

Sidney Smith, who is now directing "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," the Selig rural comedy series which critics assert is sure to set a new style in screen comedy, is a firm believer in realism and taboos the "dummy" on all occasions.

In a recent number of the comedy series the scenario called for a drop of the hero off a telephone pole. Smith decided to take the drop himself. He did—and he landed in a box of mortar loaded on a passing cart.

BROADWELL JOINS HORSLEY FORCES AS DIRECTOR

The latest director to join David Horsley's forces at the Los Angeles studios is R. B. Broadwell, who has staged many productions for different organizations on the coast.

He is now engaged in putting on "Could a Man Do More?" a three-reel Centaur star feature, with Crane Wilbur, which will be released on the Mutual program Nov. 24.

Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly" for Famous

Long Wrote It 20 Years Ago, Belasco Produced Play with Blanche Bates, Puccini Turned It Into Opera in 1904 and Savage Presented It Here Two Years Later

"MADAME BUTTERFLY," by John Luther Long, is at last to be given to the motion picture public with Mary Pickford in the role of Cho-Cho-San, by the Famous Players Film Company, on November 8.

"Madame Butterfly" was written about twenty years ago. David Belasco produced it with Blanche Bates in the leading role, in which she scored one of the greatest successes of her career. In 1904, Puccini, the Italian composer, wove about it one of the most exquisite musical settings that has ever been heard on any operatic stage. Two years later the opera was introduced into this country by Henry W. Savage, and it has ever since been one of the most popular offerings of the musical world.

Now it is to be immortalized upon the screen as a Paramount picture.

The appealing story develops as follows: Lieutenant Pinkerton, U. S. N., while stationed in Japan, marries Cho-Cho-San, whom he affectionately calls "Madame Butterfly." Pinkerton sails away, promising to return when the robins nest again. In time there comes a little babe to gladden the heart of Cho-Cho-San, who still believes that her lover is faithful. The dreary months drag on and finally there comes word that Pinkerton is returning.

The American Consul, learning that Pinkerton has married his American sweetheart and is bringing her to Japan, goes to Cho-Cho-San's home to tell her the truth. When he arrives, he finds the faithful little wife keeping vigil and preparing the house for the coming of her lord and master.

Touched by the supreme happiness of Cho-Cho-San, the Consul has not the heart to acquaint her with the truth, and departs without delivering his message. But the blow which the kindly Consul sought to ward off is merely made the more bitter for the little wife, for Pinkerton arrives accompanied by the American wife.

Stunned by the shock, little Cho-Cho-San staggers to the wall where her groping hand finds the sword of her father. As she is about to plunge it into her aching heart, the little baby crawls across the floor to her. Lest the child witness the terrible fate of the mother, Cho-Cho-San blindfolds its eyes. Then she disappears behind the tall screen and emerges with the triumph of death in her eyes. As she stumbles and falls, Pinkerton enters and catches her where she dies, happy in the thought of resting in her lover's arms.

For the settings of this pathetic tale, Sid Olcott, under whose direction it is being produced, obtained the exclusive use of the most beautiful Japanese gardens in the United States. That no detail of costume or native usage might be overlooked, one of the most dependable authorities on Japanese matters—a member of the New York Nipponese colony—was especially engaged to superintend the buying of costumes and the acquisition of all properties used.

Cho-Cho-San is by far the most exacting role that Miss Pickford has ever been called upon to enact, not only because of the suppressed emotionalism which such a part absolutely demands, but because this character has already been enshrined in the hearts of the public by some of the foremost artistes of the stage.

In support of the star, there appears Marshal Neilan in the role of Lieutenant Pinkerton, the faithless lover. Mr. Neilan is already familiar to the motion picture public by reason of his excellent work in leading roles. Others who appear in the cast are W. T. Carleton, Olive West, Jane Hall, and Lawrence Wood.

"Crimson Wing," Essanay, an Extra, Now Ready

Picture Will Be Released Shortly on V-L-S-E Program as a Special Without Interference with Regular Schedule of One Feature Every Four Weeks

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces the release of an extra six-part feature photoplay on the V-L-S-E program. It has been completed some time and is now ready for booking. It comes in as a "special," the regular plays of one each four weeks being released as usual.

The extra is "The Crimson Wing," dramatized from the widely-known novel of that title, by Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, Chicago and Washington society leader and litterateur. It is a strong drama of war and romance, and the scenes are laid on present battle line between Germany and France.

While it portrays with striking vividness the terrors and heroism of war, it is strictly neutral, taking sides with no faction. It ends with a touching love scene, uniting a man and woman of opposing nations. The drama is presented in a manner that not only gives offense to none, but makes the heart go out in sympathy to all the battling nations and yearn for a permanent peace.

Exceptional interest is attached to the photoplay because of society leaders, national and world characters, who take part in it. Garden and villa scenes were taken on the grounds and in the homes of Chicago's wealthiest citizens, including Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, the author, Harold and Cyrus McCormick, Orville Babcock, Edward S. Moore, James Ward Thorne, Scott Durand and Howard Shaw. The majority of these persons, with their wives and families appear in the play.

Mr. Moore, vice-president of the Rock Island Railroad, takes the part of a chauffeur in one scene. He is dressed in army uniform and drives his own $14,000 car. Wallace Rice, author and playwright, also takes a part in the play.

Several hundred feet of film were taken in France on the border line of Germany, showing the French army in maneuvers and commanded by General Joffre, the head of the French army.

The photoplay is directed by E. H. Calvert, a West Point man, who has seen fourteen years of service in the U. S. army. Capt. Calvert also takes the leading role with Ruth Stonehouse.

The story itself is replete with dramatic situations, human interest details of love, intrigue and war, and the settings so gorgeous that it lends itself peculiarly to photographic art. The battle scenes, while spectacular, are small enough so that detailed action is noted.

Mr. Chatfield-Taylor, who is thoroughly familiar with the historic European battleground, was present throughout and assisted Capt. Calvert in its direction.

North American Offers $10,000 for New "Diamond"

Company Wants Sequel with Solutions to the Queries "What Becomes of the Diamond, the Child, and What Happens to Blair Stanley and Vivian Marston?"

"THE Diamond from the Sky" is drawing to its first run close. On November 22 will be released the thirtieth and final chapter of Roy L. McCardell's picturized novel.

There were twelve miles of negative alone, from which prints were made, totaling 6,000,000 feet or 1,000 miles of positive stock. It would take the fastest railroad train in the world twenty hours to travel from one end to the other of this film, if laid out on a track. And if so stretched out, Mayor Thompson could hold one end in the Chicago city hall and Mayor Mitchel the other end in New York.

The posters used to advertise the big picture up to date, if placed side by side, would extend across the country for 5,250,000 feet, or approximately 1,000 miles, and circulars and lobby displays, if similarly placed, would extend another 500 miles.

The bookings of "The Diamond from the Sky" have reached more than $1,000,000, and new bookings in smaller cities where exhibitors are just beginning the big picture with chapter one, are coming into the executive offices.

With the showing of the final chapter, motion picture fans throughout the country will have opportunity to gain a prize of $10,000. This is the fortune offered by the North American Film Corporation to anyone who develops the best and most practicable suggestion for a sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky." In writing this suggestion, which should be limited to 1,000 words, it will be unnecessary to display any style or literary genius. The judges will consider only the idea.

However, these important questions should be given careful thought by the aspirants to fame and the offered fortune: What becomes of the diamond? What becomes of the child? What is the fate of Blair Stanley? What happens to Vivian Marston?

These questions must be answered to the satisfaction of the pudges who will award the $10,000.

Later a date will be announced when this sequel will be produced.

YACHT DYNAMITED IN TAKING OF "EMPTY HOTEL"

A steam yacht was dynamited in Princess Bay, off Staten Island, Thursday, October 14, by the Vitagraph Company in the taking of its feature film, "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel."

The yacht was the Wayward, one hundred feet in length, the winner of two races to Bermuda several years ago.

ONE OF THE PICTURESQUE SEVILLE STREET SCENES IN THE FOX "CARMEN"

GRACE ELLISTON, STAGE STAR, FOR SCREEN DEBUT WITH ROLFE-METRO

Grace Elliston, one of the foremost actresses in the country, who achieved a triumph in "The Lion and the Mouse," will make her bow on the screen in a big five-part feature picture now in production at the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., studio for release on the Metro program. The Elliston picture is yet unnamed.

Miss Elliston was born in West Virginia and made her first appearance on the stage in 1899 at the Lyceum theatre, New York She received her early training under the personal direction of Charles and Daniel Frohman, and was afterward the leading woman for Richard Mansfield, Nat Goodwin, Henry Miller and other big stars. Most of her time was spent in Broadway productions, but her long run in "The Lion and the Mouse" brought her fame throughout the country, and carried her to nearly every State in the Union.

As Kathie in "Old Heidelberg," in which Mr. Mansfield starred, Miss Elliston scored heavily. She proved her versatility by a delightful interpretation of Olivia in an all-star cast of "Twelfth Night," Her clever work with Henry Miller in "The Taming of Helen" is well remembered by playgoers. During the season of 1913 Miss Elliston caused blasé New York to "sit up and take notice" with the daring character, Molly, in "Ourselves," a startling human document.

Edward Brennan will be featured with Miss Elliston in her debut on the screen.

Mrs. Wilson Woodrow Will Write Next Pathé Series

Cousin of President Wilson, Who Gathered Literary Material in Western Mining Camps and Contributed to "McClure's," "Hearst's" and "Life," Collaborates on Belasco Play

PATHÉ has secured the services of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow to write the stories of the next Pathé series. The widely recognized talents of Mrs. Woodrow assure the literary excellence of the stories and the value of the pictures from the story standpoint.

Mrs. Woodrow has been so much in the public eye that a brief account of her life and activities should be of interest. Of distinguished colonial ancestry she has also the distinction of being the cousin of the President by marriage, her husband being Mr. Wilson's first cousin. She was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, her ancestors having been among the original settlers of that place.

Her great grandfather was appointed comptroller of public moneys by George Washington, and Samuel Finley, second president of Princeton College, was her great grand uncle. After the death of her father, who was a doctor, her mother bought a newspaper, and it was through that newspaper that the later Mrs. Woodrow became a writer.

After her marriage, with her husband who was a mining, civil and bridge engineer, she lived in the remote mining camps of Colorado and Arizona, obtaining there much literary material of which she made later use. Her first story was of a woman in the mining camps, and it had the unusual experience of being received by McClure's on a Friday, being accepted the next day, and the check in payment for it being in the author's hands the following Monday.

The story was responsible for her being requested to write a series for McClure's, which series ran for three years. For five or six years Mrs. Woodrow enjoyed the distinction of being the only woman featured among the contributors of Life. Recently she has been a steady contributor to Hearst's Magazine.

Of late Mrs. Woodrow has been collaborating on plays

New Essanay Studio Used by Brabin for "Raven"

Outdoor Stage, 200 by 200 Feet, Just Completed After Two Weeks' Rush Work, Is Capable of Holding Several Different Sets at a Time

"THE great increase in the output of Essanay photoplays and the extra studio space needed to produce its multiple reel features, resulted in the building of a new open-air studio, 200 x 200 feet, just completed. It was first used by Director Charles J. Brabin in filming "The Raven," taken from Poe's life and his poem of the same title, scenario by George C. Hazelton and featuring Henry B. Walthall.

In the last three or four months the Essanay company has been forced to augment the staff of directors to meet the output demand for multiple-reel features and the photoplays that are being released through the regular channels.

While work on the new two-story indoor studio is being rushed and it will be completed some time this winter, there was an immediate demand for extra floor space, so the outdoor studio was constructed. The indoor studio will be 350 x 175 feet, and the offices of the company will be on the second floor.

It took two weeks to erect the outdoor studio, which has a polished floor and joists of hickory supporting heavy tarpaulin curtains which can be manipulated to regulate the lighting. While it has been erected under the pressure of increased business, it will be used permanently, even when the new studio is completed, for interior sets that may demand the peculiar quality of film that can be obtained only by sunlight pictures.

The outdoor studio is capable of holding several different sets, allowing many directors to work at the same time.

Pallas Signs W. D. Taylor, Veteran Actor, as Director

He Filled Important Engagements with Charles Hawtrey, Sol Smith Russell, Katherine Kidder and Played Leads with and Acted as Personal Manager of Fanny Davenport

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR, whose "Captain Alvarez" was one of the biggest film hits ever scored on Broadway, and who before that filled important engagements with Charles Hawtrey, Fanny Davenport, Sol Smith Russell, Katherine Kidder and others, has been engaged as a director by Pallas Pictures.

The new Pallas Picture director was born in Ireland and was educated at Clifton College in England. His ambition was to go into the army, but he was barred on the eyesight tests. He traveled through Germany and France, studying languages, and finally came to America, visiting some of the most famous gold fields of recent years, as prospector and miner, all the way from Telluride, Colo., to Dawson, Alaska, and ranched for a time in southern Kansas.

Taylor played with Charles Hawtrey in "The Private Secretary," and played leads and acted as personal manager for Fanny Davenport, the greatest "Cleopatra" of her time. He was with Sol Smith Russell for several seasons, and at a moment's notice took Jack Gilmore's place in the Castle Square stock company, in Boston, when that actor broke his shoulderblade. His last stage engagement was with Harry Corson Clarke, in Honolulu.

Following his New York sensation in the title role of Captain Alvarez, he went to the Pacific Coast and launched out into the directing end where he established himself successfully.

Friendly Host Left in Wake of Paramount Girl

Admirers at All Points Along Trans-Continental Route to Get Slide Message of Remembrance on Screens of Theatres Showing Pictures of the Company

"THE car with a thousand names," said Anita King, the Paramount Girl, in response to a question as to the whereabouts of the "Coast-to-Coast Submarine" in which she came through rain and mud across the Continent alone, "is now reposing in the lobby of the Broadway theatre."

A glance from the window of Miss King's suite at the Hotel Knickerbocker was all that was necessary to prove the truth of her statement—if proof were necessary. Traffic on Broadway was stopped. Crowds blocked the streets and sidewalk, packing into the theatre lobby to read the inscriptions on the car and on the loving cup presented to her by the Kissel Kar Company, and to see the newspaper clippings framed at one side and the photographs of the little traveler at the other.

"Those are very precious to me," Miss King went on, referring to thousands of names plastered on the car, "since each represents one of the million friends I've made in the cities along the way. Everywhere I've been treated royally and I'm proud to be the Paramount Girl, for despite many disagreeable experiences it was a wonderful trip and I always have my own picture to look forward to. In the wind and rain through which I've come many of the names have either washed off entirely or become so indistinct as to be undecipherable. For that reason I'm now writing this letter to the kind exhibitors at whose Paramount theatres I have stopped."

She turned to the little desk and, signing her name to the letter which she was writing when interrupted, she smiled and handed it to the interivewer.

"Dear Friends," it said. "That I can never thank you for your courtesy and consideration during my all too brief stay in your city, goes without saying. Now that my trip is over and I have done what I started out to do, I can look about me and think of the many promises I made to your patrons, and in many cases to members of your family, of photographs and such like tokens of appreciation.

"There have been such a surprising number of these personal requests that I can't remember them all. But I don't want a single one disappointed. Won't you throw a slide on your screen and tell them that I have safely arrived and that I want to write to them and hear from them. Say that if they send their names and addresses to the Paramount Pictures Corporation, 110 West Fortieth street, New York, I will get them and be glad to keep my promise.

"Tell them that I'll soon be at work on the picture in which the Lasky company is to star me at Paramount theatres, and that when they see me on the screen, though I won't be there to tell them so, I'll remember them just the same.

"With kind recollections of a happy time with you and sincere wishes for your continued success with the program which, I know, aims high and hits the mark, I am,

"Cordially yours,

"ANITA KING,

"The Paramount Girl."

"Now, that's done," she said, and smiled again. When Anita King smiles the world seems brighter. "I'm very tired," she continued, "and I don't seem able to rest up. In my sleep I see the road before me, feel the throb of the engine and hear the screech of that terrifically loud horn which stood me in such good stead in the mountains. Sometime I guess I'll get over it, but now I'm awfully homesick for California.

"When the orchestra played 'California and You' the other night just before I spoke, it suddenly came over me how long I've been away, and I'm dying to get back to the studio. The life there is different from anywhere else in the world."

Later at the Grand Central Station as she was about to step on the train which would take her back home she said: "If I've gone through any hardship—and now I think I have, though things have a way of looking big when you're near them—it's been for Paramount."

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City

THE EXHIBITOR AND THE NEWSPAPER: AN OBJECT LESSON FROM SEATTLE

THIS page reproduces part of a ten-foot wide poster compiled by Tom North, manager of the Seattle office of the V-L-S-E, showing a few days' newspaper advertising placed by exhibitors of that city to announce Big Four features.

Three theatres, as will be noted from the illustrations, use quarter pages, half pages and full pages, with the result that from a few, small inconspicuous houses that alone existed two years ago, there have grown some of the finest motion picture theatres in the country.

These theatres are reported to spend $60,000 a year in newspaper publicity.

Seattle has a population of 300,000. Approximately 300,000 tickets are sold there for feature photoplays every week at prices ranging from 10 cents to 40 cents.

There is a vital connection between the $60,000 expended with the newspapers and the 300,000 tickets sold to picture-goers. Seattle exhibitors have learned what that connection is—have learned that newspaper advertising is one of the strongest links between theatre and patron.

When exhibitors in every town in America learn this same lesson, the business of the motion picture industry will be greatly multiplied.

But there is another striking fact brought out by the poster. All these advertisements appeared in one newspaper—The Seattle Times. The Times is to Seattle exhibitors what the Evening Ledger and Evening Telegraph are to Philadelphia exhibitors, and the Daily News to Chicago picture men.

That is to say, The Times put the handling of picture publicity on the right basis. It printed news of the screen first, recognizing that its readers had a right to have news about an industry and a form of entertainment that interested them so much. Then The Times got plenty of advertising from Seattle exhibitors, because Seattle exhibitors wanted to advertise in a newspaper that understood and valued the claim of the motion picture on the public and the wonderful response of the public to that claim.

Today The Times realizes $5,000 a month from its picture theatre advertisements alone.

What The Times has done, other newspapers can do, according to their opportunities. And what Seattle exhibitors can do, exhibitors the country over can do, in greater or less degree.

Exhibitors in several cities have already gone to their newspapers, and put before them the whole question of the newspaper's relation to motion pictures. In most instances, the papers have responded without hesitation, as already told by MOTION PICTURE NEWS in its department, "The Press, the Press Representative, and the Picture."

The movement for co-operation between exhibitor and newspaper ought to become nation-wide.

TIES UP HIS ADVERTISING TO PARAMOUNT CAMPAIGN

W. C. Quimby, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., advertises largely in conjunction with the Paramount national campaign, using the cuts furnished by the corporation to its exhibitors. The space costs him $1 an inch, yet Mr. Quimby has used as much as one-half a page at a time to exploit the merit of Paramount Pictures.

He has popularized the name to such an extent that a cleaning and dyeing establishment recently opened under the name of "The Paramount Cleaning Company," and a soda fountain has begun dispensing "Paramount Sundaes."

DISPLAYS TINTED "STILLS" OF FOX PICTURES

Mrs. Joseph Grossman, wife of the manager of the Standard theatre, Prospect avenue and East Eighth street, Cleveland, has received many compliments for the handsomely tinted scenes of current attractions which are given prominent display in the lobby of the theatre.

Mrs. Grossman's hobby is painting and tinting. She takes the ordinary black and white "stills" furnished by the Fox Film Corporation and tints them in natural colors.

"JITNEY SHOWER" DRAWS CROWDS AT LOUISVILLE

A live wire stunt used to advantage at the Gayety theatre, Louisville, a few days ago was a "jitney shower," which drew a large gathering of the fair sex. Each woman attending the afternoon show was presented with a five cent piece and this proved a popular innovation. This theatre is to have a ragtime piano playing contest open to all comers. Cash prizes will be awarded.

PROGRESSIVE ADVERTISING BY EXHIBITORS IN A PROGRESSIVE NEWSPAPER—THE SEATTLE TIMES

REPRODUCTION OF PART OF A POSTER COMPILED BY THE SEATTLE V-L-S-E OFFICE

NEW MOTION PICTURE DEPARTMENTS IN NEWSPAPERS

In order that exhibitors may know how their feilow exhibitors throughout the country are faring at the hands of the newspapers, MOTION PICTURE NEWS will print from time to time in this column the names of papers which establish motion picture departments.

We invite exhibitors and newspapers to help us make this list as complete as possible.

As a direct result of the campaign instituted by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, The World-Herald, Omaha, is devoting page space to picture news and advertisements. The issue of Oct. 17 gave two whole pages to motion pictures alone. A detailed analysis of The World-Herald's department will appear in MOTION PICTURE NEWS next week.

The Decatur Herald, Decatur, Ill., has recently begun giving a page of its Sunday edition to picture news. The Herald is the first Decatur paper to take this forward step.

CANDLES IN SHOW WINDOW AND LOBBY ADVERTISE FEATURE

When the V-L-S-E feature, "The House of a Thousand Candles," was shown at the Orpheum theatre, Franklin, Pa., the exhibitor engaged a show window, which he filled completely with candles of all sizes—some in candlesticks, some unsupported and others carelessly thrown around.

At night those in the holders were lighted and made an unusual contrast to other electrically lighted windows in the vicinity. A small card bearing the name of the theatre where the feature was engaged, satisfied the curiosity of the large number of people attracted by the display.

This same exhibitor used hundreds of candles to illuminate his lobby and his box office each night while showing this feature. The effect of the soft, mellow light was quite unusual, and attracted capacity business.

SHIP-DRAWING CONTEST EXPLOITS PATHE SERIAL

A novel business building contest used by the Olympic theatre, of Louisville, Ky., as part of an advertising campaign to exploit the Pathé serial, "Neal of the Navy," has been reported by Manager C. E. Holah, of the Cincinnati Pathé exchange. Patrons of the theatre were asked to take part in a ship-drawing contest. To the one who drew the best pen-and-ink or lead pencil sketch of a U. S. battleship, the management of the theatre offered $10 in cash. The second prize was $2 and the third $1. Conditions of the contest were that the drawings must be turned in not later than Sunday of the picture's run.

Prizes were awarded at the matinee of the same day. Prominent merchants of Louisville were the judges.

DALLAS FAIR ADVERTISED BY FILM FEATURING CONTEST WINNER

As the result of a beauty contest conducted by the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, 20,000 votes were cast by picture patrons for Mildred Milliken as the most beautiful woman in that city. Miss Milliken is featured in a moving picture now being used to advertise the State Fair at Dallas. Ben B. Lewis, manager of the Old Mill, supervised the production, which was directed by Talbot O. Bateman, Sunday editor of The Dallas "News."

The film is entitled "The Spirit of the Fair." Double exposures were required to show Miss Milliken, as a spirit, hovering over and gliding through the exposition buildings.

RIDER LEADS NEW HAVEN CROWDS TO "MAN TRAIL"

A man in the uniform of a cavalryman was the object of curious glances as he rode down Chapel street, in New Haven, Conn. People followed him and stared, then laughed and started in one general direction—toward the Bijou theatre.

What had most attracted their attention was a white banner, hung across either flank of the horse, and announcing in large, red letters that the rider was "following 'The Man Trail' to the Bijou."

In front of the theatre there is an electric clock, giving at all hours the correct time and having printed above "Just in time for the show." The legend is changed each week. Below are painted clocks, with movable hands, and under each is printed the hour at which the first, second and third-picture programs, and the first, second and third vaudeville shows commence.

INTRODUCES NOVEL PRELUDE TO TOPICAL REVIEW

Manager Bossner, of the Park theatre, Boston, has introduced a novel prelude to the Park Topical Review. A witch rides across the sky and scatters the stars, then striking the moon out of the picture with her broom. Then she summons other stars, which form a big one, and then dissolve into the words "Park Topical Review."

That this novelty is worth while is proved by the applause from every audience.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

OPTIMISTIC REPORTS OF BUSINESS CONDITIONS FROM ALL BOSTON EXCHANGES

MANAGER MARSAN, of the Kleine-Edison office on Piedmont street, Boston, reports that business is big. The Kleine-Edison pictures are meeting with an increased demand throughout New England, and it has been necessary for Mr. Marson to add another road man to his force. The new man is Jerome H. Sobel, formerly of the World and the Big Four in New York. He will represent the Kleine-Edison office through Maine. The Boston theatre has begun to use Kleine-Edison features, taking on recently "The Magic Skin." The Bijou at Springfield has also recently taken first run features from the Kleine-Edison service.

There's a new man at the helm in the World office in Boston, or rather a man who has been on the job before, is back again. Frank H. Vine, who resigned as manager of the World exchange earlier this year to conduct the Olympia Film Company, has now left that company and returned to the World as manager, in place of Stanley W. Hand, who has been promoted to the New York office. Mr. Hand came to Boston as a World salesman last Spring, and in July he was made manager. He went to New York last Friday.

The World office gives the same optimistic reports of business conditions in the Boston territory as mark the enthusiasm of other exchanges. Lewis J. Selznick himself and George J. Schaeffer, eastern division manager, visited Boston recently.

There have been several additions to the force of World salesmen. W. H. Fulwood, who has been publicity man working from the Boston office, has gone on the road, covering the larger cities in Massachusetts, S. J. Brodie, formerly of the Frohman exchange in Boston, is about to start on a trip through Maine for the World. L. H. Raymond has been added to the force, covering places down toward Cape Cod, and J. O'Brien, formerly with the Mutual, is now selling World film.

The Boston office has just installed a new Powers 6-A projection machine, which will make the run-offs Wednesdays and Fridays more pleasing to the exhibitors. Manager Vine is planning to leave October 31 to attend the convention of World managers at Chicago.

The New England Fox Exchange continues to boom along with remarkable business. The NEWS man dropped in the other day just as Manager Campbell had received new contracts for Fox service in the Princess theatre at Marlboro, Empire at St. Albans, Vt., Davis at Norwich, Harvard at North Cambridge, New Majestic at Rumford, Me., Palace at Fall River, Orpheum and City in Brockton; second run at the Bijou, Springfield, Bijou in Skowhegan, Me., Empire in Lewiston, and Princess in Berlin, N. H., and Empire in North Adams.

Mr. Campbell is about ready to take on more office help. He has just remodeled his paper room.

BUSINESS ON UPWARD TREND IN PHILADELPHIA DISTRICT

J. W. Pope, manager of the Continental Film Corporation, has been in Harrisburg for a few days on business connected with the Mutual Masterpictures, which are handled by the Continental in Philadelphia and by the Mutual Service offices in Harrisburg.

Mr. Pope, like all the Quaker City managers, finds business on the upward trend. In the last month an increase of twenty-five per cent. has made itself apparent.

"The Miracle of Life," an American release, with Margarita Fischer, has been passed by the censors with very slight changes, and even before its first appearance in Philadelphia is being largely booked.

J. W. Pierce, formerly connected with the Continental, has after a short absence renewed his affiliation with the firm as road man for the Mutual Masterpictures in the eastern district.

Charles Campbell, formerly manager of the Blinkhorn company, now defunct, has become city solicitor for the Mutual Corporation, and although only a few weeks in this position, is making a success of the venture.

Both Continental and Mutual offices are awaiting the completion of their new building which is promised by December.

This move will bring the last of the big companies to the recognized film district in Philadelphia—the neighborhood of Vine street, between Broad and Twelfth.

$1,000 AUTO FOR BEST BUSINESS-GETTER

One of the five road men for Manager Sam A. Adler, of the Exclusive Feature Exchange in Omaha, will get a $1,000 automobile on New Year's Day. To get it all he has to do is to sell more pictures, getting the money for them, than any other of the five.

Manager Adler keeps quiet as to who is in the lead, leaving each man wondering whether he is. "Instead of coming in Friday night to stay they spend just as little time in the home office as possible," said Mr. Adler. "Their time is spent out getting business, and they are getting it."

OMAHA EXCHANGE FINDS PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT VALUABLE

Manager F. A. Van Husan, of the Universal Film Exchange in Omaha, has installed Jake Mitchell as head of a newly established publicity department. Mitchell has made a study of the publicity work from the exchange end. He writes the advertisements, letters and posters for his exchange, as part of his work. His important duty, however, is to furnish help in an advertising way to any exhibitor who desires it.

Several exhibitors call upon him regularly to write their ads for the newspapers. Others, when they are going to get out hand bills or posters, seek his advice. His department became popular at once. He also sends out weekly letters to the trade. This is the first of such departments in the Omaha exchanges. It promises to be a big success.

Manager Van Husan, with J. J. McCarthy, his Iowa representative, is taking a month's trip over the state, calling upon exhibitors. "A personal interview is worth more than all the letters in creation," Van Husan wrote the exhibitors, telling them of his coming. He ended the letter: "Am I welcome?"

J. McLean, of New York, traveling auditor for the Pathé company, was in Omaha, Neb., the other week. "Conditions here are excellent," he said.

MUTUAL IN NASHVILLE MOVES INTO LARGER OFFICES

Increase of business has compelled the Mutual branch in Nashville, Tenn., to move into larger quarters. The new offices will be located at 500 South Main street.

The increase in sales of Mutual pictures in this location is due to the excellent management of Carl Stearn, who has introduced several new selling plans in the Nashville territory.

WALES MANAGES EASTERN NEW YORK FOR PICTURE PLAYHOUSE

H. C. Wales, formerly manager of the General Film Company at Albany, N. Y., has opened an office at 4 Clinton avenue, in that city, and is managing the territory in the Eastern part of the state for the Picture Playhouse Film Company, with offices at Syracuse, N. Y.

CLEVELAND THEATRE MAN RESIGNS TO JOIN GENERAL FILM

Manager Charles A. Garner, of the Princess theatre, Cleveland, has resigned. He will go to Cincinnati to become identified with the General Film Company.

METRO TO CONDUCT TWO CONTESTS FOR CANADIANS

Metro pictures were introduced in two Canadian cities last week under the direction of Metro Pictures Limited, which is the new Canadian company controlling the film productions of the Metro Pictures Corporation in Canada. The first run in Montreal was at the Imperial theare, one of the largest of the houses there, while Metro's "The Right of Way," a Canadian romance by Sir Gilbert Parker, was shown at the Strand theatre, Toronto.

Simultaneously with the Metro introductions came the announcement that two popular contests would be conducted for prizes aggregating $5,000. Three-fifths of this sum is to go for awards in a "popular opinion contest" in which theatre patrons will be asked to be the critics of the first twenty-six Metro pictures to be shown in Canada. Two thousand dollars is offered in a Patriotic Scenario Contest, participants in which are required to write scenarios for recruiting films. The winning play is to be produced in Canada under the direction of Edwin Bower Hesser.

The Canadian company was organized by Herbert Lubin, formerly head of the Allied Features, Inc., and he has become managing director. Canadians interested in the new organization include Paul Galibert, leather manufacturer and steamship owner; A. N. Brodeur, fish merchant; Arthur Ecrement, an ex-member of Parliament, and D. H. Brown, president and general manager of the Prudential Trust Company of Canada. H. M. Brown, son of D. H. Brown, is secretary-treasurer of Metro Pictures Limited.

Arrangements have been made to show Metro pictures in three different Montreal theatres.

McMAHAN, CINCINNATI, WINNER IN AUTOMOBILE PARADE

I. W. McMahan, of the firm of McMahan & Jackson, took the first prize in the automobile parade held in Norwood, Cincinnati, Saturday, October 16, against over 200 beautifully decorated cars.

His car was covered with white folded crepe paper, decorated all over with lavender roses. Suspended on three long nickel-plated rods were three large white doves. Ribbons trailed from the doves' mouths back to an extra high arranged seat on the rear of the car to Baby Gladys McMahan, who was supposed to be driving the doves, and the doves supposed to be flying with the machine.

It will be remembered that Mr. McMahan took the first prize in Cincinnati a few years ago at the Ohio Valley Exposition parade, which was the largest automobile parade ever held in the state of Ohio.

JUDELL, CHICAGO MUTUAL MANAGER, ON FREULER'S EFFICIENCY STAFF

B. N. Judell has been appointed general manager of the Chicago Mutual Film offices. Mr. Judell has also been made a member of President Freuler's efficiency committee of three. In the latter capacity he will be called upon to inject energy into exchanges falling behind the Mutual standard of efficiency.

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS" HELPS HIM TO BE AN EXCELLENT SALESMAN

"We do not wonder at the progress of your exchange if you have many salesmen like Heyman," read a letter to Manager Ph. Goldstone of the World exchange in Omaha, from the headquarters office in Chicago, the other day. "We note Heyman's name on a big percentage of the contracts mailed us. It looks like he might be in line for one of our prizes soon."

"Do you want to know Heyman's characteristic?" asked Goldstone, after showing the letter. "He comes in every Saturday morning. After saying 'Howdy,' around the office, chatting with me a few minutes and setting his traveling case in the corner, he goes to the files and takes out his copy of "Motion Picture News." I'm just observing enough to believe that is one source of his ability as a salesman, so you can't blame me for asking my other men to read it, can you?"

BETTER NAME FOR MODERN PICTURE THEATRE SOUGHT BY CANADIAN UNIVERSAL AND EXHIBITOR

The Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., believing that the motion picture theatre itself should have a more appropriate name, and one which would more befit the present excellence and quality of the modern theatre showing high-class films than the terms, "Nickel Shows," "Movies," "Picture Houses," "Picture Shows," etc., none of which seem to fit the better class of houses today, decided to obtain some name which will meet the requirements of the up-to-date picture house.

With this end in view the Park theatre, one of Toronto's largest and finest motion picture houses, is going to co-operate with the Canadian Universal by means of printed hand-bills and special announcement slides, setting forth the fact that the management will offer a prize for the best name suggested to them to designate a motion picture theatre. The name must not be more than two words and be applicable to theatres throughout the entire country.

EMMICK WILL OPEN PLAYHOUSE EXCHANGE ON COAST

E. H. Emmick, of Los Angeles, one of the most popular and successful exchangemen in the country, has left New York, after concluding negotiations with the Picture Playhouse Company to open up offices for this concern on the Pacific Coast.

W. O. Edmunds, formerly with George Kleine in Los Angeles, has been appointed manager of the Kleine branch in Kansas City.

"NATION" ROADMAN BECOMES HOUSE ADVERTISING MANAGER

Will T. Reed, of Seattle, has succeeded J. B. Bartleson as advertising manager of the Casino, Spokane, Wash. Mr. Bartleson took "The Birth of a Nation" to Portland for the Clemmer Brothers, of Seattle and Spokane, and then was transferred to the Puget Sound city permanently.

NEW MANAGER OF WORLD EXCHANGE FOR BUSINESS PRINCIPLES

The Washington exchange of the World Film Corporation has a new manager in the person of C. W. Bunn. This has been occasioned by Henry E. Friedman, the former manager, stepping into road work for this territory. Mr. Bunn has gained all his film experience from the World Film Corporation, with which he has been associated for the past six months, and he comes here from the Boston exchange. Previous to that he was associated with a big watch concern.

Speaking of his entrance and quick rise in the motion picture arena, Mr. Bunn had this to say: "I do not look upon the film business as a theatrical business at all; in fact, that is not my province with it anyway. I view it in the light of any other commercial enterprise, where a manufacturer has a certain commodity to market. I have films to sell to the exhibitors and their sale depends upon their quality and their fitness for the exhibitor. It is my business to see that the exhibitor gets the value of his money for the films purchased by selling him a commodity (which is a film) that will fill his theatre. For the exhibitors, from my viewpoint, has seats to sell and it is his business to buy an article which will fill them.

"And so I have brought my same business principles of watch salesmanship into the film exchange."

HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST IN FILM OFFICES AT ST. LOUIS

Floyd Lewis, of the Triangle, while waiting for his offices to be completed in the new building at the junction of Locust and Olive streets, has amused himself by going out into the byways of Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma and taking orders for "futures" in films. The amount of business he got was very satisfactory, and Mr. Lewis says big features are not losing their popularity in the Mississippi Valley.

The Mutual Exchange of St. Louis has established a branch at Cairo, Ill., with Leonard Brown as head of the office. Fred Keller, St. Louis manager, is pleased with the increased business of the branch during the short time it has been going.

E. AND G., HANDLING ASSOCIATED, REPORTS SUCCESS

Monroe Isen, who has charge of the Associated Program for New York, reports that since the E. & G. have signed up for the program, the business has more than doubled, and they find they are taxed almost to their limits in supplying the demand of the New York exhibitors.

ASSOCIATED ARRANGES FOR LARGER OUTPUT

D. L. Burke and N. D. Smith of the Associated Film Sales Corporation, made a hurried trip to the Coast to make arrangements for a larger output, as the Associated Program is in such demand that the firm is endeavoring to make its output larger. Its present companies are working to capacity.

EXCHANGE MANAGER TELLS HIS ROADMEN TO READ THE "NEWS"

Manager Joe Levy of the Fox branch in Omaha wants it understood that Ph. Goldstone, manager of the World exchange in the same city, is not the only one who gives his new roadmen an initial bit of advice about reading "Motion Picture News."

"I am going to put Charles Manfre, one of my headquarters men, out on the road," said Levy, "and for several weeks Manfre has been reading the 'News' until now he is better posted."

Ph. Goldstone has hired A. Kahn as a new roadman. "In order to make a success, you've got to keep in touch with the field, Mr. Goldstone told me," said Kahn. "Then he told me to read 'Motion Picture News' from cover to cover. I am, and I want to tell other salesmen everywhere that it helps."

GOLDSTEIN ON EXTENSIVE TOUR OF UNIVERSAL EXCHANGES

"Manny" Goldstein, who was recently appointed assistant to the general manager of Universal Exchanges, has left on an extensive trip through the west and northwest, visiting the exchanges in these sections of the country. He will probably be gone several months and will stay there until he has closed some big contracts.

The object of his trip is to build up the business in these territories and familiarize himself with conditions in that part of the country.

Before taking up his new duties, Goldstein was manager of the Mecca Branch of the New York Exchange and previous to that was assistant to M. H. Hoffman when the latter was general manager of the New York Exchange.

INDIANA EXCHANGE MEN TO GREET ROTHAPFEL AT BANQUET

M. M. Miller, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's Indianapolis office, is planning to entertain S. L. Rothapfel, formerly manager of the Strand theatre in New York, and the new managing director of the Rialto theatre, when he comes to Indianapolis on November 20 in his tour of the larger cities of the country before assuming his new position.

Mr. Miller plans to give a banquet at the Claypool Hotel for Mr. Rothapfel, when all the exchange men of Indiana will be invited to attend.

MIDDLE WEST EXHIBITORS MAKING BETTER DISPLAYS, SAYS LEVY

"I've sold more paper recently than I ever sold in an equal time before," said Joe Levy, manager of the Omaha, Neb., Fox exchange. "Exhibitors in the middle west are going paper crazy. More twenty-four sheets are being used. In some towns the bill-boards are decorated with motion picture posters just as they were always decorated with circus posters. The displays in front of the houses show more real taste, too, and this attracts the people who were becoming disgusted with the gaudy thrillers smeared all over the front of a building.

"There's a big chance to improve the public's taste right in the displays. And I am glad to see the exhibitors are realizing it."

IMPORTANT ADDITION TO FAMOUS PLAYERS PERSONNEL

An important addition has been made to the force of the Famous Players Film Service of Pittsburgh by the appointment of Charles S. Nordie as general sales manager.

Mr. Nordie is a specialist in systematizing business, developing and directing sales forces and has for a number of years been connected with some of the leading concerns of the country in the capacity of merchandise counselor.

He has had a wide experience in advertising and will look after that end of the Famous Players' business.

NEWS NOTES OF DALLAS EXCHANGES

Sam Denbon, division manager of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived in Dallas.

S. G. Sladdin, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, left for a short trip. Manager Byrd is also away closing contracts.

Nate Barash left for Oklahoma points.

Special Representative C. F. Schwerin, of the Fox forces, left for New Orleans, and will visit the Atlanta and Washington offices. Joe Klein, of the World Film Corporation is in Dallas.

MISS MARGETTS A NEW UNIVERSAL "STAR"

Mr. Margetts, manager of the Universal Film Exchange at St. John, N. B., announces the arrival of a new member of the family in the person of a little Miss Margetts.

ADLER SELLS PICTURES FROM REVIEWS IN THE "NEWS"

Manager Sam A. Adler of the Exclusive Feature Exchange at Omaha, says that letters are an excellent vehicle for advertising from an exchange.

"In selling 'Just Out of College' I sent out 425 letters. I got 268 replies and made 167 bookings. I referred in my letters to the advertisements in "Motion Picture News," using that and the reviews to back up my claims.

"On a Billy Sunday feature, which should go good because of Sunday's presence in Omaha, I sent out 375 letters, got 210 replies and made 96 bookings. This convinces me that letters can do a lot."

JOE DI PISA, BOSTON, IMPROVING IN HEALTH

The friends of Joe di Pisa of Boston will be glad to know that he is improving. For sometime Mr. di Pisa, who is well known throughout this section as a clever publicity man, representing the New England Universal Film Exchange as well as several other theatres and organizations, has not been about his usual duties because of ill health.

Some of the boys dropped in to see him the other day and found him decidedly improved.

MUTUAL'S NEW PUBLICITY SERVICE WINS COMPLIMENTS

The new policy of the Mutual Film Corporation of furnishing press sheets and newspaper cuts with their regular program service, is being complimented very frequently by Los Angeles and Southern California exhibitors.

PICTURE BUSINESS GOOD DESPITE WAR, SAYS KLEINE'S CANADIAN MANAGER

D. COOPER of Toronto, manager of George Kleine's Canadian interests, was a visitor in New York last week.

"It's the usual question," said Mr. Cooper in response to an inquiry. "Canada is neither bankrupt or going to be. Business in Toronto is 'fair-to-middlin' in the parlance of Missouri and the picture business is exceptionally good. If you could see the number of big, new houses going up in my territory you would not think the War God such a demon commerce destroyer as he's generally supposed to be. Now and then a one-legged soldier, fresh from the battle field, stumps down King street and promptly becomes the cynosure of curious eyes; and every little while a Highlander fife and drum corps goes gaily by in search of recruits. But these are the only external evidences of the war unless you count a few theatres in the poorer section of the city which have reduced admission prices from ten to five cents.

"Intelligent exhibitors are making money just as usual. Take the beautiful Strand theatre for example. Mr. Marvin, whom I regard as one of the shrewdest exhibitors in America, is getting more money out of his house than ever before. He had a ten-cent gallery that wasn't doing much business. You know how difficult it is to induce good patrons to go upstairs for pictures even when the gallery is on a dead level with the curtain and better for viewing purposes than the main floor. Well, Mr. Marvin pulled out two rows of these ten-cent seats and put in some very pretty loges. These he offered at a quarter, and fills them every night.

"The new Kleine-Edison program is pleasing exhibitors mightily and, I think, is better represented among the Dominion playhouses than any other. We are going to open more offices in Canada very shortly, which is the best proof of the increasing popularity of the Kleine-Edison product. 'The Woman Next Door,' 'The Money Master,' and 'Vanity Fair' are booking solid and seem to be giving the utmost satisfaction to theatre-goers.

"I am looking for a sane and normal increase in all lines of business. The Canadian giant was a bit dazed by the first blow of the war, but he's on his feet now and coming back with all his native strength and youth."

Table of contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

SOUTH AMERICA OFFERS FRUITFUL FIELD FOR FILMS OF REAL MERIT

AMERICAN film manufacturers have been trying to break into the Colombian Cinematograph field for some months past. The American consul at Barranquilla asked a young person who in the United States was a "moving picture fan," and whose criticisms he had frequently heard on the films presented in Colombia, what was the matter with the American films, of which few had been shown, and none successfully. The reply was:

"If the motion picture manufacturers of the United States wish to get their films on the market here they will find, in my opinion, such a thing utterly impossible until the venders of the films mend their ways. When the people of Colombia order pictures from the "States" the exporters proceed to send them their lowest-grade films. Now, the people here are just as critical as the American public, and as a result the American film is rarely bought, because only low-grade detective and Wild West stories and comedies are sent. The people have no objection to detective stories if they are good. The French and Italian companies send none but the best.

"Wild West pictures are not liked, nor does the Colombian care for pointless "slapstick" comedies; yet these are what the film exporters of the United States are sending, and then they wonder why they don't get Colombia's trade. Let them try a few really good films; for example, the Broadway features and John Bunny comedies, plays like "My Official Wife," "Uncle Bill," etc., and short society dramas. Let the people here become acquainted with big film actors and actresses who sway the North American audiences in the grip of their personality. Stop using Colombia and the rest of South America for a 'waste basket' in which to dump the plays the American public refuses to see. Then there will be a chance."

Good Translations Essential

Another thing that the film manufacturers should do, by all odds: See that all titles and descriptive matter are carefully translated into Spanish by some one who understands both languages well, and not into pigeon Spanish by some high school student. Then, care must be taken in copying and in printing titles on the film. Nothing hurts the susceptibilities of an audience like being "stared at" by glaring errors of idiom and spelling. Hence, these are important features in the sale campaign.

There are three motion picture shows in Barranquilla, two in Santa Marta, two in Cartagena, and several in Bogota and Medellin. Bucaramanga, Cali, Manizales, and other smaller centers all have them. One mining company has put in a picture theatre to keep its employees contented. Others may have to do the same. All these have depended on Pathé (France), Gaumont, and Italian Films Company for their films.

American film makers should begin to look South America over as a field for business, but they must remember that what makes Pathé popular is understandable dramas, with some "blood and thunder" and the titles in perfect Spanish. Three to five reels are popular lengths, so two stories may be given; and then "La Napa" (the horse trader's "to boot") is usually a short, clean, comic reel that sends everyone away in a good humor, having laughed at some of the drolleries of Salustiano or of Max Linder—funny and, above all, decent. Nothing that is not clean in story or action will take, so films for South America should be of such a character as to make a censor unnecessary, according to the report of a United States Consul in Commerce Reports.

"Les Miserables," "Quo Vadis," "The Count of Monte Cristo," some adaptations of Zola's works, "The King of the Air," and other aeroplane stories have proved popular here. Nick Carter fills the niche for detective tales, and such films are sufficiently funny to attract. It must also be remembered that the South American is more acquainted with French and Spanish literature than with English and American.

Trade Board Advance in Film Reform Told Chicago

Guests at Banquet Hear from Binder Success Achieved by Organization of Manufacturers in Its Aims to Secure for the Industry Progression, Protection and Promotion

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Chicago, Oct. 25.

A GROUP of Chicago men prominent in the film industry, attended an informal luncheon at the La Salle last Friday, to discuss local organization plans of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

At each plate was a pamphlet, published by the Board, giving a condensed resume of the aims of the Board, and listing its officers.

Also, each guest was presented with a reprint of pages 45 and 46 of MOTION PICTURE NEWS from the issue of October 2. These pages contained the announcement of the formation of the national body, and an interview with J. W. Binder, the executive secretary of the Board.

Mr. Binder had come from New York to address the meeting, and his keen grasp of conditions in the film industry made a deep impression on those present. He first outlined his own experience and connection with the business, and then told the history of the formation of the Board of Trade.

He then recounted the success already achieved by the organization in the film field, and the plans of the Board for the future.

The Board proposes to fight inimical legislation, introduce favorable legislation, lower insurance rates on studios, theatres and exchanges, establish a credit bureau, lower railroad rates on films, educate the public through publicity regarding the real status of moving pictures, and, in general, organize the business into a unified, coherent whole.

Mr. Binder announced that sixty per cent of all film manufacturers in the country, and sixty-seven per cent of all the exchangemen already are members, and invited those present to join the flock, enrolling in the one of the six classes to which they belonged.

W. R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, and vice-president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, is to receive the applications of those who were not able to attend the initial meeting.

Those present were the following: J. W Binder, executive secretary Motion Picture Board of Trade of America; W. J. Sweeney, Motion Picture Exhibitors League; N. F. Sawyer and H. J. Looking Ahead With The Producers

VITAGRAPH TO PRESENT NEW WEEKLY PROGRAM OF QUALITY, BEGINNING NOVEMBER 1

THE Vitagraph company, on the alert to keep abreast of the demands of the exhibitors and their growing patronage, have arranged a weekly program, beginning with the first week in November, to include a series of releases, each one of which will be a representative Vitagraph picture, whether it be a one-part subject or a feature. Twenty-four of the Vitagraph stars are represented in the first week's releases, who worked under the direction of seven different directors to make the separate stories.

MR. AND MRS. SIDNEY DREW AND FLORENCE NATOL IN "BEAUTIFUL THOUGHTS" (Vitagraph)

The first of the quality releases will be "Between Two Fires," in which two maiden ladies living one on each side of a bachelor, conspire individually to capture him in the matrimonial net and the ruse employed by the victim to circumvent their designs. It was directed by Courtland Van Deusen, with the assistance of Flora Finch, Kate Price and William Shea, in its enactment.

The second release of the week will be "The Sultan of Zulon," a two-part comedy by William Calvert Howard, produced by Wall Van. It tells in amusing manner the adventure of Ram Si Ko, in his search of a white wife to add to his already overstocked harem. Hughie Mack is the Sultan, while Dorothy Kelly and Donald MacBride assist him in creating the fun.

Following "The Sultan of Zulon," will be a Frederic Chapin comedy. "A Family Picnic," in which a great Dane proves to be a white elephant on the hands of a picnic party. Kate Price, Ethel Corcoran, Donald MacBride and Paul Kelly are the comedians responsible for the comedy's success.

A star cast of Vitagraph players selected from the Western company at Los Angeles, Cal., enacted the release for Thursday, "The Ebony Casket." It is a story in which an ebony casket containing a stuffed cat, helps a pair of lovers to overcome parental objection. William Duncan, Anne Schaefer, Myrtle Gonzalez, Alfred Vosburgh, George Kunkel, Otto Lederer, Carleton Weatherby and George Stanley, are the principals concerned in the enactment of this play.

Eva and Stanley Dark are the authors of the regular "Sidney Drew Day" release, "Beautiful Thoughts," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew appear to exceptional advantage. Its theme is woven around the tenets of the "Beautiful Thoughtist" and the story develops into the means employed by a husband, a perpetual grouch, to drive the beautiful thoughts out of his wife's head. Florence Natol is the third member of the cast that presents this delightful comedy.

A Broadway star feature, "Anselo Lee," a stirring picture of Gypsy life, interwoven with romance, into which a society girl is the beloved of a Gypsy Adonis, is the first Saturday release of the month. It was enacted by a cast of Vitagraph players that include Antonio Moreno, Naomi Childers, Donald Hall, Frankie Mann and Nellie Anderson, who worked under the direction of Harry Handworth.

For good measure, and to round out a program of exceptional quality, the Vitagraph company announces the release on Monday, November 1, of "The Turn of the Road," one of their Blue Ribbon features, produced by Tefft Johnson with a cast including Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers, Bobby Connelly, Robert Gaillard and Edwina Robbins. It is a life drama from the pen of Isabel M. Johnston, and tells in a series of punches a story that is said to culminate in a breath-taking climax, and to be replete with deft touches of artistry.

The above series of film releases for the first week in November is only a forerunner of what the Vitagraph company promise in the succeeding weekly program under the new arrangement.

EDISON FILMING LOUIS J. VANCE SUBJECT FOR DECEMBER 8

"The Destroying Angel," Louis Joseph Vance's famous novel, is now being filmed by the Edison company for release on the Kleine-Edison Feature Service program December 8.

TERWILLIGER TO BEGIN NEW DRAMA FOR LUBIN

"Streets of Silence" is the title of a new and original photoplay, written by Anthony P. Kelly of the Lubin Scenario force, which will have its production under Director George Terwilliger and which will be released through the V-L-S-E Inc. offices, with Ormi Hawley as the star.

This will set at rest the constant rumor that Director Terwilliger is to leave the Lubin Company. The picture will be begun at once at the Lubin Philadelphia studios and then Director Terwilliger with his company will proceed to the Western Lubin branch at Coronado, Cal., where he will complete this picture and begin his next.

AGE AND YOUTH WORK TOGETHER IN METRO FEATURE

The unusual contrast of the oldest actress on the English speaking stage and the youngest star of the screen appearing together, will be shown when Mrs. Thomas W. Whiffen, the "grand old lady" of the stage, and little Mary Miles Minter, the youngest screen star, are seen in "Barbara Frietchie," a five part feature picture now in production at the Popular Plays and Players' studio, for an early release on the regular Metro program.

MRS. THOMAS WHIFFEN AND MARY MILES MINTER IN "BARBARA FRIETCHIE"

Although Mrs. Whiffen has appeared in many notable stage productions on both sides of the Atlantic for more than half a century, this will mark her debut in motion pictures.

A FAMOUS ARTISTS' MODEL IN UNUSUAL POSES FOR THE LATEST PRODUCTION FROM THE THANHOUSER STUDIOS

AUDREY MUNSON AS SHE APPEARS IN "INSPIRATION," COMING MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE

HAYDON DIRECTING ESSANAY CAST IN MYSTERY THEME

A company of Essanay players under the direction of J. Charles Haydon is now at work making a five-act photoplay of "The Alster Case," taken from the novel of that title by Rufus Gillmore, author of "The Opal Pin," "The Mystery of the Second Shot" and other widely read detective novels.

The photoplay will be Essanay's December release on the V-L-S-E program. It is a mystery play, and carries out the incidents of the book with great faithfulness to detail, it is said.

Bryant Washburn takes the leading masculine role, and Miss Ruth Stonehouse the leading feminine part.

The mystery surrounds the slaying of Mrs. Alster, and is solved in an unusual and thrilling manner at the climax of the play.

UNIVERSAL WILL PRESENT SCREEN VERSION OF "UNDINE"

The well known novel entitled "Undine" has been adapted for the screen by Walter Woods of the Universal scenario staff, and same will be produced in five reels by Director Henry Otto. Ida Schnall, well known throughout the United States as one of the world's best swimmers, has been engaged to play the star role in this production.

Miss Schnall has won a number of medals for speedy and long distance swimming, and is said to be one of the most perfectly formed women in the world, her measurements checking with those of the Venus of Milo.

"COME BACK OF PERCY," THIRD SELIG BLOOM CENTER COMEDY

"The Come Back of Percy," third in the Selig "Chronicles of Bloom Center," is a two-act comedy, written and directed by Marshal Neilan.

This production will be released in the regular General Film service, Monday, November 8.

All the characters which have incited merriment will be seen disporting in "The Come Back of Percy."

Constable Plum, Postmaster Ira Pash, Miss Selina Tubbs, Druggist Phil Pickel, Chubby Green and Johnny West are unusually active.

AUDREY MUNSON, FAMOUS ARTIST'S MODEL, IN NOVEL PHOTOPLAY FOR THANHOUSER

EDWIN THANHOUSER has engaged Audrey Munson, who is known in the world of the palette brush and clay pile as "The Venus of Washington Square," also as "The Panama-Pacific Girl" and "The Exposition Girl." Miss Munson has done some startling work among painters and sculptors, and Edwin Thanhouser considers her the logical subject for a film production which he has long had in mind.

Audrey Munson is a miracle of human development. Her form has been the subject of books and articles by the leading physiologists of America, but it is as a model that her fame is greatest. As "Evangeline," by Daniel Chester French, she stands in bronze before the home of the poet Longfellow, at Cambridge. As "History," by Allan Newman, she tops the state capitol in Florida. In New York every mile or so is marged with a Munson figure by some great sculptor. She overlooks the great metropolis from her pinnacle as "Justice" on the towering Municipal building. She posed for the groups at both ends of the Manhattan bridge; for the great ballroom of the Hotel Astor, Conti modeled his group from Audrey Munson.

But her greatest triumphs are the groups at America's greatest exposition at San Francisco—"Descending Night," by Weinman; "The Fountain of Eldorado," by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney; "Genius of Creation," by French; "Fountain of the Earth," by Aiken; Sherry E. Fry's figures in Festival Hall; Piccirille's "Spirit of Spring" and "Court of Four Seasons," and Evelyn Longman's "Fountain of Ceres." Of Exposition paintings, "Art Crown My Time" and mural decorations, by Milton Bancroft, and works by William de Leftwich Dodge, owe her their inspiration.

In this story of art and artists she appears as merely herself, for under the guidance of her director, George Foster Platt, the public is given an opportunity to see her as the queen of the sculptor's dais.

MUSIC KEEPS ESSANAY CAST UP TO REQUIRED PITCH DURING PRODUCTION OF "THE RAVEN"

IN the filming of "The Raven," a melange of George C. Hazleton's biographical novel of the poet, and the poet's poem of that name, arranged and produced by Charles J. Brabin, the Essanay company resorted to music to raise Henry B. Walthall, Warda Howard and other members of the cast up to the required emotional pitch.

George K. Spoor, president of the company, conceived the idea as he stood on the studio floor and watched Mr. Brabin and the others working on the intense scenes of the photoplay. There was difficulty in reaching and keeping the pitch required because this play gives an actor little time to get balance. After two or three of the heaviest scenes had been rehearsed and retaken many times without success, Mr. Spoor left the floor and got busy at the telephone.

That afternoon when the members of the cast returned from lunch, they found the "sets" for the play surrounded by wooden screens. When they were called to the floor and prepared to resume their work, they were startled by the music of a full orchestra, playing some of Grieg's Peer Gynt music.

Mr. Spoor, after a consultation with his directing staff, announced that music would be used at the Essanay studio in future productions. This is the first time in film history that music has been used in the production of photoplays.

VITAGRAPH CAST BEGINS WORK ON "MRS. DANE'S DANGER"

Lilliam Walker, Wilfrid North, Donald Hall, William Dunn and Edward Elkas have begun work on a three-part drama for the Vitagraph company, entitled "Mrs. Dane's Danger," by Charles L. Gaskill.

Besides playing the leading male character, Mr. North will also be director of the picture.

WARREN KERRIGAN IN A NEW SERIES OF TERRENCE O'ROURKE PICTURES FOR UNIVERSAL

J. WARREN KERRIGAN is going to appear in a new series of Terrence O'Rourke pictures. Such is the decision of Carl Laemle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, after having wrestled for months with one of the most intricate problems he has ever been called upon to solve. The "problem" is all caused by the insistent demand of picture fans requesting that the Terrence O'Rourke pictures be re-issued. But Mr. Laemle has decided that instead of re-issuing the famous series, he will present Mr. Kerrigan in a novelty serial.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN IN THE FIRST OF THE "TERRENCE O'ROURKE" SERIES

Beginning November 22, and continuing for three weeks only, J. Warren Kerrigan will appear in a two-reel picture each week of his greatest characterization, Terrence O'Rourke, which will be released so as to follow immediately after the last episode of "The Broken Coin." It had been originally planned by the Universal to issue "Graft," the new Universal serial written by fifteen different prominent authors immediately following "The Broken Coin," but the Terrence O'Rourke pictures will serve to kind of ease the strain on the followers of the popular Universal serial, and give them something of a different nature as a matter of diversity.

The first picture to be released under this plan, will be Louis Joseph Vance's Egyptian novelty story, "The Palace of Dust," and will be produced by Jacques Jaccard, who also scenarioized the story. In Mr. Kerrigan's support will be Carmen Phillips, Ray Gallagher, George Periolat and G. Raymond Nye. The story is laid in Cairo, Egypt, where we find Terrence O'Rourke as a gentleman of adventure. The Russian prince, who is the consul to Egypt, is perfecting a conspiracy whereby the control of Egypt shall be shifted from the English into the hands of Russia and France. The prince of Egypt and his brothed, the Princess Constantine, are enthusiastic for the freedom of Egypt, little knowing that it is really a plan to saddle their native country with new masters.

Terrence O'Rourke wins the princess to his side; he foils the conspirators; fights them off in a secret chamber, and returns to the side of the princess, who shields him and later stabs the prince to allow Terrence an opportunity of escaping, in order to reach the English barracks, where he furnishes them with the details of the conspiracy which he has nipped in the bud.

"TWO EDGED SWORD," VITAGRAPH, NEARS COMPLETION

"The Two Edged Sword," a four-part drama, which was written for the Vitagraph company by Lulu Case Russell and Eugene V. Brewster, is nearing completion under the direction of George D. Baker.

Edith Storey, Evart Overton, Josephine Earle, Robert Gaillard, Marion Henry and Nellie Anderson are the players prominent in its enactment.

UNIVERSAL FILM SHOWS HOW JOE KNOWLES, BY HIS RESOURCE, KEPT ALIVE IN WILDERNESS

WHEN Joe Knowles, two years ago, emerged from the Maine woods near the Canadian line and was met at Lake Megantic, Quebec, he proved to his satisfaction that his experiment in the Maine woods where he was at the mercy of the elements, the wild animals of the forests, and without food, clothing or shelter.

Harvard professors who examined Joe Knowles' thick tan skin at the Cambridge Laboratory the week after he left the woods and forests, declared that no individual could attain such a skin unless he had actually been exposed to the elements for at least four or five weeks, still there were skeptics and it remained for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to attempt to a certain extent, to clear the mystery by having Joe Knowles repeat his feat before the camera.

HOW JOE KNOWLES BATTLES A RATTLER IN "THE NATURE MAN"

Mr. Knowles' performance for the Universal did not consist of a lengthy stay in the woods, but merely showed how he accomplished the feats which he has described in his book, "Alone in the Wilderness."

How Joe Knowles trapped and skinned his bear, from which he made a covering for his body; how he trapped fish and then caught them with his hands; how he made his bow and arrows with which he defended himself and killed game are all minutely portrayed in this Universal film, which Mr. Knowles consented to pose for, for the only purpose of proving to mankind that the feat he accomplished was possible. The experiment was made for the purpose of showing that a man can live today in the wilderness and rely wholly on his resources for his living.

The pictures are instructive, interesting and amusing.

The Universal will release them under the title of "The Nature Man" as a Broadway feature.

ATLAS MAKES WAR COMEDY FOR ASSOCIATED

The Atlas Comedy Company of the Associated Service, inspired by many of Henry Ford's views on war, have made a comedy, "The Battle of Not Yet."

JEAN PIERRE PIERARD, EUROPEAN WRESTLER, FEATURED IN "ZIBLICKY'S WATERLOO," CASINO STAR COMEDY

The life of the Carolina mountains as presented by H. Grattan Donnelly in his novel, "The End of the Road," is graphically reproduced in the five-part Mutual Masterpicture of the same name, screened by the American Company. The story deals with the passions, good and bad, both of the primitive people of the southern hills and of persons of intelligence and culture whose fortunes are cast among their wilder compatriots.

An all-star cast has been selected, in which May Allison, Helen Rosson and Harold Lockwood have the leads. William Stowell plays the "heavy." William Lofe and William Carroll appear in the roles of secret service men and the frenzied lover of "Carolina," the mountain girl.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG IN CHINESE SUBJECT FOR WORLD FILM

Clara Kimball Young will star in a forthcoming World Film production to be called "The Spirit of the Joss House." Rex Ingram is directing the picture, the scenario of which he also prepared.

In this play she impersonates "Ming Ti," who is stolen from China and brought to an American Chinatown by a vicious opium dealer. In his disreputable den she meets and falls in love with Demarest, an American artist.

World Film will shortly announce the release date.

DALY ANNOUNCES CAST FOR NEXT GOLD ROOSTER PLAY

Arnold Daly announces as the cast for his next Pathé Gold Rooster Play "The House of Fear," the following: Mr. Daly in the lead, supported by Sheldon Lewis; Ina Hammer (who has supported Maude Adams and Robert Edeson), Martine Sabine (who was leading man with John Drew), William Bechtel and Charles Laite.

The picture is under the direction of Mr. Daly and Ashley Miller. Like the others of the Arnold Daly series it is adapted from the "Ashton-Kirk" story written by John T. McIntyre.

CHINATOWN OPIUM JOINT ACCURATELY REPRODUCED IN KALEM PRODUCTION, "THE DREAM SEEKERS"

SCENES FROM "THE DREAM SEEKERS" AND "THE GLORY OF YOUTH" (Kalem)

A COMPLETE opium outfit, exactly as used during the days of San Francisco's world famous Chinatown, has been employed in the production of "The Dream Seekers" by the Kalem Company. It was only through the friendship that an official of the Golden Gate City has for James W. Horne, who directed the picture, that it was obtained.

For several years now the federal and State governments of California have had the Chinese quarter under control, and practically have stamped out all of the vice that made its ill-repute.

When Mr. Horne was confronted with the problem of obtaining the proper atmosphere for "The Dream Seekers" he went at once to the official of San Francisco and secured his assistance. Then application was made to the United States government for permission to remove a complete outfit that had been confiscated from the warehouses where it had been stored.

This permission finally was secured, and then Mr. Horne set about the task of getting a Chinese to aid in arranging the set. Here, however, was a stumbling block. Nowhere could he find a Celestial who would admit having any knowledge of how an opium joint appeared when in full operation. For three days he searched without avail, and it was not until a Chinese interpreter employed in one of the municipal courts volunteered that he was able to get the effects desired. However, the scene as shown in the Kalem picture, which will be generally released in a short time, is an accurate reproduction of an opium joint.

TYRONE POWER AND KATHLYN WILLIAMS CO-STARS IN "SWEET ALYSSUM" FOR SELIG

WHEN Tyrone Power and Kathlyn Williams are seen in the new Selig production, "Sweet Alyssum," released through the V-L-S-E November 15, it will be the first time that these two strong "leads" have appeared together in moving pictures. The two have much in common in their ability to interpret the emotional although graduated from widely varied schools of dramatic interpretation and with widely varied careers.

Mr. Power has an enviable reputation on the legitimate stage, having appeared, in addition to Sir Henry Irving, with Mrs. Fiske, Julia Marlowe, Mrs. Leslie Carter and William Faversham and having been featured in that startling play, "The Servant in the House," by Charles Rann Kennedy for several seasons.

He began his stage career in 1884 and has never missed a season since.

Miss Williams on the other hand, is a product solely of the silent drama. Starting about six years ago as a player under the Selig trademark, she has played leads week in and week out. Her greatest delight is playing character parts in which emotions known to all women can be portrayed. Her work with the wild animals at the Selig Jungle-Zoo in Los Angeles, Cal., is well known through her performance in the "Adventures of Kathlyn" serial and countless other wild animal pictures.

Her most famous successes were in the big V-L-S-E productions, "The Carpet from Bagdad," and "The Rosary," in each of which she scored decisively.

New Laws And Court Decisions

PROMINENT CAPITAL CITY PICTURE MEN WELCOME BANNING OF "COUNTRY STORE"

THE "The Country Store" has been dealt its Waterloo in the District of Columbia by the decision of the Assistant District Attorney, Ralph Given, that such a practice is a violation of the lottery law. This refers to the giving away of prizes of any character in places of amusement.

The order as issued by Major Pullman, Chief or Police, runs as follows: "Notify all theatres, motion picture parks and other place in your precinct running so-called "Country Stores" or any device or plan where prizes of any kind are given by virtue of the purchase of tickets, that if anything along this line is done tonight, the police will take action.

"The captains will see that no country store enterprises of this sort are allowed to operate after this warning, which should be given this afternoon."

This order took effect at once, on October 19.

J. P. Morgan, vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for the District of Columbia, had this to say on the ruling: "The League has always opposed the country store and welcomes the action of the Chief of Police. At one time we voted to refuse membership to exhibitors resorting to this practice. We do not consider it legitimate picture business and is only used by those who are tottering to failure because of mismanagement or because they are not showing the right kind of pictures. Personally, I rank as the first exhibitor in the northeast section of the city, and I have always been able to make my pictures bring my patrons. I have country stores all around and I have seen them rise and fall, but the Princess kept strictly to its mission of motion pictures."

Arthur Robb, house manager for Moore's Garden and Strand said: "Of course the decision of the police department did not effect us at all.

"We have never found the giving of prizes of any character necessary, nor has the country store practices of other houses affected our patronage."

Nat Glasser, manager of The Leader, and a director of the Washington Exhibitors' League, emphatically favored the order of Major Pullman: "If the pictures are not appealing enough to bring the public, then don't try to run a picture show. Another thing, this idea of giving something for nothing creates dissatisfaction among the patrons. They are never satisfied. More than this, prize offering cheapens a house and is beneath the dignity due high class motion pictures."

KEYSTONE GOVERNOR ASKS STATE EMPLOYEES TO ACT AS SPIES TOWARD EXHIBITORS

EVERY employee of every department of the state government of Pennsylvania, whether located at the capitol in Harrisburg or anywhere throughout the state, is, in effect, designated by Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh to act as a "gumshoe" detective to see that exhibitors live up to the letter of the recently enacted motion picture censorship law.

This became known when the governor sent an identical letter to the heads of all the departments calling on them to direct their subordinates who at any time may attend a motion picture show, to report to the state board of censors whenever they see a film displayed which has not been approved by the censors.

It will be recalled that Governor Brumbaugh last spring took an active interest in the passage of the present censorship law, which was drawn up by Chief Censor J. Louis Breitinger, whose attitude has always been hostile to the motion picture exhibitors.

Here is the text of the letter Governor Brumbaugh has addressed to all the heads of departments:

"It has come to my attention that here and there throughout the state moving picture films have been displayed that have not been approved by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors for Moving Picture Films.

"It is of the utmost importance that only films approved by the board of censors of this commonwealth should be exhibited in this state.

"Will you, therefore, be kind enough in the interest of a proper enforcement of this law, to request of all employees of your department, who at any time in attendance at a public moving exhibition should see displayed any film not approved by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, immediately to notify the board of the time, the place and the character of such film.

"This co-operation on the part of your people will be greatly appreciated."

"DAMAGED GOODS" O. K.'D AT SHOWING IN NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans is not "blessed" with a board of censors, but the Mutual Film Corporation, in introducing "Damaged Goods" to that city, held a private showing of that picture at the Hippodrome theatre, and invited scores of city officials and leading physicians to express their opinions of the picture. "Damaged Goods" was shown October 24 at the Columbia theatre, in Canal street.

Several score of written opinions were garnered, and every one of them had nothing but praise for the picture. Dr. Oscar Dowling, president of the Louisiana State Board of Health, said: "The picture is 'strong,' if you will, but in my opinion it holds a tremendous power for good." Dr. Dowling for a number of years has conducted a fight for sanitation. His expressions have been sought by the leading journals of the country, including the Saturday Evening Post.

The Rev. Louis Voss, pastor of the First Street Presbyterian Church, said: "Damaged Goods" ought to strengthen greatly the effort that is being made to stamp out that blot upon our city and principal cause of loathsome diseases so widely prevalent —I refer to the restricted district—by the enactment of an injunction, or abatement act."

QUEBEC BANS "ETERNAL CITY" ON RELIGIOUS GROUNDS

The motion picture play adapted from Hall Caine's "Eternal City" has been banned from reproduction in the picture houses of the Province of Quebec, according to an announcement made by Sheriff Lemieux, chairman of the Provincial Board of Moving Picture Censors. The picture was refused approbation on religious grounds. The population of this province is made up mainly of devout French-Canadians.

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS WILL FIGHT CENSORSHIP

The St. Louis Exhibitors' League will appear at an open hearing of a committee of the Aldermanic Board in opposition to a bill to create a board of censorship for motion pictures in St. Louis, which was recently presented by Alderman Barney L. Schwartz.

Table of contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

CARRIE SIMPSON NOW FULL FLEDGED STATE CENSOR

Miss Carrie Simpson is now a full-fledged censor of the State of Kansas, having been appointed by Governor Capper. This makes her responsible only to Governor Capper and not to W. D. Ross, Superintendent of Public Instruction.

According to those who are "in the know," Miss Simpson is having tail-pieces made that will show that the film bearing it has been passed by her and not by W. D. Ross. It seems that Miss Simpson was appointed by the governor at the suggestion of Mr. Ross. Miss Simpson wants to be responsible for her opinions and for this reason is going to use her own name on films that she passes.

Miss Simpson's new appointment will give her full power to pass or reject a film regardless of the opinions of the other censors.

It is not known to be true, but it is suspected, that this new appointment of Miss Simpson's is not setting very well with the other censors.

WOULD KEEP CHILDREN, UNDER 14 AND ALONE, FROM NIGHT SHOWS

The Detroit Federation of Women's Clubs will endeavor to see that the ordinance which prohibits the attending of moving picture theatres at night by children under 14 years of age not accompanied by adults, is enforced.

"We will make the mothers of Detroit realize that children under 14 should attend only Saturday afternoon matinees and that the program of these matinees should be chosen especially for them," said Mrs. W. R. Alvord, president of the federation. "The managers of theatres are willing to put on such programs, provided that there is a demand for them. It is our purpose to create the demand. We are also appealing to the managers to enforce the ordinance now in existence, which prohibits children from attending evening performances unless accompanied by an adult.

"We shall make a campaign through the clubs and churches of the city to show mothers the results of evening theatre-going by children and of seeing pictures intended only for older eyes."

HOUSTON EXHIBITOR, ARRESTED, REFUSES TO STOP PICTURE

Because he showed a film, "The House with Nobody In It," without a permit from the Board of Censors, Anthony Xydias, an exhibitor of Houston, Tex., was arrested. After his arrest, he refused to take the picture off, and showed it at his house throughout the day. Said Mr. Xydias, according to the Houston Chronicle:

"I am going to make a test case of this and carry it through the highest courts if necessary. I am going to find out if I can be forced to show pictures to the censor that are admittedly proper and clean and be compelled to ask for a permit before showing every film. No word of condemnation has been uttered against this picture. The only point up for argument is that I failed to get a permit from the censor before showing it."

WINNIPEG CENSORS ENLIST LADIES' COMMITTEE TO BAR "NAUGHTY" FILMS FROM PUBLIC GAZE

MANITOBA and Saskatchewan moving picture censorship, which is all done by a board of three censors in Winnipeg, will in the future, it is probable, be more strict than ever. Strips of film with even a faint breath of naughtiness mixed up in them, will be promptly ordered deleted and it is possible that even anything in the way of a domestic scandal, as forming an episode in a reel, will be chopped out in its entirety.

No more will the monthly censors' reports, which are submitted to the board of control at the city hall, contain as reasons for films censored, be confined to "German scenes, fights, shooting, gambling, immoral, suicide," etc. It is possible that additional reasons, objected to by the more discerning feminine, and reasons entirely original with the Winnipeg board of censors, will be included. Coryphees in abbreviated skirts, bathing nymphs in scanty costumes, and even the occasional flash of a silk stocking, seen as the lady leaves her auto or jumps out of the window of a moving train, will probably be witnessed no more on the screens in two of the western Canada prairie provinces, after the ladies have gotten fairly into the harness.

The Winnipeg Moving Picture board of censors have brought something down upon themselves, but still it may be all right at that, and what the board will like, when it is considered that they will be visited regularly by a bevy of ladies whose ambition is to see that the public gets what it wants, so long as it is also what the ladies want to give them in the way of pictures.

Those pictures which the censors already have allowed to be displayed to the enthusiastic youth or the serious-minded adult will be relegated to oblivion, if the ladies decide against them.

The censors say they agree that they ought to help the moving picture managements in giving the public what it wants, and so have decided that a committee of ladies is sure to know all the wants of the public, for have they not husbands and other servants to obtain their information from? Certainly for the sake of the husbands and servants the standard of pictures for Manitoba and Saskatchewan will be raised a little higher.

The personnel of the committee selected includes the names of some of Winnipeg's most prominent women, the wife of Attorney General Hudson being one of the number. There is the wife of a prominent Winipeg minister also on the board.

TORONTO CLERGY BLOCKS SHOWING OF FIGHT FILMS, DESPITE PROMOTERS' PATRIOTIC PURPOSE

THREE days before the scheduled date for the showing of the Johnson-Willard fight pictures in Massey Music Hall, the largest auditorium in Toronto, the Ontario government decided to cancel the permit which had been issued for their exhibition, owing to pressure from ministerial associations and other representatives of the clergy. The result has been that the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association, under whose auspices the views were to have been screened, has disbanded, and the Canadian soldiers, for whose benefit the exhibition was planned, are signing a protest against the government's action in revoking the permit which had been officially granted.

The fight views were to have been shown all in one day, October 20, and the cancellation of the permit was made on October 17. The incident has been made a public issue between the officials and members of the defunct Sportsmen's organization, and the preachers and the dailies have been devoting columns of space to the controversy.

"I was one of the favored few who saw the Willard-Johnson pictures at a private view," Robert C. Newman, provincial inspector of theatres, told the NEWS correspondent. "I saw nothing immoral about them. They did not show anything brutal. There was no bloodshed. It was a good, clean exhibition of boxing, according to these views."

Arrangements are being made by a number of citizens of Toronto to hold a public mass meeting in Massey Music Hall, which seats 4,800 people, to protest against the intereference of the ministers in this as well as in one or two other patriotic ventures.

LEGALITY OF "PICKETING" THEATRES WILL BE SETTLED BY WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT

THE legality of "picketing" theatres which have had trouble with labor unions is to be settled in the Supreme Court of the State of Washington, through the medium of an action started in Spokane County.

The last State legislature passed a law prohibiting picketing. A few days ago E. M. Reed and Joseph Thompson, members of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, were arrested while marching up and down in front of the Empress theatre, carrying banners which read: "This theatre is unfair." The arrests were made on warrants sworn to Joseph Krom, manager of the theatre.

The men were placed under bond and released. According to Attorney E. W. Robertson, who appeared for them at their preliminary hearing, the anti-picketing law is inoperative, because a petition has been filed demanding that a referendum vote be allowed upon it.

Deputy Prosecutor Hance H. Cleland told the court the statute was operative, because the referendum law excepts statutes which relate to the public peace and safety.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Los Angeles, Oct. 23.

THE Kalem Ham Comedy company has just completed filming "The Man Eating Tiger" in the wilds of Bear Valley near Pine Crest, Cal. The scenario for this is by Lloyd V. Hamilton, and the direction was in charge of William Beaudine. The part of Minnie was played by Owen Evans. She was originally intended to be a lion, but Los Angeles costumers had only a tiger make-up, hence the change. The principal parts in this were taken by little Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare. The company is now making "Nearly a King," a comedy of the Elizabethan period, from scenario by Director Beaudine.

Jack McDearmid, who has played two short engagements with Coast companies, has been added to the regular stock of the Kalem Ham Comedy company, and will play juvenile leads opposite Ethel Teare in future productions. Mr. McDearmid was with Ziegfeld productions for the past three years, and played juvenile lead in "The Winsome Widow" and "The Follies of 1912."

The work of filming the "Stingaree" series by the Kalem company is proceeding very satisfactorily, the organization now making the fourth episode. Many scenes for this number were made during the past week on the Mojave Desert where the entire company, with a large number of extras, cowboys and complete camp outfit spent the past week. This production is in charge of James Horne.

Paul Gilmore, who has just completed an engagement at the Griffith Fine Art Films studio, where he played a leading part in "The Penitentes," has been engaged by President Fred J. Balshofer, of the Quality Pictures Corporation, to play featured leads opposite Marguerite Snow. He began this engagement this week appearing in the part of William Westwood in "Rosemary." Mr. Gilmore has had a very successful theatrical career, having played practically all of the John Drew parts in cities outside of Chicago and New York. He also has the distinction of being the first actor engaged by the Mutoscope and Biograph company when it was only possible to make a picture sixty feet in length. Since entering the picture field he played leads in two subjects for the Balboa company besides the engagement in "The Penitentes."

New Comedienne for Nestor

Director Al Christie of the Nestor comedies has discovered another comedienne in the person of Betty Compson, who came to Los Angeles appearing in a vaudeville sketch played over Pantages circuit. While here Mr. Christie saw the act, and arranged for Miss Compson to return to Universal City as soon as her engagement was completed. She arrived at the film city this week, and in honor of her coming the Nestor company began filming a very appropriate subject, "Wanted, a Leading Woman," which is a motion picture of a motion picture, showing the trials of a director in securing talent for the making of a college comedy. The arrival of the new comedienne, according to the script, causes jealousy between Eddie and Lee, and they make numerous attempts to outdo each other and win the hand of the fair one, Eddie having the edge because he plays the juvenile lead, while poor Lee is forced to make up as the janitor. The entire company have a delightful time.

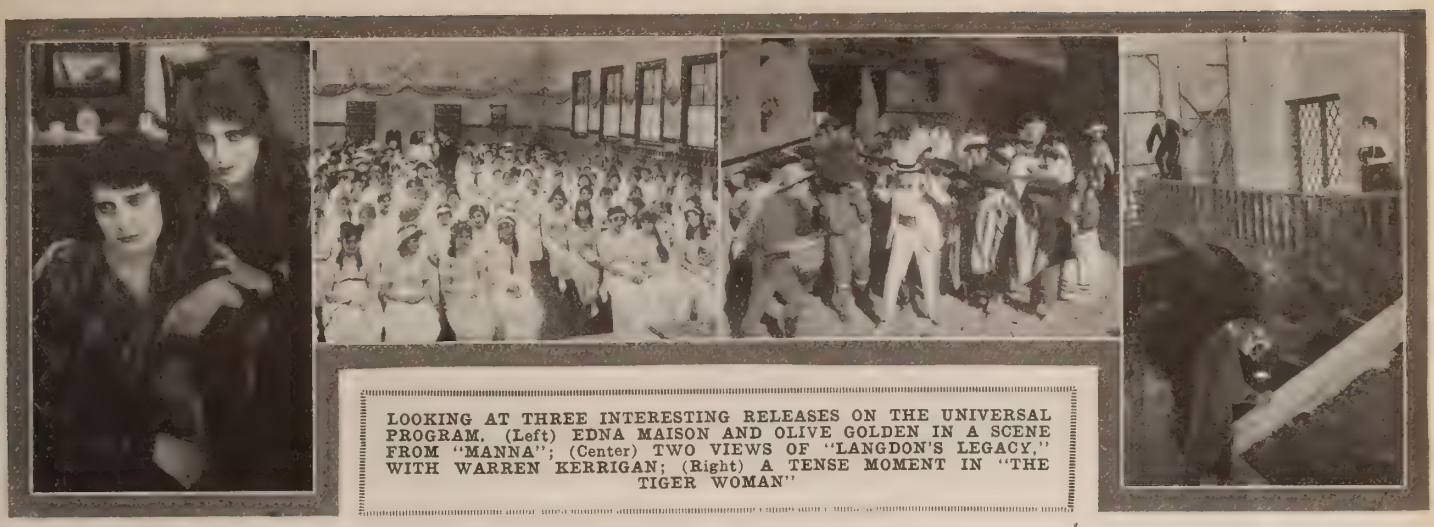
Delegates and guests of the American Electric Railway Association, and the American Electric Railway Manufacturers Association were entertained one day during the past week at Universal City.

Going to the capitol of filmdom by electric cars, they were met at Universal City station by an escort of cowboys, and the officers were transported to the entrance of the city in the original city conveyance, the horse-car. The progress of the times were shown during their return to the station when they were taken in a 1915 jitney of the "flivver" variety. During the day a number of special scenes were made following a short address of welcome by Director General McRae. George E. Kann, who arrived Monday to take up the duties of business manager, supervised the entertainment, and the principal events of the afternoon was a big rodeo in which Jane Bernoudy won many of the honors.



Universal Director Makes New Record

Beverly Griffith, in charge of making local scenes for the Universal Animated Weekly in connection with his work in charge of locations, made new records this week when, under his direction, pictures were taken of the burning of fifty thousand dollars' worth of opium pipes and paraphernalia by the State Board of Pharmacy. The picture closed with a "close-up" of a poor Chinese crying over the spilled milk. The last scenes were made at 3:45 p. m. It required an hour to take the exposed negative to the Universal laboratory and a print back to the Superba theatre, where it was shown at 7:15. The laboratory department needed but two hours and a half for developing and printing from the negative.

The Horace Davey Joker Company has just filmed "When Father Was a Goat" from a scenario by Charles H. Christie, wherein flirty father is forced to give son five hundred dollars in order that the boy may square the old man with the supposed detectives. Ray Gallagher is the son, Billie Rhodes the girl, Harry Rattenberry the father, and Neil Burns the detective. The company is now filming "Saved by a Shirt."

"Chills and Chickens" is a one-reel comedy wherein C. Chaser has domestic troubles, after forcing himself to become ill that he may be taken to a hospital where he sees a decidedly attractive nurse. Max Asher is Chaser, Gale Henry his wife, and Lillian Peacock the nurse. Allen Curtis is directing this story, scenario of which is by Gale Henry.

The George Ade play, "Father and the Boys," is being filmed this week with a cast composed of Digby Bell as the father, Lemuel Morewood, Harry Ham and Bud Chase as his sons, Louise Carbasse as Bessie Breighton, May Gaston as Frances Berkley, and Yona Landowska as Emily Donaldson. The plot revolves about a western orphan who owns an interest in a supposed worthless mine, and goes to New York to earn a livelihood by society entertaining. A rich New Yorker aids the girl in withholding her rights to the mine. His interest in the girl causes his sons, whose marriages he had planned to think he is eloping with her and a continental chase follows. The sons fall in love with the girl their father intended should marry the other, and the Western maid finds her former sweetheart who has returned from the Klondike.

Constance Johnson is being featured in the name part of the three-reel subject by F. McGrew Willis entitled, "The Butterfly," which shows the career of a frivolous woman who loves attention. This borders on tragedy and has a decidedly strong plot. M. Blevins appears as the heavy, Jack Livingston as the lead opposite Miss Johnson, and Ray Hanford in the character role.

"An Unexpected Scoop" is a one-reel comedy drama made this week by Richard Stanton, in which Stanton, Jack Wilson and Myrtle Gonzalez play the principal parts. It is a newspaper story in which two reporters from rival papers become rivals over a girl who, it later develops, is the only party who can give them information regarding a story they have both been given assignments for.

Director William C. Dowlan is filming a one-reel comedy drama, "The Traveling Man and the Girl," from story by Leonora Ainsworth. Mr. Dowlan and Gloria Fonda play the name parts, with V. T. Henderson appearing in the character role. The plot pertains to the stepfather accusing his step-son of robbery, and the traveling man bringing about the placing of guilt on the son of the man.

Director J. P. McGowan has completed the making of "When Rogues Fall Out," a story of a railway president's attempts to secure a franchise in which he resorts to all methods, fair and foul. The story is by Helen Holmes who appears as the daughter of the railway president. Others in the cast are D. H. McDaniels, W. R. Weber, and L. D. Maloney.

"Bloodhounds of the North" is the title given a Canadian trading camp story written by Walter Woods. Agnes Vernon appears in this as the daughter of the trading post keeper whose hand is sought by a sergeant of the mounted police and a cattle rustler who poses as a trapper. This story has many melodramatic scenes with all the thrills of the semi wild life in the northwest.

Three-Reeler Deals with Life of Artists

"Gilded Youth" is the title of a three-reel drama dealing with life in the artists' quarter of London, in which three artists care for the child of one of their models, and who becomes infatuated with a vampire, played by Elsie Jane Wilson. The story was written by Rupert Julian, who is in charge of the directing and also plays the leading part, that of the artist who fathers the youth and prevents him from wedding the vampire. Bertram Grassby appears in a prominent part, that of one of the artists, Carmen Phillips as the model, Hal Cooley as the foster son of the artists, and Rena Rogers as the girl the artists hope their son will wed.

The Joker company composed of Victor Potel, Smiling Billy Mason and Teddy Martin, under the direction of Roy Clements, have filmed "Safety First and Last," a decidedly timely comedy.

This week the "Broken Coin" company began the filming of number twenty-two of the series, which will be the last. Following this, Director Francis Ford will spend a vacation in the East, and all members of the company will be given a holiday. They have been working on this constantly for more than the past six months.

The Joseph Franz Universal company will take up the filming of "Klint of the Tree Country," a two-reel drama written by Ben Cohn, in which Sherman Bainbridge, Edith Sterling and Rex D. Rosella appear in the leading parts.

"Colonel Steel, Master Gambler," is a one-reel story being filmed for Laemmle Brand this week. Two of the principals of this are Edna Payne and Arthur Moon.

The title of the Meredith Nicholson story filmed under the Direction of Otis Turner, with J. Warren Kerrigan in the name part, has been changed from "Pennington's Legacy" to "Langdon's Legacy." The filming of this has been completed.

First New Keystone Building Finished

The first of the new buildings for the reconstructed Keystone studio has been completed. This consists of five floors and will house the offices, carpenter, paint and mechanical shops, and work has now been taken up in the construction of a large interior studio where filming will be done by artificial light. No additional space near the present site of the Keystone plant could be purchased except a large hill directly back of the present location. This was bought, and for the past week steam shovels and an army of teams and workmen have been hauling the young mountain away. This will afford a flat space where an interior studio will be erected.

Weber and Fields, who are on the Coast for appearance in Mack Sennett Triangle feature comedies, have completed their first subject and are now working on the second.

The aim of one of the cowboys taking part in a scene in which Chimmie Fadden is initiated out west, was so good that the paper wad of the blank hit Victor Moore's foot just astern his pet corn, and the star comedian thereupon gave to the film some decidedly classy steps that had not been rehearsed.

"Micha," Geraldine Farrar's pet goat used in subjects filmed recently, chewed up his leather collar and meandered around the studio all day Sunday and Sunday night, and Monday morning he was found devouring the last scrap of paper containing the plans for sets for "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo." Fortunately many of the sets had been completed, but it so happened the one Micha swallowed for dessert was the very one the technical staff needed at once. As the result the "Mr. Grex" producing company was held up for two days.

Turnbull Play for Edna Goodrich

Hector Turnbull is writing a photoplay in which Edna Goodrich will be starred, and while this is being completed, Director George Melford is taking a short vacation which he is spending on a hunting trip.

The new developing and finishing laboratory at the Jesse L. Lasky studio is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy within the next few days.

There was an unfilmed scene enacted at the Lasky studio this week when Hector Turnbull's automobile was christened "Shivering Betsy," and that speed demon of Director George Melford named "The Stuttering Doughnut." This christening is a prologue to a big race act that is to be pulled off in the near future providing the two motor enthusiasts can find a fast enough track to accommodate their cars for a half-mile race.

"The Wood Nymph" is the title of the first Fine Arts-Triangle subject in which Marie Doro will appear, and the work of filming this was taken up on the arrival of the actress at the Griffith studio this week. Supporting Miss Doro will be Mary Alden, Frank Campeau, Adoni Fovieri, Wilfred Lucas, Charles West and F. A. Turner. The direction will be in charge of Paul Powell.

The first subject in which Norma Talmadge will be seen on the Triangle program is "The Missing Links," in which she will be supported by a very excellent cast.

Another large property room has been added to the Fine Arts Film studio, making a total of two hundred and nine permanent buildings. This property room is 60 x 200 feet and will be used for the storage of expensive articles.

A number of buildings of a distinct Spanish type of the sixteenth century have been built and used at the Fine Arts Film studio in the filming of "Don Quixote," with DeWolf Hopper.

Griffith Players Coming East

Mae Marsh, who has been ill for several weeks, is now fully recovered, and this week departed for the New York studio in company with a number of other players, including Owen Moore and Dorothy Gish and Alan Dwan who will play there for a number of weeks.

The Pacific Ocean just out of San Diego Bay furnished the setting for a naval battle. The United States government furnished the principal props, a number of torpedo boats, destroyers, warships and other boats making up a fair sized squadron for scenes made this week for a coming NYMP Triangle subject. The title of this has not, and will not be announced, until release date. The battle lasted for about two hours during which time the several cameras on the job exposed more than six thousand feet of film. For these scenes a whaling bark was purchased and converted into an armed cruiser of the Bleucher type. About fifty Ince players, directors and technical men including Thomas H. Ince, E. H. Allen, Directors Raymond B. West and Reginald Barker took part in the making of these scenes.

The government boats used were the torpedo destroyers Perry and Paul Jones, U. S. tug boat Harris, the San Diego, and the Spreckles private yacht. The prop warship was battered from a distance of twelve thousand yards with eight inch guns which crushed it from stem to stern. During the battle, the San Diego ran toward the bow head at full speed keeping up continuous firing, and the battered boat finally sank. The scenes made are said to have cost in the neiborhood of eighteen thousand dollars.

NYMP Stages Spectacular Fire

NYMP employes, with the exception of members of the William S. Hart company, were given a real treat this week in the manner of a spectacular entertainment when the completed Western village, built especially for a Hart production on top of the plateau, was destroyed by fire. All buildings which were used during the filming of the scenes, had roofs of diffusing cloth and were completed prior to the burning of the village. Very realistic effects were obtained.

A replica of the New York Stock Exchange is being built at the new Culver City site of the NYMP studio, and will be the first set built there. The work on the studio is progressing very satisfactorily, the stages being built first so that work can be commenced there and continued during the completion of the Administration building, technical shops, etc. This set is for a coming H. B. Warner subject.

The mission set at Inceville, which has been used in scores of photoplays, lost its appearance this week when it was converted into the court yard of the palace of a Balkan ruler. When this work is completed the set will be used in a coming Bessie Barriscale subject, in which William Desmond will play opposite the well known NYMP star.

Arrangements have been made with the management of the Trinity Auditorium in Los Angeles, for the showing each Monday of Ince features for the Triangle program. This will be the final "once-over" given the pictures by Thomas H. Ince and his staff. Each picture will have specially prepared orchestral accompaniment during the projection.

Willard Mack has completed his engagement at the NYMP studio, and has departed for the East.

William S. Hart, grown weary of the long trolley ride to and from Inceville daily, has purchased an automobile, and finds that the throttle is as responsive as the spurs.

Innovation at Lasky Studio

An innovation is being introduced in the making of two subjects at one time under the direction of one person at the Jesse L. Lasky studio. The two photoplays will be filmed by Cecil B. de Mille, one starring Edna Goodrich, and the other co-starring Fanny Ward, Jack Dean and Sessue Hayakawa. Both are from original scenarios by Hector Turnbull of the Lasky scenario department

The making of these two plays at one time will require two complete studio shifts, one to work at night, and the other during the day. For each production there will be an entire separate and distinct company and corps of assistants, with the exception of Alvin Wyckoff, who will do the photographic work in the making of both pictures. With the Goodrich picture, Mr. de Mille will be assisted by William Horowitz and with the tri-star subject by Harry Hatfield, late legitimate stage producer. Mr. De Mille is just finishing the last few scenes for the second Victor Moore "Chimmie Fadden" subject. For these scenes, the entire town of Newhall, Cal., was rented for two days. The Lasky company went to the typical Western town in a special train of nine cars, and with the aid of all the villagers made big mob scenes.

It has been definitely decided by the Lasky company to remain at the present studio indefinitely, and probably permanently, it being understood that they have given up all plans of moving to a different location as was their intention earlier in the season. The fact that the remainder of the unoccupied portion of the block on which the studio is located has been leased, leads to the conclusion that their present home will be a permanent one. The negotiations for the additional ground were completed this week, and this will give the company a space of 300 x 650 feet, and afford ample space for the building of many large sets such as their productions may require. The entire block will be enclosed, bearing the name of Lasky Features on all four sides. The new laboratory building now under construction is rapidly nearing completion, and will be pressed into use within the next few days.

Burro Develops Temperamentitis

"Ramona," the burro heretofore used in dramatic productions at the Lasky studio, where she has "supported" Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen" and "Marie Rosa"; Lou Tellegen in "The Unknown," Edgar Selwyn in "The Arab" and other similar stars, developed an acute case of temperamentitis this week when requested to play in several scenes of the comedy subject "Chimmie Fadden Out West." At first the leading burro absolutely refused to make up, and was finally induced to do so, after much laying back of the ears, by the purchase of Indiana clover hay, and the assurance that she would have her name on the screen and two close-ups with the star, Victor Moore. Because of his recent refusal, the members of the company have been treating her exceptionally well, and she now rides to location in state, occupying the rear seat of an automobile with a footman on either side.

The work of filming the next Universal serial which is to immediately follow "The Broken Coin," was begun this week under the direction of Richard Stanton with Hobart Henley in the star part of the young man who battles against crooked politics, first as a district attorney, later as judge, representative and congressman. There will be fifteen episodes in this subject, each of two reels, and the story for each one written by a separate author.

In many of the episodes Director Stanton will also play in prominent parts, and the principal members of the big cast who have so far been selected to play in all fifteen episodes of this serial are Jane Novak, Glen White and Ray Stanford. The first release of this serial will in all probability be made on November 22.

Selig Tiger in Animal Drama

Rajah, the big tiger of the Selig Zoo, considered the largest in America, is this week being featured in a one-reel East Indian animal picture produced by Lloyd B. Carleton, with a cast composed of Edward Peil, Vivian Reed, C. C. Holland and others. The title of this is "The Sacred Tiger of Agra."

Another new subject being filmed is an African animal story entitled "Jumbo's timely Rescue," with a cast composed of Edith Johnson, Harry Lonsdale, Leo Pearson and others. Tillie, the largest of the John Robison herd of elephants, plays a very important part in this, which the makers believe will cause a sensation when it is shown on the screen.

At the Edendale Selig studio, the finishing scenes of the three-reel subject adapted from the Richard Harding Davis short story, "The Buried Treasure of Cobre," are being made under the direction of Frank Beal. Harry Mestayer is featured in this subject, which is laid in South America.

Scenario has been prepared for a Selig V-L-S-E subject which is to be made by Colin Campbell and co-stars, Tyron Power and Kathlyn Williams. This will consist of five reels, and the present title selected is "Thy Neighbor's Wife."

Members of "The Diamond from the Sky" celebrated the completion of their sixty-reel serial by a dinner served at the Challet Café at Santa Barbara. Lottie Pickford wrote a special song for the occasion, and Director William D. Taylor was presented with a handsome silver loving cup by members of the cast.

First Weber and Fields Subject Finished

The first Weber and Fields subject, "The Best of Enemies," made under the direction of Frank Griffin and the supervision of Mack Sennett, was completed and forwarded to the New York office of the Triangle this week. This deals with the efforts of the pair of German comedians to break into society, and because of their rivalry, Fields is accused of murdering Weber when the latter suddenly disappears. He is tried, convicted, taken to the death house, later to the scaffold, and the hangman has counted two when Weber suddenly puts in an appearance and prevents the killing. Supporting the famous comedians are Chester Conklin, Max Swain, May Bush, Frank Opperman, Guy Woodward and others.

"Saved by Wireless" is the other Keystone subject completed this week, in which many of the scenes were made to represent pictures taken of action on one aeroplane as seen from another. The making of this was under the direction of Walter Wright, who is head cameraman at the Keystone studio, and who is entitled to the credit of some wonderful trick photography effects. Chester Conklin and Max Swain perform a number of sensational stunts in and about the aeroplane as it presumably soars through the air.

Fred Mace is now being featured in a very remarkable part which requires that he be cross-eyed through the entire two reels of Keystone comedy. The title of this is "A Janitor's Wife's Temptation." This is the first time any comedian has been able to put this act over, and the many scenes that have been projected indicated that Mace has added another novelty to the screen.

BEVERLY BAYNE, METRO STAR, WHO WILL BE SEEN SHORTLY IN "PENNINGTON'S CHOICE"

Carlyle Ellis, free lance fiction and magazine writer, specially engaged by the Triangle Film Corporation, has arrived at the Coast to write special feature stories regarding the three studios located in Los Angeles. William Collier will arrive at the Keystone studio within a few days to begin an engagement. He is particularly well known for his successful stage career during which he played the star part in "Never Say Die," "On the Quiet," "The Dictator," "The Man from Mexico," and his most recent success was that of "Hello, Broadway," with George Cohan.

Charles Fais, for the past several years with the David Horsley interests in Los Angeles, has been engaged by Business Manager George Stout, of the Keystone Film Company, and Mr. Fais will now act as purchasing agent.

Selig Engages Louis J. Cody

Louis J. Cody, who came to the Coast for a special engagement at the NYMP studio, and later was with the Balboa Company, where he was featured in several productions, has been engaged by the Selig Company, and began his first work there this week in an important part in the film version of the Richard Harding Davis short story, "The Buried Treasure of Cobre," being produced by Frank R. Beal in which Harry Mestayer plays the featured part.

Florence Rockwell has arrived at the Pallas Pictures studio and this week began work in the filming of an adaption from the well-known E. P. Roe novel, "He Fell In Love with His Wife," which will be the first picture for the Paramount program produced under the direction of William D. Taylor, late producer of "The Diamond from the Sky," North American serial.

The last scenes for the Dustin Farnum Pallas Pictures subject, "The Call of The Cumberland," were made this week, and for these a very elaborate interior of a gun club home in the mountains was built. The set was 30 x 70 and consisted of a number of rooms all connected by big openings which permits a general view of all parts. Prominent in the interior furnishings were handsome fireplaces. The set was designed and built under the direction of Earl Sibley, technical director for this studio.

The Oliver Morosco subject, "The Tongues of Men," featuring Constance Collier, supported by Forrest Stanley, will have some very novel professional dancing scenes in which the Egan dancing girls of the Orpheum circuit took part. These scenes were made for this theatrical story this week. The troupe consisted of fifteen Los Angeles High School girls who were graduates of the Egan school at Los Angeles, and will shortly begin a tour over the big time vaudeville circuit.

H. E. Roach, president and director of the Rolin Film Company, arrived home this week and immediately took up the filming of additional subjects of the "Lonesome Luke" series, released over the Phunphilm brand by Pathé.

Charles Roacher, who has been connected with the Lasky, Universal and other prominent producing companies, has been added to the staff of the Rolin company in the capacity of head of the photographic department.

NEWS OF THE WEEK IN AND ABOUT SAN DIEGO

San Diego, Cal., Oct. 23.

The Lubin Company has been busy the past week, completing the three-reeler, "The Convict King," and putting on two other films, "Two News Items" and "The Diamond Thief."

Mr. Sloman has been directing "Two News Items," a script by Julian LaMothe, dealing to some extent with the phases of capital and labor, or affluence and poverty. One news item is that about the death of a woman without a cent in the world, her end self-inflicted, an event which received a few lines in the paper. The other item tells about a gift of $10,000 to the poor by a man of wealth, and yet this man's avarice is the real cause of the woman's suicide. The story of his generosity fills columns of the papers. The woman and her husband were tenants in one of his slum tenements, and the husband, desperate in his inability to secure work, turns thief. The woman is evicted and decides to end it all. Adda Gleason plays the wife, Jay Morley the husband, L. C. Shumway the man of wealth, and Adelaide Bronti the sympathetic neighbor of the couple.

In "The Diamond Thief," a one-reeler, George Routh plays the thief, Helen Wolcott his accomplice and Ronald Bradbury the jeweler who is robbed. Capt Wilbert Melville and Melvin Mayo directed the production of this play.

Helen Wolcott is one of the newer members of the Lubin company. She was born in Denver and played for a time in the Garden stock company in that city. Since coming to the Coast she has been in pictures with the Bosworth and Selig companies at Los Angeles. She is an excellent swimmer and finds much sport in the surf off Coronado Beach. However, one day the past week, she had an experience with a surf-board which she does not care to repeat, as she bears a number of bruises sustained while trying to manage, a la Kanake, an obstreperous board in a heavy surf.

Mr. Bradbury is also a new member of the company at Coronado. He began life at Walla Walla, Wash., and has had many years of stage experience, having put in about fourteen years in the legitimate, playing with such people as Theodore and Florence Roberts, Nance O'Neill, Catherine Countiss and others. He was in stock with the Willard Mack company and has also had out his own road companies. For a time he wrote scripts for Bosworth and the Vitagraph, before joining the Lubin forces. He has had a number of plays on the boards in the past, and was out on the Orpheum circuit for a time.

Adelaide Bronti has been with the Lubin Company for a year, doing character work. She was born in Utica, N. Y., and for a number of years was in comic opera work. About three years ago she went with the Biograph Company, and has also played before the camera with the Universal and American.

Vivian Caples has closed her engagement with the Lubin Company and left for San Francisco by steamer.

Mrs. Wilbert Melville has been passing the week in Los Angeles, and Capt. Melville has gone north in his yacht, the Vergana, to join her.

J. C. Jessen, Los Angeles correspondent of Motion Picture News, visited the newly opened studio in San Diego recently.

Work has been started by the Lubins on a three-reeler, "The Bond Within," a story dealing with the theme of mother love It is one of Julian LeMothe's scripts.

One hundred members of the San Diego naval and coast artillery militia left in special cars for Santa Ana, where they will go into camp for three days at the expense of a motion picture company which is to take scenes in a big war drama. Full field equipment was taken. It is reported the New York Motion Picture Company is back of the project. Allen H. Wright.

Board of Trade Will Fight New York Constitution

Failure of Revision Leaders to Insert Plank Guaranteeing Full Liberty to Motion Pictures Warrants Rejection of All Their Proposals, Organization Declares

THE Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, representing the responsible elements of the motion picture industry, is beginning an active campaign against the adoption of the proposed new constitution of the state of New York.

When a committee representing the motion picture industry asked for a hearing before the Constitutional Convention leaders at Albany on the insertion of a plank guaranteeing as full liberty to motion pictures as is now accorded to newspapers and the spoken drama, it was shown scant courtesy by the Bill of Rights Committee at the convention.

The following resolution has been passed by the directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade:

Upon motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was

RESOLVED, that the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., condemns the action of the Bill of Rights Committee of the Constitutional Convention, held at Albany, N. Y., during the months of July, August and September, for the purpose of formulating amendments to the present constitution of the state of New York, such constitution so amended to be submitted to a vote of the people this November; in refusing to report to the convention the proposed amendment, by which it was provided that the motion picture as a vehicle of thought transmission was to be granted the same liberty from legalized pre-publicity censorship now enjoyed by the press; such action on behalf of the committee being discriminatory and contrary to the best interests of the people, in that it failed to protect them from the possibility of such censorship—the arbitrary act of the few over the many—conceived in ignorance, intolerance, prejudice or malice, and, therefore, contrary to the principles of freedom and free expression of thought upon which this country is founded.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that this association use its influence in behalf of, and in every way possible lend its encouragement and support to the press and all other agencies in their endeavor to cause the people to reject at the polls the amendments adopted by the said convention; such rejection being thoroughly justified upon the ground that a convention so constituted as to fail to recognize that censorship is an attack upon the bulwarks of our freedom, and to protect our people from such attack, is not of a disposition which would justify the approval of the results of its deliberations.

Triangles to Pierce Boston Film Field at 2 Points

Griffith-Ince-Sennett Pictures Will, It Is Predicted, Be Shown at the Olympia on Scollay Square and the Olympia in Washington Street

Boston, Oct. 26.

THE Triangle will not have a theatre of its own in Boston. From time to time most of the theatres in the city have entered into the discussion. Recently the Tremont and the Colonial loomed largest as film possibilities in connection with the Triangle.

But whatever plans the Triangle had regarding a house of its own in the Hub have been given up. Manager Bradley of the New England Triangle office in Boston did not know of this fact until the News man told him of it. The tip to the News also said that the Triangle had reached an agreement with the Gordon Amusement Company, by which its films would be shown to Boston motion picture lovers.

When questioned as to this a high official in the Gordon offices denied that such an agreement had been reached with that company, but he said that a similar agreement might have been made with the Olympia amusement interests, which controls the various Olympia theatres throughout this section.

In Boston there are two Olympias, in Scollay Square and on Washington street at the foot of Boylston street. Indications at this writing are that Triangle will be shown in these two houses and in the Olympia string in other cities in this section.

At present Manager Bradley is busy on plans for a Triangle exchange in Boston.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

ENGLAND and matters English are occupying a prominent part in the worries of the established producing concerns. Time was, up to the start of the present war, when the export sales totalled considerably more than half of the income of the oldest and most reputable companies in the business. In fact the producing machinery was geared to fit the "foreign market" for, in many cases, American distribution practically took care of itself.

Now, not only is the "foreign market" all shot to bits by the war but the juice of what profits did remain from purely British sales has been extracted by the new duty levied on films taken into England. This duty is one-third of the estimated value of the films.

Manufacturers usually send a negative to England and have the prints made there. But the new tax estimates the value of these negatives and then charges one-third of that value. England, alone, is not a territory of large sales. On certain kinds of features England only can use two or three prints. Of course the days when London was the clearing house for the civilized world, except America, are over, for one might say that the civilized world is at war, if this be not too paradoxical. So now that London handles prints for England alone, this tax takes all the fun out of doing business, as far as American companies are concerned.

One big company has solved the problem to the best of its ability by having a few films selected for exportation by a man who spent some time in England, studying the British market with which he is fairly conversant. He O. K.'s for exportation practically only serials and comedies. So it is easy to see that American producers must now look to America more than ever for their expenses and profits.

Who says a girl needs an education to be a screen star?

One of our best known leading ingenues was out of town recently taking scenes with a supporting company in a picture laid among fisher folk.

At the dinner table the leading man, just to make talk, said:

"I think those nautical scenes we took today will screen pretty well."

The leading lady began to titter.

"I didn't know we took any naughty scenes," she said.

Photoplayers' night at the new roller skating rink at the North end of Longacre Square was a gay affair. Harry Meyers brought along his own hand-raised champion, but the pride of Coytesville was not in shape and didn't win his race. A Universal husky, whose display of form brought forth many ecstatic shrieks from the gallery, won the long race easily. Rosemary Theby, more beautiful than on the screen if possible, presented the cups to the winners and champagne flowed like mucilage. Among the screen artists there were: Maurice Costello, Gladden James, Paul Panzer and Hal August. Then there were Ed Carewe, Billy Barry, "Kid" Hogan and Bill Swanson, in town from the West.

JULIUS STERN

Never a dull moment at the Screen Club these days with one member importuning the Supreme Court to retain for him his "place in the sun." Injunctions are flying thick and fast. The funny part of the whole thing is that at least one injunction has changed the man on whom it was served from a neutral to an active participant in the fray.

Francis X. Bushman and his Quality-Metro producing company have found a home and a guiding hand at last. George Wiley has been secured as business manager of the company; Don Meaney remaining in an executive capacity. The company is working at the old Colonial studios in West Thirty-fifth street, New York city, one of the best equipped and best lighted small studios imaginable.

'Way from Chicago comes a full page of war story with Joe Farnham's face in the middle of it. Joe draws a vivid picture of the trials and tribulations of the man trying to take motion pictures at the front in Europe.

Metro will soon issue two reel pictures with its well known stars, including Francis X. Bushman, featured, it is understood.

Gordon Trent says an Essanay actor is "nursing a severe attack of hay fever." Why nurse it? Why not try to kill it?

Now comes the Paragon Film Inc., with studios at Fort Lee, which will release through World Film. The chief interest centers about the personnel of those concerned. Maurice Tourneur is vice-president and general manager. With him will be Directors Capellani and Chautard. Thus are three sons of France putting up a wonderful commercial and artistic fight on American soil, for they are three of the very best directors in the business.

Tourneur's mail must be heavy these days. He just hinted that he wanted a man to read the scenarios submitted.

W. Glenmore Davis, known to Broadway as "Stuffy," is to have his face and soft collar handed down to his children's children. He also startled his associates. For he recently went to W-O-R-K in moving pictures. He plays himself, a press agent, in a forthcoming Gaumont Casino comedy with Tom and May Waters. "Stuffy" is funny, even in street clothes, unconsciously, undeniably funny.

Two years' absence from home surroundings have not lessened the keen interest of George Loane Tucker in the doings of his old associates. Since leaving New York, Mr. Tucker has been producing pictures for the London Film Co., Ltd., the studio of which is at St. Margaret's, near Twickenham, Middlesex, England.

A letter from Mr. Tucker encloses a draft for $100 for the Motion Picture Hospital Fund, in the sending of which he says he takes a great deal of pleasure. The draft has been turned over to Adolph Zukor, treasurer of the fund. It is the largest single contribution so far received.

One of the busiest men in the film industry these days is Julius Stern, manager of the Universal's eastern studios.

His office is situated at present at the Imp studio at Forty-third street and Eleventh avenue, New York, but in a few weeks he will move his entire staff to the big new studio which is now being completed at Leonia, New Jersey.

At the present time Mr. Stern has more directors, more actors, more scenario writers, more property-men, scene shifters and so forth than the limited quarters will permit. The result is that some of the directors have to work nights in order to produce their pictures. In other words he has a day shift and a night shift.

The directors now working on three stages at the Imp are Lawrence Marston, Henry McRae Webster, Charles Weston, Allen Holubar, Brinsley Shaw, Ben Wilson, Raymond L. Shrock, and Matt Moore.

Columbia University is going to elevate the art of the photoplay. Professor Victor O. Freeburg, who is a doctor of philosophy, will conduct a course in scenario writing. Thus comes the practical operation of a plan often suggested. It is devoutly to be hoped that other colleges will follow this lead.

Must have been some opening of Metro pictures at the Imperial theatre, Montreal, Canada. "The High Road" was shown to a distinguished and enthusiastic audience. Valli Valli and Ed Brennan, the stars, appeared and made short speeches. Miss Valli was presented by Herbert Lubin, managing director of Metro Pictures, Ltd., with a sterling silver flower basket while Brennan drew a cigarette case. Metro pictures will be seen in Canada from now on.

Wonderful Sarah Bernhardt! "Jeanne Dore," taken since the amputation of a leg, will preserve her for posterity. Mme. Bernhardt does not look more than forty on the screen. The only pity is that no record has yet been made of Mme. Bernhardt as she looks in private life today. At seventy years she is a remarkable woman.

Triangle pictures are being lined up by the biggest and most stable exhibitors of the country. Gordon has taken them in Boston, Archer brothers in Chicago and the Dusenburys in Columbus. Then, of course, there are Hexter of Cleveland and Kemble of Brooklyn.

That reminds one that "The Birth of a Nation" is reported as opening in London to good, but not great, business.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

The Biograph producing forces, 114 strong, will leave for the Coast this week.

Capt. Harry Lambart, of the Mirror Films and Jack Cunningham, press representative, are on a trip to Chicago which Jack admits is "mysterious."

CHANGES OF THE WEEK

Stanley Walpole, just back from Australia, is playing with the Arrow-Pathé forces.

George Beban will work for Maurice Tourneur at the new Paragon studios.

Constance Johnston, late of Lasky, joins Universal.

Al Ray, comedy director, leaves the Associated and joins the Astor company, releasing through Pathé. With him goes Henry Fishbeck, camera man.

Edgar Mels, former Lubin press agent, is back writing newspaper editorials but says he will get in the film business once more.

World Series Baseball Films Better Than Last Year

Miles Receives Scores of Inquiries for Pictures Showing Diamond Tug-of-War Between Boston and Philadelphia and Many Exhibitors Wire for Bookings

INNUMERABLE inquiries for bookings on the world's series sets, covering the five baseball games between Boston and Philadelphia for the world's championship are being received by Manager Joseph R. Miles of the World's Series Film Company, New York.

A number of exhibitors have wired for bookings as late as in December, proving pretty well that they realize these pictures will be an attraction for the entire winter.

Manager Miles, in view of this avalanche of inquiries, has decided to change his original idea of open bookings and is offering the series to territorial buyers. Wideawake buyers, including a number of prominent exhibitors are taking advantage of this opportunity.

This world's series set of pictures deserves the very best that can be said of them. Two sets are offered, one of five reels, covering each of the five games and another of three reels which shows the important plays of the first four games and the entire fifth or deciding game.

The photography is excellent, and the camera work is new. Instead of stationing several cameras around the grounds to catch separate plays and relying on these solely, a camera also caught the action of the game from the home plate.

The four famous home runs of the series can be seen on the screen from beginning to end. Close-ups are also shown of the players, the governors of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, the mayors of the two cities, and one of President Wilson and his fiancée, Mrs. Galt, which is said to be the best close-up of the president thus far secured for motion pictures.

All these points distinguish the present world's series pictures from those of 1913 and 1914 and are responsible for their greatly superior quality.

Manager Miles recommends that buyers of territory book with the exhibitor on a percentage basis. He believes this arrangement will insure greater return for the buyer. The interest in the pictures should last, like fight pictures, for a long time. They really bring the big games, in all their reality, to those who did not see them.

Ask Clean Health Bill for Banned "Damaged Goods"

Los Angeles Will Seek Injunction Against Censors, Who Threatened to Confiscate Bennett-Mutual Subject if Exhibitors Attempted to Show the Picture in the City

Los Angeles, Oct. 25.

LOS ANGELES censors have issued notice to the Los Angeles Mutual Film Corporation exchange, advising that a majority of the members voted that the Richard Bennett "Damaged Goods" feature was immoral and should not be permitted to be shown.

The film is booked for the weeks of October 25 and November 1 at the Superba theatre, 520 South Broadway, Los Angeles, and all efforts to induce the censors to change their minds have proven fruitless and they advise the film exchange that the film will be confiscated if any attempt is made to show it.

An effort has been made to sidetrack the ruling of the censors by inducing Mayor Charles Sebastian to overrule the board, but notwithstanding his very friendly feeling toward the film people in Los Angeles, he has advised that the censor board's jurisdiction is above his official power to change.

The management of the Superba theatre state definitely that the film will be shown Monday notwithstanding the ruling, and they feel positive that court action will result in a victory over the censor board. Local newspaper critics have all viewed the film, and their reviews have been very favorable, all of which tends to influence the general public against the censors.

In the past exhibitors have all been successful in securing injunctions preventing the censors and police department from interfering with the showing of pictures condemned by the board, and every effort will be made to secure such an injunction in this instance.

France Is with Vogue for Comedies Through Mutual

Producer, Who Recently Directed Eddie Foy and Has Been in Everything with a Touch of Fun in It From Shakespeare to Vaudeville, Is Selecting Company

CHARLES FRANCE, admittedly an unusually capable comedy producer, has been engaged by Vogue Film, Inc., to direct its first company.

The studio on South Pasadena boulevard in Los Angeles, formerly used by Lubin, will house the activities of Producer France and his comedians. Mr. France was born into comedy. He made his first stage appearance at an early age and has been seen in everything with a touch of fun in it, from Shakespeare to vaudeville and back again. As head of the comedy producing staff of the Edison studios, he established an enviable record.

Recently he has been directing Eddie Foy at the Keystone studios.

"The old motto of 'laughs for laughs' sake' has failed as a comedy guide," Producer France recently commented. "The public is intelligent and will not laugh just because a director of comedy thinks they should, unless there is a legitimate reason. Comedy production is an art in itself. Fun is much more difficult to 'register' on the screen than it is on the speaking stage."

There is much speculation as to the personnel of the comedians, and announcement is expected shortly from Producer France. Mutual will release Vogue comedies.

Vim Comedies From Melies for General Release

New Brand of Fun-making Subjects Are One Reelers, Issued Every Friday, Featuring Bobbie Burns, Who Made His Debut as an Acrobatic Comedian in Vaudeville; Walt Stull, Who Began His Theatrical Career in Stock in Philadelphia, and Are Directed by Louis Burstein, Maker of Wizard Comedies

A NEW comedy on the program of the General Film Company is a one-reel Vim, every Friday. This announcement has been received with more than ordinary interest in the world of pictures because a new brand of film on the General Film program is by no means a frequent occurrence.

The Melies Manufacturing Company, for whom the Vim pictures are being produced, have secured Louis Burstein as director-general. It was Burstein who helped in the formation of the New York Motion Picture Company with Adam Kessel, Jr., and Charles C. Baumann. Until disposing of his interests in that company, Mr. Burstein was quarter owner, secretary and vice-president.

With the Reliance Company Mr. Burstein once more was organizing producer and during the early days of Reliance productions he was in full charge.

Popularity of Burstein's Comedies

The popularity gained by Wizard comedies released through the World Film Corporation can also be directly attributed to Mr. Burstein.

"For years I was baffled by the problems of how to produce good comedies," declares Mr. Burstein, "for producing good comedies is a problem. Vim Comedies are the result of all my experiences and studies.

"First of all, I insist that every one of our comedies shall have a plot. This can be done even with slapstick comedies. Secondly, our comedies must be free from anything suggesting vulgarity. The third essential demands that we hire only the best of talent and spare no expense in the making of the film. Stinting in the matter of production is penny wise and pound foolish."

Careers of Burns and Stull

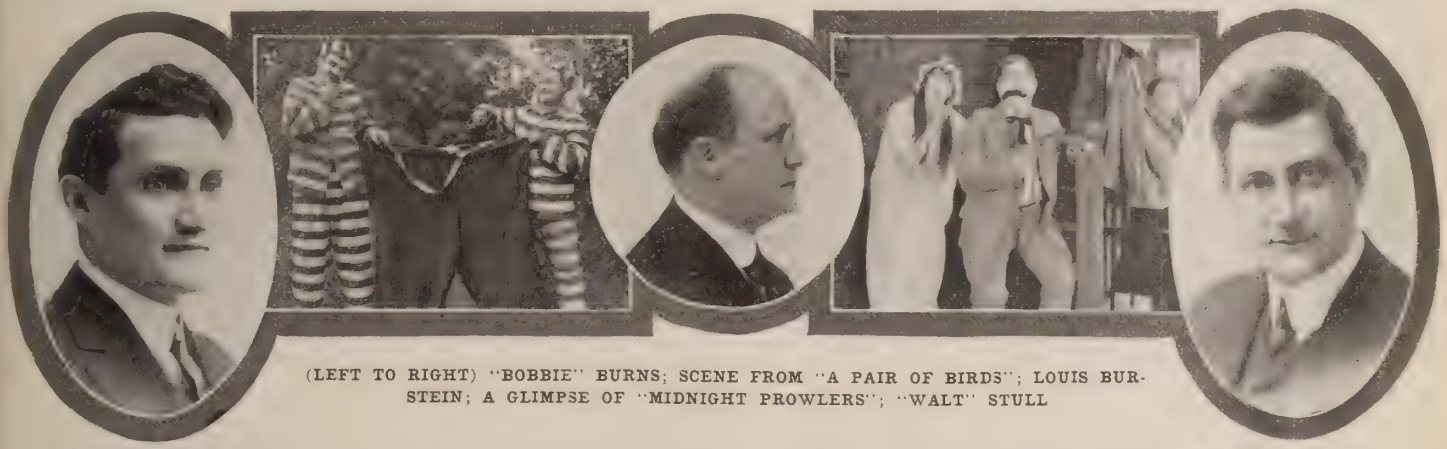
The personnel of the cast is headed by "Bobbie" Burns and "Walt" Stull, who will be remembered chiefly for their work as creators of the "Pokes and Jabbs" series.

Bobbie Burns made his footlight debut as an acrobatic comedian in vaudeville. Then he played for three seasons in the original "Babes in Toyland" company and later accepted an engagement in the "Wizard of Oz" company. Burns finally turned his talents to the field of moving pictures, appearing first with Selig and later with Lubin.

It was while there that he first met "Walt" Stull. The latter had begun his theatrical career in stock, starting in 1894 in Philadelphia with the Forepaugh Stock Company. He left the Forepaugh company to accept an engagement as leading stock man at the Girard Avenue theatre, Philadelphia. There he remained for many years until attracted by an offer to go on the road as the co-star of Emma Bunting, followed by several seasons as the juvenile in a dramatic company headed by Creston Clark.

Finally Stull decided to go in business for himself, and in 1907 formed the Walter H. Stull Stock Company which, after two successful seasons disbanded when Stull accepted an attractive ocer from the Lubin Company and transferred his efforts from the footlights to the screen.

Vim Players in Florida



Burns and Stull were next author-directors with the Reliance. Here they met Mr. Burstein. The three put their heads together and decided to try their skill at creating a new line of comedy. Vim Comedies are the result.

Ethel Burton, ingenue, "Spook" Hanson, formerly a clown at the Hippodrome, Edna Reynolds, a stock favorite, "Babe" Hardy, a three hundred and fifty pounder, are leading members of the "Pokes and Jabbs" array. Director-General Burstein is at present negotiating with several other favorites.

By next week Burns and Stull with their company, will leave New York for Florida, which will be the winter headquarters of the Vim players.

More than a dozen of these new "Pokes and Jabbs" series are already completed and ready. "The Midnight Prowlers" is the title of the first release. Mr. and Mrs. Jabbs have been frightened by the report of burglars in the neighborhood and, unknown to each other, each has hired a detective. The release following "The Midnight Prowlers" is entitled "A Pair of Birds," and deals with Pokes and Runt, who are in jail. Though they escape from prison, after many mishaps, they are finally glad to surrender to the guards.

On November 26, "Pressing Business," the third release will make its appearance. A man sends his one and only suit of clothes to the tailor. While they are at the tailor's he stays in bed, but the tailor's shop burns down while his one suit is there. Comedy aplenty is furnished in his efforts to get another suit.

PREPARE FOR RECEPTION TO ROTHAPFEL IN NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans, La., Oct. 23.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the reception of S. L. Rothapfel, of New York, known as one of America's most successful exhibitors, who is touring the country under the auspices of the Rothapfel-Mutual Tour. Mr. Rothapfel was to have arrived in New Orleans Monday night from Atlanta, but Atlanta has been eliminated from his itinerary, which will put him in the Crescent City Sunday night, allowing him a longer stay here.

A committee of local exhibitors and exchange men, headed by Ross Hardenbrook, manager of the New Orleans office of Mutual, will meet him at the L. and N. station and escort him to his apartments at Hotel Grunewald.

He is to be taken over the city in an automobile party. Monday night an elaborate banquet is planned for the midnight hour in Hotel Grunewald. Hundreds of invitations have been sent out. Through the courtesy of Herman Fichtenberg, the orchestra from the Alamo theatre will play at the banquet. Professional talent from the bills at local theatres will entertain.

PAUL GILMORE IN "ROSEMARY" FOR QUALITY-METRO

Paul Gilmore, the dramatic leading man, who recently finished work in "The Penitentes" for the Triangle, has joined the Quality-Metro forces and is starred with Marguerite Snow in "Rosemary," a forthcoming production on the regular Metro program. Miss Snow, who has been starred in two previous Quality-Metro productions with Francis X. Bushman, "The Silent Voice" and "The Second in Command," will hereafter have the stellar roles in her own company. After completing "Rosemary," which is a five-part picturization of the famous play by the same name, Miss Snow, accompanied by her company, will come East to make Quality-Metro features.

While Mr. Gilmore has appeared as a star on Broadway in a revival of "The Three Musketeers," he is perhaps best known throughout the South and West, where he is a popular favorite and matinee idol.

Another treat in store for motion picture patrons will be the appearance of Frank Bacon, the famous character actor, in support of Miss Snow and Mr. Gilmore.

Estabrook's Way to Success Indicated by Arrow Film

Company Points Out Advisability of Leaving Stage to March Along Road of Greater Popularity Under Screen Banner, and He Accepts Stellar Role for Pathe Release

HOWARD ESTABROOK has been signed by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, of 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, to play a stellar role in the forthcoming Arrow-Pathé releases. Mr. Shallenberger's arrangements with Mr. Estabrook include the latter's exclusive services.

For this reason Mr. Estabrook has resigned from the cast of "Miss Information," in which he has been playing opposite Elsie Janis. He cannot leave the cast of that popular production until November 6. But from that time on Mr. Estabrook will not be seen in the flesh except as he goes to and from his home to the Arrow studios in Yonkers.

Mr. Estabrook showed that he was not afraid of really hard work, even if he is a motion picture star. For the last two weeks, while engaged in eight performances a week with Miss Janis, he nevertheless has reported daily to Director Howell Hansel for screen work. Except on Wednesdays and Saturdays, when matinee performances interfered, he has put in ten hours a day before the camera.

More than one hundred scenes were filmed by Mr. Hansel last week in the Arrow plant. These included practically all the interiors in which Mr. Estabrook appears in the first Arrow-Pathé production, except a few wherein he is seen with a noted woman star with whom he will be associated in these new Arrow photoplay productions.

Through the kindness of Samuel Untermyer, the famous lawyer, the magnificent Untermyer estate, Greystone, has been put at Mr. Hansel's disposal for many of the exterior scenes in this first Arrow film. The splendors of the Untermyer estate are known to all motorists who travel the road to Albany. It truly is a place of "magnificent distances."

Within the next fortnight the executive offices of the Arrow Film Corporation will be moved to the Yonkers plant at 120 School street. Mr. Shallenberger, because of his extensive motion picture interests, will maintain an office for himself downtown, but the Arrow office and studio work will be done in Yonkers after November 8.

Fine Arts Studio a Marriage Atelier for Dorothy Gish

Actress Will Be Joined in "Wedlock" (Only As Part of Day's Camera-Facing in the Picture Workshop), with Owen Moore, Husband of Mary Pickford

Los Angeles, Oct. 23

THE Jane Grey Fine Arts Films Company, filming "Mother of Seven," under the direction of C. A. and S. M. Anderson, are this week spending several days at Sunland, Cal., where an entire Mexican village has been built and will be used in battle scenes.

A special train carried five hundred or more members of the United States militia and navy from San Diego to Santa Ann, this week, where for three days the boys of Uncle Sam took part in battle scenes for the coming Triangle offering, "The Scarlet Band." These scenes were made under the direction of William Christy Cabanne, assisted by Lieutenant Muirhead and officers of the naval reserves. In many of the scenes J. H. Hogan, well-known aviator, soared over the "battle fields."

Elliott Dexter, recently with Nance O'Neil in "The Lily," Marie Doro in "Diplomacy" and other well known stage successes, has been cast by Manager of Production Frank E. Woods, of the Fine Arts Films studio, to play opposite Lillian Gish in her next subject, which will be of the nature of a costume play.

The time of this is in the early part of the eighteenth century, and the opening and closing scenes are laid in Paris. Other members of this cast will be Olga Grey, the Hungarian actress; Ray Wells, stock lead; A. D. Sears, and Howard Gaye.

Now comes the announcement that Dorothy Gish is soon to be wedded. The ceremony will be performed before the camera, and the man in the case will be Owen Moore, husband of Mary Pickford. The minister will not be an official, and the event will not be celebrated as a reality. This will be Miss Gish's first wedding since she made her debut in films, five years ago.

The Fine Arts Films Company has purchased motion picture rights on the stage play "Jim Bludso," which was an adaptation from the John Hay poem.

Lasky Scholarship for College Scenario Course

Trip to Coast and Back and Liberal Compensation Awaits Undergraduate Writing Best Script in Department Just Added to Curriculum of Columbia University

TO further encourage the study of the art of photo-dramatics among the students of Columbia University, which announces that it has just opened a special course of lectureship in motion pictures and their making, the Lasky Feature Play company, through its executive head, Samuel Goldfish, has offered a scholarship to the university.

It has been accepted by Victor O. Freeburg, professor in charge of the new department, and the student who, in the opinion of William C. DeMille, chief of the Lasky scenario staff, writes the best original photoplay during the college term, will receive, all expenses paid, a trip from New York to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal., and return.

If suitable for commercial production the play will be produced by Lasky with a star in the leading role and released through Paramount Pictures Corporation. Equitable compensation will be made to the author.

The decision of Columbia University to start a photo-dramatic department under the direction of Professor Freeburg is of great interest to the industry. Through the efforts of Professor George Pierce Baker, of Harvard, many talented young dramatists, including Edward Sheldon, Percy Mackaye, Frederick Ballard and others, have been trained to write for the legitimate field. Mr. Goldfish in his letter says that the photoplay producers of the future will look to the colleges for material.

SELIG BABY IN ONE REEL HEART INTEREST STORY

Jean Fraser, the two-year-old Selig baby, who scores in the Selig Red Seal Play, "Sweet Alyssum," released through V-L-S-E on November 15, has been working recently for the first time under Thomas Santschi's direction, in a one-reel heart interest story, "Orders."

FORREST, PHILADELPHIA, EXTENDS "NATION" RUN

Philadelphia, Oct. 26.

So large has been the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" that the Forrest theatre has extended its original run of six weeks. This photo drama has broken all records at the Forrest.

The activities of the colored people, which caused some annoyance in the first few weeks of the production, have ceased, with the exception of a few spasmodic resolutions every little while.

No further breaches of the peace have occurred and none are anticipated by the management. This week 350 members of the City Club, a civic organization of Philadelphia, attended in a body.

Dr. Daniel M. Hoyt and Prof. William H. Meams, chairman of the Drama League, attended the performance and expressed themselves as highly pleased with the picture.

GEORGE KLEINE WILL MOVE SOON TO UPTOWN STUDIO

George Kleine's executive headquarters will remove to the big uptown studio at 805 to 813 East 175th street, New York, on or about November 1. The office at 11 East 14th street will be closed, all departments, including the auditing, advertising and scenario, removing to the new address.

SELIG REGISTERS RED SEAL AS A TRADEMARK

The application of the Selig Polyscope Company for the registration of the Red Seal trademark for the Selig feature plays released through V-L-S-E has been granted by the United States patent office.

JOE FARNHAM'S PHOTOGRAPH OF A BATTLEFIELD IN EUROPE AND THE LUBIN REPRODUCTION IN "THE RIGHTS OF MAN"—WHICH IS THE ORIGINAL?

WHEN some few weeks ago Jack Pratt, Lubin director, began the production of Louis Reeves Harrison's five-reel Lubin V-L-S-E release, "The Rights of Man," he was confronted with the usual amount of problems which are thrust upon the director, but in this particular case, it seemed that just a wee bit more than the average attention was to be necessary to build the proper sets and select the locations for the staging of the replica scenes of the battlefields in Europe.

Accordingly, Director Pratt and Art Director Farnham of the Lubin Company began to get the proper information. It was hard to secure the necessary data and the search had about been given up, when it was recalled that Joe Farnham, now of the Lubin company, had been in France for four months and knew the real conditions.

Mr. Pratt found, not only the knowledge desired but in addition a collection of seventeen hundred still pictures, which Farnham had taken himself and which gave vivid views of just what he sought—the graves, the wounded and dying and the dead on the fields of battle and shell destroyed buildings.

Perhaps foremost among the many extraordinary replicas of the war zone, is the one showing the grave of three hundred French and German soldiers in the middle of a plowed field at Mondemont, France. It was at this position that the Chateau changed hands four times, twice occupied by the Germans and twice by the French in what is perhaps written in history as one of the most fierce hand-to-hand encounters of the war.

Director Pratt has reproduced this scene in a most remarkable way, as is shown by comparison of the photographs, one at Betzwood, Pa., and the other at Mondemont, France.

In all, through the five reels there are fifteen reproductions of this kind.

CHICAGO REEL FELLOWS HOLD DINNER

Chicago, Oct. 25.

The Reel Fellows met for their October dinner in the balcony of the Movie Inn last Wednesday. After a cracking good dinner and its attendant gossip were disposed of, the serious business of the evening was discussed.

It was announced that the November meeting of the club would take place in the new rooms of the organization, situated on the floor above the Movie Inn.

Donald J. Bell donated fifty dollars toward new clubroom furniture, and E. A. Hamburg is to give the pictures and wall decorations. A committee of three was appointed to counsel with the management of the inn regarding decorations.

M. G. Watkins was elected secretary to fill the place of W. D. Hildreth, resigned.

GEORGE SPINK JOINS LUBIN'S SCRIPT STAFF

LOUISE RUTTER, SUPPORTING DALY, IS BALTIMORE GIRL

Louise Rutter, who is supporting Arnold Daly in Pathés Ashton-Kirk series, was born in Baltimore. Her first engagement was in "The Bonnie Brier Bush," followed by others in "The College Widow," "The Heir to the Hoorah," "The Man of the Hour," and "The Devil," with George Arliss

She first appeared with Mr. Daly in "The Sins of Society" and "Know Thyself." An engagement with Ethel Barrymore followed and then one with William Gillette. Recent plays in which she has appeared are "Passers By" and "A Rich Man's Son," in which she acquitted herself well.

Miss Rutter is the leading woman in the Ashton-Kirk pictures, which have elicited much favorable comment from the reviewers.

New Talent Floats on Prosperity Tide to Horsley

Jefferson Drifts to Scenario Department with a Sea of Photoplays to His Credit, and Sprenger Sails under Flapping Sheets of Publicity

L. V. JEFFERSON, who since last April has written and sold nearly one hundred photoplays, has been added to David Horsley's scenario staff, which also includes Charles Mortimer Peck and Theodora Harris. Among Mr. Jefferson's plays have been produced are "Both Sides of Life," "The Grail," "The College Orphan," "The Fadist," featuring Henrietta Crossman," "A Splendid Crook," with Henry B. Warner; "Cupid's Thumb Print," "The Temptation of Adam," and many others of equal note.

For Mr. Horsley he is responsible for the scenario in which Irving Cummings makes his first appearance as a David Horsley star. He is also at work writing the plots and business for the "Stanley's Adventures in Africa" series, which is now being carried on in the Centaur features under the direction of Frank Montgomery.

David Horsley has appointed Bert Von Klein as his business manager of his studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Von Klein has been with Mr. Horsley since July as assistant to Director Frank E. Montgomery in the production of "The Rajah's Sacrifice," "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," and the "Stanley's Adventures in Africa" series, the latter now being released under the Centaur Feature brand name.

IRVING CUMMINGS

Previous to that time he had fourteen years of legitimate stage work, and since 1912 he has been in the motion picture business as director or assistant director. Mr. Von Klein assumed charged of his new duties this week.

After being out of the cast of "The Blood of Our Brothers," Margaret Gibson makes her reappearance as a David Horsley player in "Could a Man Do More?" the three-reel Centaur star feature with Crane Wilbur which will be released on the Mutual program, November 24. Miss Gibson's first appearance with Mr. Horsley was in "The Protest," the Centaur star feature release for September 29.

In "Could a Man Do More?" which is now being made at the Horsley studios in Los Angeles, Miss Gibson has one of the biggest and most effective parts. Miss Gibson before joining Mr. Horsley was with the New York Motion Picture Company. One of her excellent characterizations was that of Amy in "The Coward," in which she supported Frank Keenan.

C. O. Sprenger, a newspaper man who for many years was on the staff of the Denver Times and the Rocky Mountains News, and who for the past five years has been doing general publicity work and advertisement writing in California, has been placed in charge of the publicity work for the David Horsley interests in Los Angeles.

Public Demands More Helen Series from Universal

Miss Holmes Is Called from "Graft" Rehearsals to Continue in Old Lead, and Jane Novak Is Selected to Take Her Place in New Serial

SO insistent was the demand for the continuation of the Helen series in which Helen Holmes has been playing the leads, that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has decided to continue featuring her in the series.

Director-General McRae at Universal City has already begun rehearsals of the first instalment of "Graft," in which Hobert Henley and Miss Holmes were to be starred, and the receipt by him of a telegram from President Carl Laemmle to continue the Helen Holmes series was received with disappointment as it was planned to start taking the pictures the following day.

JANE NOVAK

Telegrams went back and forth for a day or so, but all to no avail. The Helen Holmes series must be continued, and there was naught left for the Universal City directors to do but to select a new leading lady, and when it is considered that there are over a hundred star actresses at the Universal coast studios, this was no small job.

A list of eligible stars was made up, and the ability of the individual actresses considered thoroughly. After considerable dallying the directors came to the conclusion that on account of her remarkable performance in "The Scarlet Sin," "The Little Brother of the Rich," "Big Bill Brent" and "The Kiss of Dishonor," Jane Novak was chosen for the position.

Jane Novak was at the time it was decided to cast her in "Graft" playing leads in the Bosworth Broadway Universal Features.

Miss Novak has been in pictures but a comparatively short time, but two years and a half, having obtained her first training with the Kalem company, shortly afterwards oging to the Vitagraph company, where she appeared in many of the star productions of that company.

While traveling through California Miss Novak visited Universal City, and was offered a contract with the Universal, which she readily accepted. Prior to her appearance before the camera, Miss Novak was on the legitimate stage, having important roles in "The Girl from Rector's" and "Polly of the Follies."

within the next two weeks she will leave the plant of Essanay for New York to assume her new duties.

Miss Holmes, who made her first mark in Klaw and Erlanger's production of "The Round-Up," in which she played the featured feminine role, was drafted from that production by the film field, because of her work. Her appearance in films was the means of rapid advancement. Essanay contracted with her for appearance with the male stars on their roster.

among the youngest of New York's moving picture favorites. Some times she appears before the curtain and expresses a few amiabilities.

WOUNDED SOLDIER DIRECTS COLORING OF PATHE SUBJECT

It is interesting to note in connection with the four part drama in Pathé color, "The Adventures of a Madcap," that its coloring in the Pathé factories at Vincennes, France, was made possible by a chance happening. The man in charge of the coloring department was fighting at the front when the picture arrived from America. Shortly afterwards he was wounded in the leg, and while convalescing directed the coloring of the picture. He also trained a number of women in the process so that now the work is being as well done as before despite the lack of men.

"The Adventures of a Madcap" was produced by Balboa, and features Jackie Saunders. It will be released by Pathé November 3.

ESSANAY DIRECTOR FILMS 12 PLAYS IN FIFTEEN WEEKS

Joseph Byron Totten, an Essanay director at the head of an Essanay touring company, has returned to the Chicago studios after a fitfeen weeks' trip through the cast, during which he filmed a dozen photoplays, three of which he wrote.

Mr. Totton left the studio last July with a company of twenty people, going directly to his country home and stock farm at Pendleton Hill, Conn., where a daylight studio was hastily constructed. Here he took "The Village Homestead," one of his own scripts, using his own house as the homestead. "The Call of the Sea" and "The Lighthouse by the Sea," the last picture his own, were taken respectively at Block Island, Rhode Island, and at Newport. "Hearts and Roses" was filmed at Westerly, R. I.; "A Mansion of Tragedy" was taken in Boston. and "Boys Will Be Boys" was set, staged and completed in New York City. Other plays were taken in various places along the Atlantic coast.

Mr. Totten came to Essanay for the second time a year ago, leaving David Belasco, on whose producing staff he worked, and dropping the production of "Experience" to take up the offer made him by George K. Spoor, president of the company. Seven years ago he was with the Essanay forces, leaving to take up Broadway productions with Belasco. Mr. Totten wrote the film version of "The Blindness of Virtue."

Ohio's Pro-Censor Exhibitors Ready to Cry 'Enough!'

Instances Cited by Max Stearn, at Columbus Convention, Prove Existence of Real Disgust with Harmful Activities of Legalized State Censorship

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 24.

THE Ohio branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America assembled in convention for a special session at the call of Max Stearn, president of the Ohio branch, No. 1, who received numerous telegrams requesting that the convention be called for the purpose of protesting against the action of the Ohio Board of Censors in rejecting "Hypocrites" and "The Birth of a Nation."

Lem S. Miller of Cincinnati was made temporary chairman of the morning session, which opened at 10 o'clock. He introduced Geo. J. Karb, Mayor of Columbus, who welcomed the exhibitors and said among other things that he favored a national board of censorship, rather than a state board or municipal board.

Max Stearn, president of the league, was next introduced. He gave a resume of the work done by the league, citing the number of obnoxious bills introduced in the last legislature and killed through the efforts of the officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League.

He said that he was of the opinion that the exhibitors of Ohio were ready to give up censorship when a substitute that would be satisfactory to the public was presented. He said also that he hoped that the exchange man and the manufacturer would help to solve this difficult problem.

At the afternoon session Charles Williams, chairman of the Ohio board of censors, Maud Murray Miller, W. R. Wilson and other members of the board made addresses. Many of the exhibitors present had seen "Hypocrites" and were of the opinion that it should be passed by the board.

Those who had seen "The Birth of a Nation" felt that it should also pass. In the evening a banquet and cabaret entertainment was given. John H. Arnold, Lieutenant Governor of Ohio, was the guest of honor. SPERO FILMS FIRST KUKU COMEDY FOR KRITERION RELEASE

Los Angeles, Oct. 25.

The filming of the first Kuku comedy was taken up by the M. E. Spero Company during the past week at the old Masterpiece studio, which has been leased. The first subject to be made is entitled "Sammy vs. Cupid," in which Sammy Burns is featured with Dot Farley playing the feminine lead. G. P. Hamilton, late maker of comedies for the United Program, is in charge of the direction.

Sammy Burns is particularly well known to patrons of vaudeville houses, having played on the principal circuits of America, England, and the continent for the past ten years, appearing in the vaudeville team of Burns and Fulton. Their acts were played over the Orpheum and Keith time, where they entertained thousands. Miss Farley is very well and favorably known in screen circles.

SAMMY BURNS

The company will make at least one single reel comedy each week, and will have other companies at work in the near future. It is to be decided later whether they will make all comedies, or comedy and drama. Their subjects will be release on the new Kriterion program.

FITZMAURICE USES ELABORATE SETS IN "AT BAY," PATHE DRAMA

George Fitzmaurice, who is producing George Scarborough's "At Bay" for Pathé, has been making use of some elaborate sets in his picture. A cabaret scene in which were a large number of persons and where an unusually deep set was used Fitzmaurice's cast, by the way, is one of the highest salaried, which has ever been used in a picture. Florence Reed is his leading woman, and she is supported by Frank Sheridan, Charles Waldron, Lyster Chambers and De Witt Jennings, not one of whom but is a real Broadway favorite.

Excellent progress has been made on the picture which will soon be completed and placed upon the Gold Rooster program.

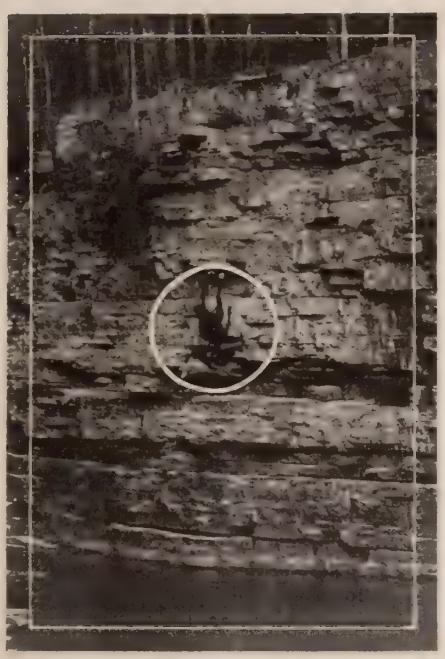
Broadway Star and Screen Favorite in "Comrade John" for Pathe Gold Rooster Series

"COMRADE JOHN," the Pathé Gold Rooster Play for release October 29, features William Elliott, one of Broadway's best-known stars, as well as Ruth Roland. This, by the way, is Miss Roland's first appearance in a Gold Rooster Play.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT

Mr. Elliott is an unusually versatile man, being musician, painter, writer, producing manager and above all, actor. He first appeared before the public as a boy violinist and later was with a number of stock companies playing juvenile roles. He had hardly attained manhood before he secured an engagement with Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon. Later he was with Mary Shaw in "Ghosts," and then with Robert Hilliard. He considers the great training of his career to have been obtained when he was with Richard Mansfield in "The Merchant of Venice," "Beaucaire," "Beau Brummel," "Heidelberg," "The Scarlet Letter," and "Richard the Third."

For some time he was associated with David Belasco in "The Rose of the Rancho," "The Grand Army Man," and "The Music Master." His work in these productions stamped him as among the greatest of the young actors of America.



Following his marriage to the younger daughter of David Belasco, Mr. Elliott determined to devote himself to producing plays instead of acting them. "The Governor's Lady," and "The Drums of Oude," were two successes identified with his name.

Ruth Roland has been a picture "headliner" for several years. Her work in the big Pathé series "Who Pays?" was everywhere admired. The ability she displays in this, her first Gold Rooster Play, shows that she is easily one of the first of motion picture actresses.

"Comrade John" is from the book by Samuel Merwin and H. K. Webster, and was produced by Balboa.

"I'M Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," adapted by Gilson Willets from the Feist song hit, "I Didn't Raise My Boy To Be a Soldier," will be released on Monday, December 13, as a Selig Red Seal Play in four acts.

THE DEATH FALL OF DON JOSE IN WILLIAM FOX'S "CARMEN," WHICH COST THE ACTOR A BROKEN LEG

Harry Mestayer, the stage star, will play the leading role, that of Jerry Warrington, who felt duty call and left mother and sweetheart to go on the firing line in defense of his country. Mr. Mestayer will be supported by Eugenie Besserer and a cast of Broadway favorites.

Gilson Willets, inspired by the popular song, has written a preachment on the horrors of war and graphically picturizes the sacrifices of wives, mothers and sweethearts when Mars, the god of war, holds sway.

"I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier" will be released through V-L-S-E.

A special musical score is being prepared by a composer to be issued simultaneously with the photoplay.

STIRRING STORY OF KENTUCKY IN "BLOT ON THE SHIELD"

On a proud Kentucky colonel's insistence that his only child—a beautiful young daughter—sacrifice her life, if necessary, to uphold the honor of the family, is founded the story of "The Blot on the Shield," a two part Flying "A" drama for release in the regular Mutual Program.

For the presentation of this stirring story of Kentucky, Virginia Rich was assigned the role of the daughter of the South, supported by Dick Le Reno, as her father and Walter Spencer as "William Copeland," her sweetheart.

SELIG TO OFFER DAVIS SUBJECT WITH BESSIE EYTON

Charles Belmont Davis wrote "The White Light of Publicity," to be released as a Selig drama in one reel, Saturday, November 13.

It deals with the plot of an actress, a press agent and a newspaper woman to make capital of a wealthy society man. How the newspaper woman came to a realization of the wrong done, and how Cupid had his innings, embraces an interesting story. Bessie Eyton plays a leading role.

Los Angeles, Oct. 23.

The popularity of "The Broken Coin" serial in southern California territory has caused the need of an additional print for the Los Angeles exchange. Seventy-six houses are now showing this serial, and it is anticipated by the additional print it will be necessary to add fully thirty-three per cent. more business.

All U. S. Locales Reproduced at Rolfe-Metro Studio

Miniature Settings of Scenery Characteristic of Various Parts of the Country Will Do Away with Painted Back Drops for Exteriors

THE United States in miniature, an innovation to be used in obtaining scenic effects, is now under construction at the Rolfe-Metro studio in West Sixty-first street, New York. When completed it will be possible to photograph exteriors, absolutely correct in topography and vegetation, of any locale in this country.

The miniature United States is being built on a platform fourteen feet deep, which will eventually extend around the walls of the entire mammoth studio. There are mountains, plains, caves, railroad tunnels, lakes, rivers, creeks, bridges, trees, ferns, small towns and even some of the prominent cities of the United States will be faithfully reproduced.

On the wall, back of the miniature panorama, canvas is stretched upon which is painted an appropriate background to lend the essential distant effect. The miniature is to be permanent and is being installed at a great expense.

E. J. Shulter, the technical director at the Rolfe-Metro studio, conceived the idea of the miniature several years ago, and has been working it out ever since. He says it is going to prove invaluable in obtaining desired effects through opened doors and windows, showing exterior settings.

Heretofore, such effects have been made through the aid of painted drops, which Mr. Shulter says no longer deceives the average motion picture patron. It will also be possible to obtain views from the window of a train, and similar effects, without going out of the studio. This will not only add to the artistic value of Rolfe-Metro pictures, but will prove a saving in the cost of production.

At the New York City end of the miniature the principal building will be the Grand Central station. Other railroad stations in Los Angeles, Denver, New Orleans and other cities, will be reproduced. There will be miniature motor boats, steamboats and yachts, going under their own power, in lakes, rivers and bays. It will be possible to produce snow, rain and wind storms, and even a torpedo. In the first section of the miniature, now completed, approximately two hundred miles of the country is shown. There is a practical, miniature train, one of the few imports that has reached this country recently from Germany, that traverses through the countryside, skirting mountain sides, passing through villages, tunnels, over bridges and around seemingly dangerous curves. It was necessary to take out the electric equipment in the engine and install steam, to obtain the right effect.

Edgar Jones, the director, has assisted Mr. Shulter in constructing the miniature and Mr. Jones used a few experimental flashes of one section of it in "The Woman Pays," the production he directed in which Valli Valli is starred.

"JEANNE DORE" WILL IMMORTALIZE GREAT ACTRESS OF FRANCE FOR POSTERITY

JEANNE DORE (MME. BERNHARDT) SEES THE EXECUTION OF HER SON FROM THE WINDOW OF HER HOME

ONE of the big productions of the current screen season is the appearance of Sarah Bernhardt in the picturization of "Jeanne Dore," adapted by Mr. Louis Mercanton from the play by Tristan Bernard, and which is being released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

This picture was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Mercanton, who was responsible for the two other pictures in which Madame Bernhardt has appeared, "Queen Elizabeth" and "Adrienne Le Couvreur."

One of the attractions of the new film is its perpetuation of the facial expression of this famous actress of the present age.

"Jeanne Dore" was the play in which this great actress was appearing at the Sarah Bernhardt theatre, in Paris, when she was compelled to undergo her recent operation.

She considers this story her favorite of recent years, in that it offers her the fullest possible scope for the projection of her own individuality.

The play is a typical Bernhardt story, the kind we would expect to see her in, and offers her great opportunities for the wonderful portrayal of her art. It was given in detail in a recent issue of Motion Picture News.

Madame Bernhardt appears in over a hundred scenes in this production. She took the greatest possible interest in the details of the scenes, and this enthusiasm is reflected in her work before the camera. Never, it is asserted, has she acted more magnificently than in "Jeanne Dore." This is remarkable when it is taken into consideration that the picture was taken since the operation. Owing to her inability to walk with her artificial leg, all the scenes show her either sitting or standing. It is the first production in which she has been seen since her operation; in fact, it is said that she went direct from the hospital to the film studio.

The principal artistes who appear in "Jeanne Dore" were with her in the original production at the Sarah Bernhardt theatre. Mlle. Seylor again assumes the role of Mme. Tissot, Mlle. Costa plays the part of Louise, and M. Raymond Bernhard also plays his old part of Jacques Dore.

LASKY'S "CARMEN" IN ST. LOUIS IN CHARGE OF A WOMAN

The Princes theatre, Grand and Olive streets, St. Louis, has broken all records for advance sale of seats for the Lasky production of "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar, which begins an engagement at the Princess on October 29.

Hattie B. Gooding is in charge of the feature, which is her first venture in the photoplay business, as she has confined her activities to operatic productions that come to St. Louis.

"QUO VADIS" DOES BIG BUSINESS IN HAMILTON, CANADA

George Kleine's "Quo Vadis" packed the Hamilton, Canada, Grand Opera House for three days last week. "Quo Vadis" was given a modest billing throughout the city, and played October 14, 15 and 16 to almost $1,000 at popular admission prices.

"Quo Vadis" was released in the spring of 1913, and has played Hamilton return dates, as well as every other city of its size, in both the United States and Canada.

JAMES J. CORBETT, RAVER STAR, HAS HAD VARIED CAREER

No performer on the stage has had a more interesting career than James J. Corbett, who appears in the leading role of "Kid Garvey," the gentleman pugilist in Augustus Thomas' famous play, "The Other Girl," which is the inaugural production of the Raver Film Corporation.

It was William A. Brady who discovered the theatrical talent of Mr. Corbett, following closely upon his being crowned heavyweight champion of the world. His first stage appearance was in the title role of "Gentleman Jack," followed by "The Naval Cadet," "The Adventurer" and "Around New York in Eighty Minutes," in all of which vehicles Corbett was starred. Next the late Henry B. Harris affixed the star's signature to a contract which gave him the title role in "Cashel Byron's Profession," by George Bernard Shaw. The next year H. H. Frazee featured him in "Facing the Music," which was in turn followed by "Home Again." At this time vaudeville began making its deep inroads into the older form of stage entertainment, and Corbett was, of course, one of the first to be lured away.

JAMES J. CORBETT

The Raver star found opportunity also to serve as interlocuter with George "Honey Boy" Evans' Minstrels for a season, and also to spend a couple of years in the then popular stock companies of the Proctor organization.

For his present picture appearance, Mr. Corbett has been surrounded with a special cast. Becky Bruce, in the character of Catherine Fulton, is his leading lady.

"The Other Girl" entails a cast of more than four hundred. Director of Productions Winter is well under way with the exterior scenes, and will shortly be prepared to commence his indoor studio work.

KALEM GIVES FIVE SOUTHERN GIRLS TRIP TO NEW YORK

The Misses Marie Bain, Gladys Thornton, Jessie Ruth Snow, Mary Lee House and Mary Lee Miller, whose presence in New York recently was due to the fact that they won a popularity contest, conducted by the Metropolis, a Jacksonville, Fla., daily, took part in a three-part drama. "The Money Gulf," produced by Kalem.

Although a trip to the big city was in itself sufficient to make every girl in Jacksonville determined to prove herself one of the five most popular misses residing in that city, the opportunity to take part in a photoplay was the stronger attraction. The contest was strenuously contested from the outset and thousands of votes were polled.

Before leaving for New York, the winners were cast for their respective roles in "The Money Gulf," by Harry Millarde, who is producing this feature at the Kalem studios in Jacksonville.

An enjoyable event was a trip to Kalem's studios where one of the episodes in "The Ventures of Marguerite," feature Marguerite Courtot, was under way, and the visitors not only had the pleasure of meeting her but were also impressed by Producing Director John E. Mackin for a magnificent ballroom scene just about to be staged. Later, the girls took part in the conservatory scene of this "Venture."

BARTLETT, AMERICAN DIRECTOR, NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH

Charles Bartlett, director of the American (Mutual) Santa Barbara studios, barely escaped death last week when preparing for making some scenes in a location for the forthcoming Mutual release entitled "Drifting."

The scenario called for some lively action near a river, and the director, Tom Middleton, his cameraman, and his assistants had started across the Santa Clara river on the search for background, when Mr. Bartlett began to sink in the sands. Middleton tried to reach the director with his hands, but nearly was caught himself in the treacherous ground.

Finally, a rope was thrown to the sinking man from a huge sycamore tree, and after a couple of hard pulls, Mr. Bartlett was released.

The director recently burned an entire village for "Out of the Ashes," a two reel Mutual release in the regular Mutual program, October 25.

REMARKABLE BALLROOM SCENE IN "VANITY FAIR"

"Vanity Fair," the great Edison masterpiece starring Mrs. Fiske, which was recently completed at the Bronx studios of the Edison Company, contains an elaborate ballroom scene which for size and magnificence is said to be unrivaled. The Edison Company made immense preparations for this big scene, renting innumerable furniture "props" and costumes of the period. The description of Lady Richardson's ball in "Vanity Fair" is frequently referred to as one of the greatest bits of prose in the English language. To visualize this beautiful scene as Thackeray would have wished to see it, was the ambition of everyone interested in its staging, from director to "props."

The entire Edison studio was used for making this mammoth scene.

Essanay Begins Action Against Alleged Dupers

Company Brings Suit Against Pierson Film Laboratories and the Mt. Vernon Motion Picture Company—Levi and Lewis Arrested on Charges of Violating Copyright Law

VIGOROUS action has been instituted by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company against the alleged duplicators of several of the most popular films issued by this company. Through its attorney, LeRoy D. Ball, of 290 Broadway, New York, the Essanay company is making every effort to run to earth those who have been stealing the Essanay features, and not only bring them to justice, but to stop the wholesale duplications which have been going on.

Essanay has brought suit against Harold C. Pierson, Paul M. Pierson, David Eisenstein and the Pierson Film Laboratories, Inc., and Paul R. Hedrick, J. Blair Smith, individually, and as co-partners doing business under the name of the Mt. Vernon Motion Picture Company.

Also on September 2, writs of seizure were issued by Judge Hough of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and under these writs, United States marshals made seizures at the Mt. Vernon Motion Picture Company at Mt. Vernon, New York, and at the Pierson Film Laboratories at Ossining, New York, on the same date the writs were issued.

Seizures were also made on September 2, under an execution to the Sheriff, at the office of Abraham G. Levi, doing business at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York. Numerous pieces of alleged duped positive film were seized, and there were found in the possession of Levi alleged duped positives of the Essanay productions, "The Champion" and "A Night Out."

In the suit instituted against the Mt. Vernon people, several pieces of alleged duped negatives were seized, and the company admitted having burned their negative of "The Champion," just prior to the seizure.

A. George Levi and Philip Lewis of the Lewis Pennant Features, doing business at 110 West Fortieth street, New York, were arrested on charges of violating the copyright act. On September 29, indictments were handed down against them, and each was released on $1,000 bail.

HORSLEY SELECTS WILBUR SUBJECT FOR NOVEMBER CENTAUR

Having finished the production of "The Blood of Our Brothers," the Centaur star feature release on the Mutual program for October, David Horsley has started work on the November release of this brand. He has selected a scenario entitled "Could a Man Do More?" written by Crane Wilbur, who was also responsible for "The Blood of Our Brothers."

Besides being the author of "Could a Man Do More?" Mr. Wilbur will play the leading part. This character is a minister in a little Southern town, the period being immediately after the Civil war. While the moving spirit in it is a minister, the story does not possess any particular religious tone. Its moral teaches brotherly-love. The minister is not of any particular denomination or faith, but a sort of leader, a man of great attainments. He is one of those free thinking preachers who refuses to confine himself to wearing apparel of distinct clerical cut.

Through the machinations of a younger brother entrusted to his care upon the death of his mother, and whom he attempts to shield, he becomes the target of abuse from his flock and is finally driven from the town. The balance rights itself, however, and in the end the minister is restored to his former status.

The production is now being made under the direction of R. B. Broadwell, who is the latest director to join Mr. Horsley's staff. It is to be in three reels and will be released November 24.

BIG SCENES IN "NEDRA," NEW GOLD ROOSTER PLAY

"Nedra," the Gold Rooster play adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's well known book, has now been finished by Edward José, and put down for release on the Pathé program for Friday, November 12.

Thousands of "extras" were used, and there are a number of big scenes, among them a battle between hordes of savages. Many of the scenes were staged in the Bahamas in the midst of perfect tropical backgrounds.

A cast including George Probert, Fania Marinoff, Margaret Greene and Craufurd Kent, have done excellent work in the picture.

AUGUSTA ANDERSON, FORMER BELASCO STAR, BEAUTY CONTEST WINNER

Augusta Anderson, known as one of the prettiest women on the stage or before the camera, has definitely resolved to devote her artistic energies in future to film productions exclusively.

David Belasco had Miss Anderson under his direction in stage plays for several years, starring her in "The Good Little Devil," "The Governor's Lady," "Years of Discretion," "The Man Inside," and other productions.

The Biograph Company featured Miss Anderson as its leading lady for over a year, and she successfully appeared in numerous one and two-reel productions that made her exceedingly popular with motion picture theatre goers. So pleased are the "fans" with Miss Anderson's beauty and personality that whenever she enters a popularity contest she is generally the winner.

Miss Anderson's repertoire includes vampire parts, but she is at her best in society dramas demanding grace of action, elegance of style and intensity of impersonation.

"A MAN'S MAKING" WILL BE FINISHED SOON BY LUBIN

Director Jack Pratt, with Richard Buhler, Rosetta Brice and the balance of his company, who have been at Block Island for the past few weeks on the production of Pratt's own story, "A Man's Making," have returned to Philadelphia.

FRANCE PICKS PLAYERS FOR VOGUE COMEDIES

Production of vogue comedies has begun at the Vogue studios in Los Angeles. Charles France, producer, has gathered his first batch of comedians.

"Russ" Powell, who played in "The Chocolate Soldier" and "The Madcap Duchess," which enjoyed a long run at the Globe, New York, has joined the company.

Priscilla Dean has been engaged as the comedy ingenue. Miss Dean began with child parts in the companies of Joseph Jefferson and James A. Hearne.

Lillian Brown Leighton will essay the grotesque comedy parts, and William Scott will play the light comedy parts. He appeared with Kelcey and Shannon, and later with Maude Adams in "Quality Street." Producer France will announce other members of the company later.

WEST, OF EDISON, NOT THE WILLIAM WEST REPORTED DEAD

Since the death of a motion picture player of the same name, William West, that veteran and able character Edison player, has been greatly embarassed through acknowledging the condolences of many friends who naturally confused the Edison actor with his namesake.

It may be safely said that there is not an actor on the screen who can better depict the pathetic plight of old age than he.

"How Molly Made Good" Opens Soon in Philadelphia

November 1 is the Date Set for Photodrama Company's Original Production, to Appear in the Quaker City, and Indications Point to a Successful Run

THE initial public performance of "How Molly Made Good," the Kulee feature with twelve dramatic stars, will be given at the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia, beginning Monday, November 1.

The widespread interest already created in Philadelphia on the announcement of this engagement augers well for the success of the productions. Twelve names like those in the film should make "How Molly Made Good" one of the biggest box office winners of the season.

In devising ways and means of utilizing twelve big stars and giving each star an equal opportunity to score, recourse was had to a subject which has always interested the public, namely, the private life of the great actors, and by utilizing this phase of the stars' lives a most interesting vehicle was created.

The story has a charm of sustained interest. The girl is to be put upon her mettle to complete the task within a certain limited period of time. This gives her some speculation and her work is beset with handicaps and there is always the chance of her failing, and it is this uncertainty that keeps the audience on edge.

One is first introduced to Madame Fjorde, the celebrated singer of the Royal Opera, Berlin, on board ship on her arrival in this country. Here begins the chain which binds the twelve stars together. We have Lulu Glaser, the celebrated singing comedienne, whose success in Dolly Varden made her name a household word. At her home one is introduced to her mother and is given a view of her domestic circle, then transported in rapid succession to the homes of Cyril Scott, Robert Edeson, Julian Eltinge, May Robson, Henrietta Crosman, Julia Dean, Leo Ditrichstein, Henry Kolker, Charles J. Ross and Mabel Fenton and is shown just how the great stars live when they are away from the theatre and in the charmed circle of their families and their pets.

SCENES THAT MAKE "THE BLOOD OF OUR BROTHERS," CENTAUR, A STRONG MUTUAL RELEASE

THE TOLL OF WAR

THE SHEPHERD TURNS WARRIOR

THE CALL OF VENGEANCE

"THE BLOOD OF OUR BROTHERS"

(Centaur-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS half-allegorical, half-natural preachment against war and all its horror, has been written especially to fit the abilities of Crane Wilbur. It was written by that actor himself with his own abilities, methods and mannerisms—everything, in fact, except his limitations in constant view.

The Horsley studios have given the picture an elaborate and altogether excellent setting. Moreover, the action is rapid, and the story interesting enough to hold the attention between climaxes. The story is one adapted to almost any period, but the costuming is that of the modern peasants of central Europe. Numerous attractive scenes show the simple life of a shepherd and his companions, and great care and labor has been expended on the glimpses of soldiery, camp life and the devastation of war.

Crane, as Kindheart, a simple, but entirely heroic shepherd, is the central figure. He scorns war, marries Devotion, and even endures the taunts of cowardice to remain and care for his wife when the other men march off to conflict. He tends his flocks until a party of soldiers break into his hut, kill Devotion and her parents, and lay things waste. Then the hero is aroused and goes forth to seek the destroyers. He wanders long amid encampments, and finally finds them and avenges Devotion. The lust of war gets into his blood and he keeps on his work of destruction, until he finally kills Valor, the brother of Devotion. After the horror of war has wrecked the countryside, Kindheart returns to his desolate home and his untended flocks.

There is much in the picture which will appeal, especially at this time, and it should find a warm public welcome. The points in the moral lesson are well worked up and driven home clearly. The piece was produced by Arthur Maude. In the cast are Celia Santon, Carl Von Schiller, Ed. Collins, Harry De Roy and Victor Rottman.

"COMRADE JOHN"

(Pathé Gold Rooster—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

IT is seldom we see as good a picture as this new member of the Gold Rooster family. Viewed from almost every standpoint, the picture appears to us as good, and analysis fails to furnish any reason for its being so, save that careful attention has been given to each of the several factors which make a real picture.

First, there is a story; original, logical, absorbing, and free from the fatty degeneration which smothers so many productions nowadays. It is by Samuel Merwin and Henry Kitchell Webster, who formed a productive partnership as authors of "Calumet K" back in the dim past. It has been picturized from the novel in a direct, clean and clear manner, just as such a story should be told. Second, there is a capable company, the leading members of which seem to have understood what it was all about, and have exercised considerable common sense in going about their work. William Elliott and Ruth Roland are the leaders in this galaxy, and they deserve to be; others, such as Madeline Pardee, Louis Cody and William Lampe, are a credit to the Balboa forces. Lastly, the director has dressed all this in a mixture of enchanting landscape, scenes of busy industry, and melodramatic thrills, which bring out its greatest value.

Beginning with an American architect reading quietly in a room of a Paris hotel, the spectator is hurried through glimpses of Parisian street life, shipboard scenes which have the lift and drift of the real salt sea, a vision of toil and the "dream city" which is its result, to a climax of fire in which the dream city and the charlatan who conceived it, are wiped out.

The fire is staged with wonderful realism, and William Elliott walks through actual flames—or appears to—to rescue a fair lady. It is plain that a fair-sized city has been built for the purpose of this picture, and destroyed with the fire which ends it.

Ruth Roland has never been seen to better advantage than in the role of Cynthia Grey. It gives her excellent opportunity to exhibit several types of becoming costumes, and she takes full advantage of it.

"THE FAMILY STAIN"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

FROM Gaboriau's story "The Widow Lerouge," William Fox has taken his first mystery theme for the screen, and given it a cast of unusually competent players, and settings of the excellence one has come to expect from Fox.

Of course with Gaboriau the original creator of the plot, one is guaranteed genuine mystery, if only the adaptation is made skillfully. This Will S. Davis has done, in addition to directing the production.

Rarely has Fox been happier in the choice of his players for a given picture. Frederick Perry, as the father who arranges an exchange of infants, which turns out in the end not to have been an exchange, but nevertheless the basis for a murder, gives his abilities full play in a role that is necessarily circumscribed by reason of the plot. He is to an appreciable extent overshadowed by Einer Linden, whom we have not previously seen in photoplays. Linden, we believe, will be heard from later as an actor with an unusual capability in tragic parts. Other members of the cast were evidently selected with care, for they are entirely adequate—in fact, far above the average found in detective plays—Walter Miller, Stephen Gratton, Carey Lee, Dixie Compton, Helen Tiffany, Frank Evans, Edith Hallor, Mayme Kelso, Louis Hendricks, Carl Gerard.

The action moves swiftly, in spite of a rather complicated plot. The director, with an eye for realism, has provided, among other things, one of the most successful rain storms ever screened. Or to put it more accurately, the director took a natural rain storm and made it one of the most telling features of his picture. Another piece of work for which we commend the director particularly is his staging of the "third degree" scenes. Not only are they carried through without exaggeration, but their value is also heightened by lighting effects that are splendidly worked.

No extended sketch of the plot is necessary here. It will keep any audience, guessing, and thoroughly absorbed.

THE FOURTH KNICKERBOCKER TRIANGLE PROGRAM

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE fourth offering of the Triangle Company maintains the high standard set by the pictures previously shown at the Knickerbocker theatre. The four plays run the whole gamut of emotions from chuckled-headed mirth to the tenderest feelings.

One witnesses the emotional struggles of a loving wife trying to win back the affections of an erratic husband; or the heroic sacrifices of magnificent frontier types whose careers serve to stir the patriotism of our own generation; or again, the less subtle, less rousing in its appeal to the finer instincts, but nevertheless fully as interesting—the fascinating industry of a monumentally fat man frantically unwinding an uncooked beefsteak from his neck, where it reposed like a pearl necklace or a new kind of life preserver.

So there you are—your patrons can take their choice. All moods are easily satisfied with the Triangle pictures this week. If Bill Jones has a grouch lure him to the theatre showing Triangle films and Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling will make him forget his liver trouble in a continual uproar of laughter—until the curtain goes down, anyhow.

Their antics in "His Father's Footsteps" and "Fickle Fatty's Fall," respectively, will make the grouchy patron out-grin the proverbial Cheshire cat—an animal supposed to have gained its wonderful proficiency in the art of grimace by years of persistent effort and careful attention to detail under the supervision of the best studio directors.

Those who had read accounts of the American border and its wild uncertain ways by such men as Cyrus Townsend Brady naturally looked forward to a thrilling picture in "The Martyrs of the Alamo." But it is safe to say that the most imaginative reader, full of frontier life from his border historians, could not have visualized one-tenth the action, the local color, the characterization of types peculiar to Texas in 1836, he might see in this Griffith masterpiece.

With his usual unerring eye for the fitness of things, the producer of this picture provided all the necessary touches of time and place to make everything historically correct.

The muskets had long round barrels, wooden ramrods underneath and conspicuously angular triggers, characteristic of the firearms of the period.

The frontiersmen wore coonskin caps, while others, only a short time out of the cities, wore huge flapping beaver hats—just as in the old prints they have come down to us from those times.

The Mexican soldiery were costumed according to the period, and the cannon, brought by them to batter down the walls of the church sheltering the spirited band of American fighters, showed the same Griffith care in the making. These culverines had the protruding handles, like those on a grandmother's castiron pot, that give the small cannon of that early time a peculiar appearance.

Every adult who had formed any conception from his schoolboy hero worship of such men as Sam Houston, David Crockett, James Bowie, and in lesser degree, Silent Smith, must have waited with a great deal of curiosity for the appearance of the actors impersonating these mighty nimrods and fearless patriots. And one's expectations were not disappointed. Sam DeGrasse as Silent Smith, Tom Wilson as Sam Houston, A. D. Sears as David Crockett and Alfred Paget as James Bowie deserve commendation for their conceptions of these extraordinary characters. They have helped us to cherish in no other possible way the boyhood memory of these men, cast in heroic mold, whose deeds will now no longer live merely in books.

Under Griffith's wonderful direction we miss nothing in these characterizations. Take for instance, long, lithe, cynical and sinister, but for all that an extraordinary man—Bowie, the hunter, who, not satisfied with the cutting instruments of his time, invented a combination knife, which, like Samson's horse liniment, advertised on country fences, "was good for man or beast."

We get just a flash of Inventor Bowie sitting in close confab with Davy Crockett, who, gun in hand, is descanting on the comfortable feeling engendered by the possession of a sure-aim weapon, with lots of ammunition. Bowie, contending that "the knife's the thing," in a reasonably close encounter with an enemy, illustrates his argument with the sudden withdrawal from his waistcoat region of a knife, which is thrust at Davy's ribs with lightning-like rapidity.

The whole situation, while having nothing to do with the plot, and does not carry on the action in any way, is not out of place. The incident was deftly inserted in the picture to draw character and help the spectator to understand the manner of men who lived in Texas in those gnarled days of privation and peril.

The story of the hopeless stand made by the resolute band of 250 odd patriots, schooled in the Indian, no-quarter method of fighting, and thus knowing what to expect from their resistance; these men whose deeds have burnt themselves into the hearts of Americans, like the handful of Greeks of old at Thermopylae in their annals—this wonderful story of the 250 against 5,000, had indeed found a worthy historian, able to make it more interesting than the printed page.

"THE CRIMSON WING"

(Essanay—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

A ROMANCE of the present European war, with a cast of screen favorites—among them E. H. Calvert, Bryant Washburn, Beverly Bayne, and Ruth Stonehouse—this picture, without using heavy sets or extensive battle panoramas, pleases, but does not thrill.

Except for the fact that a certain timeliness is gained by employing the now-raging war as a background, any other war would have served just as well as a setting for the love theme, which is the principal thing in the picture: the love of a French girl for a German soldier. The subplot concerns the reformation of an actress, who becomes disgusted with a life of revelry, enters the Red Cross Service, and nurses the German soldier—whom she also loves—back to health.

Then she poisons herself in order to escape from the man of her past.

The picture does not attempt to preach a sermon, nor to show the horrors of war. It simply tells a pretty story—and one that needs beauty, manliness, and a villain in the telling. Beverly Bayne and Ruth Stonehouse supply the first; E. H. Calvert, in particular the second; and John Cossar the third. The additional presence in the cast of Betty Scott, Harry Dunkinson, and Grant Foreman adds to its power to please.

A comparatively small number of extras are used in the battle scenes, which are therefore slender. On the other hand, views of country estates, fine roads and parks, fit perfectly into the spirit of the production. Several inserts show European troops in action, apparently at maneuvers.

The director was E. H. Calvert, and the author, H. C. Chatfield Taylor.

"WHEN APPEARANCES DECEIVE"

(Kalem—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS first episode in the much-heralded "Ventures of Marguerite" series, reveals a snap and piquancy of action which fit well around the personality of their charming little star. The plat is not startlingly original in its development or surroundings, but Marguerite Courtot is an attractive figure on the screen, and makes up for other shortcomings.

These shortcomings are minor, anyway, and all in all, the picture is so good as to be refreshing. Everybody keeps busy, and the author has laid out no work which cannot be accomplished in a natural manner. Marguerite is an heiress, who has devoted her time to ventures in assisting the troubled, and uplifting the lowly. In the first episode, she is dining in a restaurant with her guardian, when she sees a man browbeating a woman at another table.

When the man leaves for a moment, she goes over and offers to assist the victim. The woman accepts her aid, and the two leave the restaurant together.

Arriving at a house in the suburbs, Marguerite finds she has been cleverly trapped by a band of kidnappers, who staged the restaurant scene for her benefit. She is extricated when the man, leader of the band, makes love to her, and rouses the woman to a frenzy of jealousy.

The settings are elaborate, and many scenes will arouse the admiration of spectators. Richard Purdon, E. T. Roseman and Paula Sherman, who are also in the cast, are capable assistants to Miss Courtot.

MOMENTS THAT THRILL IN THREE PRODUCTIONS JUST ISSUED FROM THE LUBIN COMPANY'S STUDIOS

SCENES FROM "THE MAN OF GOD," "THE STRANGE UNKNOWN," AND "THE INEVITABLE PENALTY"

"THE STRANGE UNKNOWN"

(Lubin—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS production written by William H. Ratterman results in a mystery-melodrama, consistently and evenly developed and endowed with a generous portion of suspense. There are a creditable number of intense situations, well handled by the cast and director. The acting in fact is unusually good for a program release, the three leading players rendering especially effective characterizations.

The climax is quietly brought about, but save for a comparatively weak show of feeling affected by the hero towards the woman who deceived him, is strong enough to cap the main portion of the picture with an appropriate finale. There is just a little uncertainty on the part of the spectator as to where some of the action is transpiring, but this destroys none of the interest created by the exciting plot.

The story tells how a jealous woman imprisoned her step-sister in a room at the top of the house that she may be free to win the man they both love. The man, an artist, is finally acquainted by means of a series of strong situations, with the girl's act of perfidy, and at length he is reunited with the one he really loves.

Helen Eddy, as the mistreated step-sister, performs exceedingly well and with a pleasing display of appreciative emotion. L. C. Shumway as the artist is a pleasant appearing hero, and Dorothy Barrett as the other sister lends to her role a magnetism that predominates over its disagreeable traits.

"The Strange Unknown" is a very worthy offering, its action and its interpretation both being finished enough to place the picture in the class of good three reel features.

"THE MAN OF GOD"

(Lubin—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MAN OF GOD" was conceived and produced by George W. Terwilliger, and presents a most unusual theme in a logical and strong manner. It is one of the strongest two-reelers that the screen has seen in days and should be widely shown by exhibitors, for it contains all the elements that go to make a fine picture. It is well handled, its acting is of the finest, and its direction stamps Mr. Terwilliger as an artist capable of even greater things.

The most effective point in "The Man of God" is its sound psychology. The action is sincerely motivated in practically every instance. The climax is the only place in which realism is sacrificed for dramatic effect, but Mr. Terwilliger has achieved this climax through a series of logical situations that tend to entirely discountenance its improbability.

The drama starts following a wreck. There are three survivors washed on a desert isle, a priest, a woman, and a common flirt. The flirt sets out to win the woman, but she seeks protection from the priest, who is obliged to employ his fists to quell the young man. The flirt dies from a snake bite and fever. Later a ship is sighted, and to save the woman's name from any possible blemish the priest sends her off alone.

The scenes between the woman and the priest, when she is passionately beseeching him to return her love, are extremely powerful, due to the delicacy of the situation and the vivid portrayals of the two roles rendered by Earl Metcalfe and Ormi Hawley. Kempton Greene handles his distasteful part of the flirt in an expressive manner. With regard to the photography, scenes and the realism of the atmosphere, little need be said, save that they are very good. In fact the entire feature merits a featured position on the program of the program house.

"MANNA"

(Gold Seal-Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a picture that shows distinctly the touch of the director, Henry Otto. It is full of those entirely "too good to be true" incidents that when handled correctly go to make a picture thoroughly enjoyable. What makes "Manna" considerably more pleasing is its refreshing story from the pen of Olga Prinzlau Clark.

Consequently even though some of the situations are unbelievable enough to warrant their being defined as melodramatic, the whole picture appears far removed from melodrama, because of the numerous pleasantries contained in the unconventional plot.

An invalid girl, supported by her sister who is a factory worker, conceives a plan whereby she may be of help to the world. She inscribes small cards with Biblical quotations and flicks them out the window. Appropriate lines are discovered by unthinking and misguided people, with the result that many reform. One of the pasteboards lands in the hat of the woman who is planning to abduct the invalid's sister, and so influences her that she helps her contemplated victim to escape. As a finale we are shown the girl, completely cured, due to the charity of a rich woman, whose heart was changed by one of the cards. The sister is happy with her lover, the young doctor who performed the successful operation.

Oliver Fuller Golden does very good work as the invalid; Edna Maison has a smaller part as her sister, while Louella Maxim is another prominent in the well balanced cast. "Manna" is certainly a welcome relief from the usual murderous melodrama.

"THE SECRET SIN"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SECRET SIN" is a thoroughly enjoyable picture. In it Blanche Sweet appears in a dual role, parts which offer her a wide field over which to display her diversified moods and expressions. She is again as in "The Case of Becky," a good and bad personality. While bad, as Grace, she suffers the tortures of drugs. Fortunately Frank Reicher, the director, has refrained from displaying any obtrusive scenes, showing violent ravings of drug addictes. The disagreeableness is neatly repressed.

We have long had somewhat of an aversion to a star handling a dual role. Double exposures are necessitated, which clog the action. Usually the two characters created by the player wear a forced air of aloofness toward each other, because technique prevents their close encounter. With "The Secret Sin," this coldness existing between Edith and Grace is naturally expected and consequently their actions in the double exposure scenes tend to convince, in most instances. These scenes are handled effectively in both a dramatic and technical sense.

Margaret Turnbull's story is satisfactory and pleasing in every respect. The characters, all of them, gain sympathy as soon as they are introduced. A sustaining amount of suspense is carried throughout the picture, from the time that Grace, the drug fiend, incriminates her innocent sister of her own fearful habit, before her lover, until the tangle thus created is cleared. The climax is strong and is intensified by mysterious and rapid action.

Miss Sweet as Edith and Grace gives two decisive and impressive characterizations. Hal Clements as their father and Thomas Meighan as the lover have pleasant parts which they handle well.

THE ORIENTAL GETS HIS INSTRUCTIONS

Sessue Hayakawa has convincing native features and shows marked ability as the Chinese proprietor of the opium joint.

Containing the utmost realism, as to scenes, in particular the Chinatown street setting, and the usual clear and consistent Lasky photography offsetting the strong story, "The Secret Sin" may well rank as almost praiseworthy feature.

"THE MENACE OF THE MUTE"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A GOOD detective picture relies for much of its suspense on the placement of the scenes. Instead of following in rational sequence, some are withheld until the time comes to clear the mystery, thus by their absence creating a mystery for the detective to expend his efforts upon. "The Menace of the Mute" derives much of its mystifying suspense from this arrangement of scenes, although Arnold Daly adds largely to the interest by his brilliant powers of detection, contributed by the author, John T. McIntyre.

Arnold Daly as Ashton Kirk, criminal investigator, is more than a mere figurehead. He carries the part with dominating actions. He is not limited to make discoveries that are obvious to the spectator. By skill and cunning he unravels the murder mystery in a logical yet unsuspected way. Mr. Daly acts the investigator down to the last detail—he makes one forget that he is merely playing the part.

The mystery of the murder is profound. Suspicion is divided between two parties, but even after the onlooker is sure of the guilty man, the interest remains at an unordinary height. The climax, reached through a series of suspended moments, catches the observer at just the right time and bestows upon the story an ending of great power.

The supporting cast, particularly Sheldon Lewis as the ugly old inventor, is continually alive to its responsibilities. For the most part the picture is purely narrative and no great scenes demanding histrionic ability of the emotional sort are introduced, but when they are, it is pleasing to note, that the cast is capable of handling them.

The settings are entirely appropriate throughout the five reels, while the photography is pleasantly clear. All in all, "The Menace of the Mute" is an excellent detective picture. Those who desire a strong, well-produced picture of this sort, need not hesitate in procuring it.

"THE YANKEE GIRL"

(Morosco-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

IN the solitude of one's own particular standing-room on Broadway, one is forced to admit that musical comedy plots are no more than their name implies. Divested of their orchestras, "songs," dances, seltzer siphons, and the waiter's comedy lines, the thread of the story looks like a terrible misfortune in a rope factory; dressed properly, it is a delight to several of the senses, but naked it is a poor, aimless thing.

It has been the Morosco task to dress such a plot in something beside the music, wardrobe and repartee of the spoken stage, so as to prevent its being arrested as a vagrant, and stupendous as the task has been, a really creditable result has been attained. The director, impressed by the fact that Blanche Ring is at her best when hiding behind a smile, has kept her smiling almost all the time; the locations have been carefully chosen with an eye to preserving the illusion of South American scenes, and the camera has been so well placed as to accentuate the picture values of these scenes. Not only logical are most of the scenes, but they are striking, and dramatic, within the limitations of the script. Especially attractive are the views of the yacht, both from shore and from its own deck, and the action is kept on the jump continually.

Add to these some excellent characterizations, and there is a picture which will have a drawing power among many classes, especially when the names of Blanche Ring and one of her Broadway successes stand sponsor for it. As for the comedy: there are several good comedy situations, but the comedy "business" is a trifle clumsy, and hardly adapted to make grown-ups laugh.

The story revolves about a race for the option on a South American copper mine between rival capitalists, one of whom has bought up the president of the little republic. Through the ingenuity of his daughter, the other man wins. As President Castroba, Herbert Standing has presented an excellent character, and capable work distinguishes Forrest Stanley, Howard Davies, Harry Fisher, Jr., Robert Dunbar, Joe Ray, Bonita Darling and Syd de Grey, who are also in the cast.

"SMALLPOX!"

"THEIR SINFUL INFLUENCE"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THOSE who know the rudiments of drawing-room etiquette often smile at the social awkwardness displayed on the screen—and their mirth is justified. For once the ultra-fastidious will be silenced, for in the drama, "Their Sinful Influence," near every detail of the social functions pictured is correct. Of course there is the usual sartorial slip of combining a black tie with a dress suit, but that minor oversight is lost in the wonder of seeing real engraved invitations to formal affairs (instead of perfunctory phone messages) and the observing of many other conventions, trivial in themselves, yet highly important in making a society play convincing.

THE BABYLONIAN MARRIAGE MART

This adequateness of detail, the elaborateness of the settings and the calibre of Bessie Eyton's acting demand a high rating for this three-reeler.

Rose Carr, the daughter of Dr. Carr, rector of a fashionable church, is engaged to Bright, a young college professor. Two women are fighting for the social leadership of the circus set, vying with each other in giving weird entertainments. Against her father's will, Rose goes to these affairs, and becomes entangled with Earl Bayley, a wealthy ne'er-do-well. Bright is disgusted at her behavior, and brakes off the engagement. Dr. Carr decides to investigate conditions, and arrives at a Bacchanalian spectacle just in time to prevent the debauching of his daughter.

The following Sunday the infuriated minister preaches a scathing sermon, denouncing the degradation of some of his congregation, and thanking God for the salvation of his daughter.

Bessie Eyton has in her support Richard Morris, Lillian Hayward, Edward J. Piel, Edwin Wallock, Virginia Kirtley and Louise Southern. A. G. Isherwood and William H. Lippert collaborated on the story, which Lloyd B. Carleton produced.

"BOUGHT"

(Shubert-World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"BOUGHT" is a melodrama with a poetic hero. The hero often speaks through the medium of subtitles. He soars to idealistic heights that sometimes strike one as being a little forced when read on the celluloid. The conduct of this hero corresponds strikingly with his poetic speeches. Frederick Lewis, who plays the part, acts with considerable display of emotionalism.

Aside from the unintimate atmosphere created by Mr. Lewis and his speeches, "Bought" presents a nicely balanced melodramatic story. It contains scenes and situations that will touch the heart of the melodrama-loving person, if that person is open to be convinced by a rabid plot. Its incidents are brought out in a manner that will not fail to excite the sympathies. Lawrence McClosky, the author, has built his scenario along effectively conventional lines.

HELEN RESTRAINS FRAMBERS FROM FURTHER VIOLENCE

Frambers is a would-be writer. In every mail arrives a returned manuscript. So when he receives an offer to marry a girl and save her honor for a cash consideration he accepts. The girl despises him despite his noble act. Frambers materially helps her father in business. Then he becomes tired of it all and quits. But he returns to save his father-in-law from ruin and to discover that the girl really loves him.

Ethel Gray Terry as Helen, the girl, handles her larger scenes in a most creditable style and the rest of the cast furnishes support that is acceptable if not at all times brilliant.

Barry O'Neill, who produced the subject, has done his share of the work well. The material dealt with is effectively picturized.

FIDELITY ORGANIZED IN DETROIT FOR FEATURES

THE Fidelity Motion Picture Company, of Detroit, Mich., announces its intentions to produce feature films. Offices have been opened in the Hammond building. Frank W. Packer, president of the company, is a former theatrical man.

H. E. Miller, of New York, is vice-president and E. E. Englehart is secretary, treasurer and business manager. Harriet E. Mills, a vaudeville actress, is one of the largest stockholders.

"THE UPSTART"

(Gold Seal-Universal—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is the first picture in which Stella Razetto appears to be released on the Universal daily program, and as such is worthy of considerable notice, although the even excellence of the vehicle is chiefly responsible for the picture's position among the features of the week. Miss Razetto lends to the title role a prettiness and charm that can not be denied, but we can also reverse the order and say that the role is quite worthy the talents of Miss Razetto.

The scenario is one of Harvey Gates' original works. Coincidence plays a prominent part in the workings of the story, but points are not stretched and the picture is always convincing. Mr. Gates has constructed his scenario in a pleasant and smooth style; there are no great leaps from one incident to another, while there is little of the unbelievable touch of melodrama.

The direction by Edward LeSaint is entirely adequate. We draw attention in particular to the wonderful air of realism that Mr. LeSaint has obtained in his rain scenes. With appropriate tinting the picture will certainly present a satisfactory and finished appearance in regard to all the small and large details.

We will not give even a mere outline of the story, but suffice it to say that the qualities of romance dominate the three reels.

THE MISTAKEN IDENTITIES ARE CLEARED

However, the additional characters are clearly drawn, and the sub-plot of the picture is as effective and exciting as the story proper is interesting and pretty.

Jay Belasco, appearing opposite Miss Razetto, is a fitting type for the role, while others who contribute good work to the picture are Laura Oakley, Mark Fenton, Helen Wright and Charles Lyke.

"THE DESTROYER"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

A NOVEL, extraordinary plot covers a multitude of sins in a photoplay, especially in these days of cruelly overworked film themes. The plot of the picture under discussion was daringly conceived, and fearlessly, yet delicately, developed. The situations created afford unlimited possibilities for emotional acting, and while the cast does not utilize all these opportunities, yet their performance is above the average. Nell Craig registers the alternate joy, horror, and despair of her situation very effectively.

Gordon Rockwell (John A. Lorenz), a physician, and his friend Kenneth Randall (Edmund F. Cobb) both fall in love with Frances Burnham (Nell Craig). She accepts Randall's proposal, but before marrying, Randall asks Rockwell to give him a physical examination. In the blood test, the doctor's assistant accidentally substitutes infected blood for that of Randall. In perfect ignorance of the error, Rockwell breaks the news to Randall, who immediately leaves the country. Later, the physician discovers the mistake, but he keeps it secret, and a year later he marries Frances Burnham. As time goes on, his conscience gets the better of him, and after writing a note to Randall explaining the mistake, he poisons himself. Randall returns in time to forgive him, and is reunited with the girl he madly loves.

Edward T. Lowe, Jr., wrote the story, and Lawrence Windon produced it.

"THE SEVENTH NOON"

(Mutual Masterpicture—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

ORIGINALITY of plot, and direct, forceful treatment, mark this picture as one worth while. It has been picturized from the novel of the same name by Frederick Orin Bartlett, and hence has a real story to tell, presented by a cast capable of telling it. A certain amount of unnecessary matter has been allowed to seep into the scenario, but it is not burdensome, and does not detract from the line of the main theme.

The story is that of a young lawyer, wearied by his efforts to aid the poor, who takes a new poison which a chemist has demonstrated will do its work in just seven days. He decides to scale the heights of luxury during these seven days, and in doing so he falls in love, risks his life, which he knows to be worthless, for the girl's sake, and then bitterly regrets having marked out his own doom. After making an all around hero of himself, he finds that the poison is a failure, and he may still live.

The counterplot adds greatly to the dramatic values. In this connection the work of George Le Guere is especially strong and capable. Ernest Glendenning is also well cast, as the lawyer, and Winifred Kingston as the girl. Others in the cast are Everett Butterfield, W. T. Clark, A. J. Robinson, Julia Blane and Glide Leary.

"THE BETTER WOMAN"

(Triumph-Equitable—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

GOOD sets, pleasing photography and acceptable acting stand in sharp contrast to the plot in this subject.

The story was written by Richard Campbell, and concerns an undisciplined girl of the West who falls in love with a long civil engineer, intercepts a letter from the engineer's fiancee back East, and weds him. The letter, it should be said, was intended to advise the young man that a newspaper, through a mistake, reported the fiancee's marriage to another, when in reality it was her sister who had been led to the altar. The deception eventually comes to light, and the engineer, learning to love his wife, forgives her.

AT THE CHARITY BENEFIT

Singularly enough, the director this time, and not the scenario writer, is apparently responsible for the slenderness of the plot. The typewritten synopsis furnished the reviewer before the showing called for several scenes of strength which did not appear in the finished picture. The most striking of these was a labor riot, culminating in an explosion, affording opportunity for the girl who had perpetrated the deception to show real bravery, thus bringing her husband to a realization that she was indeed "The Better Woman," especially as the girl of the East proved a coward.

Frankly, we believe the story as outlined in the synopsis would have made an offering much stronger than that presented on the screen—in contrast of characters, as well as in many points of action. Because the reviewer read the synopsis before he saw the picture, it was at times difficult for him to realize that the two stories bore a vital kinship to each other, except in mere external appearance. We should like to see the same players, with the same excellence of setting, photography, and direction, in the version of the story as given in the synopsis.

Insofar as this theme permits, the players realize their possibilities quite well. Leonore Ulrich, in the character of the young deceiver, screens readily, and sheds beauty over more than one improbable scene. Lowell Sherman, the male lead, has good presence, and is convincing through most of the action. Edith Thornton, Ben Graham, Charles Hutchison and Will Browning are also in the cast.

Outdoor scenery is used to good advantage. A novelty is offered in one scene showing a large company of guests assembled to witness tableaux given for the benefit of charity.

Joseph A. Golden was the director.

"THE WASP"

(American-Flying A—Two Reels

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

VIVIAN RICH, playing the title role of this piece, is called upon to plagiarize from the lives of Becky Sharp, Rosalind, Jane Addams, and the girls of Fagin's school. To be more explicit, she has an unhappy life in the girls' school she attends, is unjustly accused of stealing, disguises herself as a man, and is a pickpocket and burglar, until her love for a wealthy man causes her to become a charity worker. Add to this chain of events her later marriage to the right man, throw in a few complications, and you have the story of "The Wasp."

Miss Rich's kaleidoscopic part is so acted that it carries conviction, and she manages to soften the melodramatic elements of the play to something very close to realism.

The play is interesting throughout, and the pathos is well sustained.

Walter Spencer, Roy Stewart and Hugh Bennett, the trio supporting Miss Rich, do their share in making this release worth while. The directing was in the hands of Reeves Eason.

HAYES GETS FIRST RIGHTS TO TRIANGLE PLAYS IN PHILADELPHIA

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Oct. 26.

N. J. HAYES, proprietor of the Great Northern, at Broad and Erie avenue, has made a scoop in being the first exhibitor in Philadelphia to capture the new Triangle program.

November 8 is the first release of the Triangle to the general exhibitor. On that date Mr. Hayes will start the Triangle pictures, having secured exclusive rights to a large territory in his immediate section.

At present the Great Northern will be the only theatre in all the northern section of Philadelphia showing the production of the Triangle Film Corporation.

The Great Northern was formerly under the Stanley management and ran vaudeville in connection with pictures, but Mr. Hayes has been running it this season as a straight picture house. With a symphony orchestra of ten pieces, led by a fine musician, and all the artistic Triangle touches of ushers' costumes and attractive programs included in the scope of the plans for the Great Northern under the new regime, the opening will be of much interest.

There are 1,100 seats in the theatre. The prices that will prevail are fifteen and twenty-five cents.

Seats will be sold at advanced sales, a new departure, and there will be three performances daily—a matinee and two night performances.

The program will be changed twice a week. Two Triangle plays, a drama and a comedy, eight reels in all, will be given at each performance.

"THE LONG CHANCE"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

ANY photoplay graced with Frank Keenan's magnetic face and finished acting is certain to be distinguished, and "The Long Chance" is just that—distinguished.

It is a Western drama, but how different it is from the ordinary "gun-play" style of pictures! All the frontier types are found in it, but their strength is in themselves, not in their weapons. Somehow the whole cast seems to have absorbed something of Keenan's extraordinary understanding of restraint.

And—what is just as important—the plot is good. Harvey Gates adapted it for screen use from the story by Peter B. Kyne. In the main it has to do with Harley Hennage (Frank Keenan), a gambler with a big heart, who loves the town belle, Marie. When Marie falls in love with a strange prospector, Harley first orders him away, only to relent later and himself leave when he discovers that Marie loves his rival. His rival, on a prospecting tour in the desert, is struck down by Carey, an unscrupulous partner, and dies there. Harley's love for Marie never wavers. He takes her, and her daughter, Donna, under his protection. Years afterward, when the daughter has grown to young womanhood, and the mother is dead, Harley forces Carey to make restitution to Donna, only to meet death in a spectacular gun duel with a bandit whom he had previously told to get out of town for an insult against Donna.

This gun duel is not in the slightest degree melodramatic. In fact, the whole production is singularly free from the taint of melodrama. On the other hand, there are numerous touches which show skillful direction on the part of Edward J. LeSaint. One thing Mr. Le Saint did not do as completely as he might; he did not realize his full opportunity in the matter of closeups, especially in the scenes in which Keenan appears.

The supporting cast is uniformly acceptable. Stella Razetto as Donna, deserves especial commendation. The other players are: Beryl Boughton, Fred Church, Clyde Benson, Harry Blaising, Jack Nelson, Walter Newman, Mr. Berrill, Mr. Rogers.

Exhibitors who have not yet introduced Frank Keenan to their audiences have, in "The Long Chance," an unusual opportunity for doing so.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Musketeers of Pig Alley." (Biograph. Fri., Nov. 5.)—This is a Griffith re-issue, in which Lillian Gish is featured. The story revolves around a battle between gangs of gunmen, the leader of one of which attempts in vain to force his attentions on the girl. Her sweetheart, a young musician returning successful, is blackjacked and robbed at the door of her tenement by the gangster. The girl, confronted by the accused gangster, refuses to identify him, and in gratitude he returns the stolen money. Lionel Barrymore, Robert Harron, Harry Carey, Walter Miller, Elmer Booth, Jack Dillon, Alfred Paget and W. C. Robinson are also in the cast.

"Dora Thorne." (Biograph. Four reels. Wed., Nov. 3.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"Fifty-Fifty." (Essanay. Three reels. Mon., Nov. 1.)—Will be reviewed next week.

"Despair." (Essanay. Three reels. Tues., Nov. 2.)—Not yet shown for review.

"The Fable of the Escape of Arthur and the Salvation of Herbert." (Essanay. Wed., Nov. 3.)—The sub-titles are more amusing than the acting in this George Ade fable that teaches "As the Father Is Bent, the Child Is Inclined." Arthur's matrimonial side-kick makes home an Experiment Station for her prophylactic health Clinics, and Arthur is the Goat, until Herbert arrives. In spite of Mother's peerless System, little Herbie joins a gang, and shies bricks at a teamster's child. Charles J. Stine and Camille D'Arcy form the Hymeneal Team. Richard F. Baker was the director

"The Night That Sophie Graduated." (Essanay. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—This is a slapstick comedy that furnishes an ordinary amount of amusement. On the night that Sophie is to graduate, Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete make a mad rush to escort her to the exercises. Slim is successful, but when he and his girl get to the railroad crossing, their horse refuses to move. Pete ties the horse to a train. When the train starts, Slim is thrown out, but Sophie is hauled along for miles. Slim finally rescues the much-jolted girl, and takes her to the graduation ceremony. Pete is still on the job, and sets the building on fire. The players are: Margaret Joslin, Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Robert McKenzie.

"Broncho Billy's Mexican Wife." (Essanay. Fri., Nov. 5.)—An unambitious attempt at melodrama that is only occasionally interesting. Broncho Billy's Mexican wife falls in love with a man of her own race. Fearing to elope, they plan to get Billy out of the way. She stabs herself and then informs the sheriff that her husband did it. Billy is arrested and thrown into jail, while his wife entertains her affinity in her own home. The Mexican's sweetheart, mad with jealousy, stabs them both. Meanwhile Billy has escaped, and returning home, finds the pair mortally wounded. He places the hand of his dying wife in the hand of the Mexican, forgiving everything. Supporting G. M. Anderson are Edna Robinson, Lee Willard and Leona Anderson.

"On the Little Mill Race." (Essanay. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 6.)—This is a fairly conventional, but interesting drama, well acted. May Curtis, finding her husband untrue, leaves him and goes into the mountains. Shortly after, a boy is born to her. Five years later the boy is kidnapped by his father, John Curtis. May becomes a school teacher, and is idolized by the mountain people. After thirty years in this place she becomes ill, and only the skill of a famous surgeon can save her. The surgeon arrives, and when he looks into the face of the dying woman, she recognizes him as her son. The operation is successful, and May lives to be happy with her lost son. Nell Curtis and Hugh E. Thompson play the leads, supported by Thomas Commerford and John Cossar. Lawrence Windom directed.

"The Inevitable Penalty." (Lubin. Mon., Oct. 25.)—A fairly good drama by Daniel Ellis, containing a considerable amount of suspense. An old theme of the woman's hopeless faith in an unworthy man furnishes an acceptable story. Octavia Handworth, Henry Wilson and Louis Mortelle are the leads.

"Playing in Tough Luck." (Lubin. Tues., Oct. 26.)—A humorous vehicle by Daniel Ellis has been made into a typical David Don picture by that actor and his associates. The first part of the reel is merely full of grotesque actions, the real laughs resulting from the closing scenes.

"The Man of God." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Oct. 27.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Strange Unknown." (Lubin. Three reels. Thurs., Oct. 28.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Wonder Cloth." (Lubin. Fri., Oct. 29.)—A most intense drama concerning a bullet-proof invention. The love interest is well brought out, while the suspense in the picture is of the greatest kind. L. C. Shumway, Adda Gleason and Melvin Mayo are the principals, all of whom render very good performances.

"His Bodyguard." (Lubin. Sat., Oct. 30.)—Billie Reeves as a wayward husband's bodyguard beats up all his enemies, but when he comes to his raving wife it's an entirely different story. This, by Epes Winthrop Sargent, is like many of the Billie Reeves subjects. Its humor is confined to a certain class that appreciates rough and tumble tactics.

"The Flashlight." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 1.)—James Oliver Curwood put a real plot in this story of East Indian life. Tense, colorful, superbly staged, and well acted, it is an unusually attractive picture. Roscoe Harding, a newspaper photographer in India, is invited by Prince Chan to take pictures of his harem. While in the seraglio he is warned by a captive English girl to escape quickly. Aided by Tarsus, the keeper of the elephants, Harding and the girl, after several thrilling incidents, make their getaway. Bessie Eyton, Edward J. Piel, C. C. Holland and Robert Morris interpret the principal roles with great effectiveness.

"Athletic Ambitions." (Selig. Tues., Nov. 2.)—Not yet shown for review.

"Their Sinful Influence." (Selig. Three reels. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Lost Messenger." (Selig. Sat., Nov. 6.)—Not yet shown for review.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Wasp." (American-Flying A. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 1.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"One to the Minute." (Beauty. Tues., Nov. 2.)—A good comedy-drama, adequately produced. Neva Gerber has one of the ingenue parts she does so well. Dick hasn't a chance for Gladys' hand when an East Indian rajah becomes a suitor. Disgusted, Dick seeks solace at his club, and repeats the time-honored saying, "There's a fool born every minute." A stranger challenges the remark, and bets a cool hundred that Dick cannot steal jewelry from the club members. The amateur "dip" collects a lot of valuables to prove the gullibility of human kind, but the stranger disappears with the jewelry and the wagers. A peculiar gesture of the rajah's causes Dick to believe him none other than the smooth stranger, and after verifying this identification, he wins $2,000 reward and Gladys' hand. In the cast with Neva. Gerber are Frank Borzage, Wm. Carroll, Rae Berger and Lucille Ward. John Dillon was the producer.

"On Secret Service." (American-Flying A. Fri., Nov. 5.)—A few more subtitles would obviate the occasional misunderstanding of the plot of this swiftly moving little drama. The spectator is never more than a few seconds behind the action, however.

Frank Ketchell, a young bank cashier, is in love with Nell Bertram, the marshal's daughter. James Whitmore comes to town, representing himself to be a secret service man trying to locate a gang of counterfeiters. The marshal is terrified, for many years before, he himself had done some counterfeiting to give Nell an education. He agrees to get all his savings from the bank, so that the detective may look for spurious notes. Whitmore binds and gags Bertram, takes the money, and persuading Nell to elope with him, leaves the town. Ketchell discovers the father's plight, and giving chase to the fugitive, captures the crook, Bertram's money, a large reward, and Nell's love.

Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, George Field, and Charles Newton form the cast. The players were directed by Charles Bartlett.

"The Trail of the Serpent." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 5.)—E. Forrest Taylor, Helene Rosson, and their co-workers accomplish the impossible by creating sustained interest in this conventional combination of favorite old characters and familiar episodes.

The cowboy hero foils the gentlemanly villain and his Mexican assistant, and the rich mine is saved for the Eastern heroine, who falls in love with her protector.

Supporting Taylor and Miss Rosson are George Webb and Harry Edmonton. The picture was well directed by Frank Cooley.

"Who's Who." (Cub. Fri., Nov. 5.)—George Ovey as Jerry has the charming assistance of the Newton twins in an especially laughable situation. One of them is Jerry's sweetheart, and the other is a bride, and as they are quartered in the same hotel, Jerry immediately becomes involved with the six-foot bridegroom, as well as the father of his sweetheart.

The matter is straightened out when the mother appears and recognizes in the bride her other daughter, who has been separated from her since childhood.

"Billy Van Deusen's Campaign." (Beauty. Sat., Nov. 6.)—An amusing comedy, somewhat off the beaten track. Billy Van Deusen (Jno. Steppling), a wealthy clubman, and James O'Brien (John Sheehan), are both candidates for mayor, and for the hand of Helen Reeves (Carol Halloway). When Helen says she will marry the next mayor, both make whirlwind campaigns. Billy promises every woman who votes for him a parasol, but Jimmy announces that all who vote for him are invited to an outing in a nearby park. Jimmy's offer pulls the votes and the mayor-elect and Helen go to the slums to see Billy, who is having a strenuous time caring for the children of absent suffragized mothers.

Besides those already mentioned, the cast includes Bessie Banks and Rae Berger. The producer was Archer MacMackin.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." Number Five. (Pathé Two reels. Mon., Nov. 1.)—This instalment, entitled "The Lilac Splash," is rich in humorous and cleverly evolved situations. Burr McIntosh and Max Figman as Wallingford and Blackie Daw continue to render most characteristic work in these two leading parts. Here they neatly succeed in relieving Perigourd, a polished crook, of money that he unfairly procured from the father of the Warden girls. By equally unfair methods do they win it back, but the methods are likewise humorous to the extreme.

"Neal of the Navy." Number Ten. (Pathé-Panama. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—In this chapter, separately called "The Rolling Terror," Annette and the rest of the party land on a southern island which is just at that time under the ravages of malaria. Annette becomes a nurse and so endears herself to the natives that they worship her. In the meantime the villains have planned to secure the plans of the Lost Isle, and failing to do so by mere threats, they cast Annette and Neal in a swamp infested with the malaria-bearing mosquitoes. Fortunately enough the two lovers are able to resist the insects by applying crude oil, and later they are rescued by the marines.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Long Chance." (Broadway Universal Feature. Six reels. Mon., Nov. 1.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"A Circumstantial Scandal." (Nestor. Mon., Nov. 1.)—Two married couples, and everyone of the four parties, are jealous until the end of the picture arrives, which leaves them all much the better for divers' funny experiences. Neal Burns, Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Corrine Lesser are the principals in this comedy, which measures up to the average Nestor.

"The Measure of Leon Dubray." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Nov. 2.)—This production, written and directed by Henry Otto, makes a most interesting drama, clearly and rapidly developed and capped with a climax of a very entertaining sort. The work of Hobart Henley and Louella Maxim stands out in a well-balanced cast.

"When Beauty Butts In." (Imp. Tues., Nov. 2.)—Here Victor Potel becomes wildly enamoured of a number of pretty girls, clad in abbreviated bathing suits. Wife, however, spoils all the fun. This has some good comedy in it, but there are times when the fun is rather low.

"The Idle Rich." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 3.)—Hubby goes out to flirt and receives a terrible setback in the shape of a black eye from a beauteous maiden. Returning to his wife's lawn party he explains this stellar decoration by relating a heroic story in which he played the hero, but then the beauteous maiden turns out to be the guest of honor at the reception and Hubby and everyone else gets a shock. Harry Gribbon and May Emory are the leads in this laughmaker, which contains little that is suggestive and a good deal that is funny.

"The White Feather Volunteer." (Laemmle. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—A war play differing from the usual run of such dramas. It is based on a custom prevalent in England. When an able-bodied man refuses to enlist he is sent a white feather by some scornful acquaintance. Rupert Julian produced it as well as playing the lead, supported by Hazel Buckam and Elsie Jane Wilson. The offering is strong, although at times the director has failed to drive home an idea. The few battle scenes that appear are good.

The Powers release of Nov. 4 consists of a pictured vaudeville act entitled "The Thinking Cockatoos," showing clever antics of these trained birds, and "Insect Celebrities," a highly interesting educational compiled by Raymond Ditmars.

"The Markswoman." (Big U. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—The strong feature of this reel is the beautiful Northwestern scenery and the exceptional photography and lighting. The story is rather conventional both in character of plot and situations. Jules, a half-breed, steals some money belonging to the keeper of the post, but the man's daughter and her lover pursue him and finally regain the stolen wealth. Ed. Sloman and Adele Lane are featured in this, their only fault being that they decidedly betray their ignorance of north Canadian customs by handling their canoes in an amateurish fashion.

"The Reward." (Imp. Three reels. Fri., Nov. 5.)—This is a melodrama and as such is not worthy of the amount of film nor the histrionic efforts spent on it. The story will interest at times, although as a whole it can bear little close inspection. King Baggot is featured, while ohers are Edna Hunter, Harry Spingler and Clara Beyers. Henry McRae Webster directed.

"Father's Helping Hand." (Nestor. Fri., Nov. 5.)—Through an error, the review of this picture appeared in the issue of Oct. 30, under the title of "The Frame-Up on Dad."

"The Mettle of Jerry McGuire." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 6.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Oct. 30.

"Twentieth Century Susie." (Joker. Sat., Nov. 6.)—Not yet shown for review.

"Such a Princess." (Rex. Three reels. Sun., Nov. 7.)—A costume comedy of a very good order. It has a quantity of funny situations, while the gay pranks of Elsie Albert perpetrated in a dignified kingdom are humorous to the extreme. The scenes and photography do their share in making the picture thoroughly enjoyable. All the humor results from the king's act of taking a wild girl of the forest as his wife.

"Cupid and the Scrub Lady." (L-Ko. Sun., Nov. 7.)—One of the best of recent Leherman comedies, with Alice Howell appearing as the janitress of an office building. Miss Howell gets a lot of farcial fun from her role, creating most of the laughs in the picture.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special Feature. Nineteenth Episode. Two reels.)—Both Kitty and Count Frederick experience several weird adventures while hiding from the savage natives in a grotto. They are joined by a long-lost sailor. At last the three sight a ship, but before the episode closes, they are again captured by the blacks. Nothing at all definite is accomplished.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special Feature. Twentieth Episode. Two reels.)—In this number the three fugitives are rescued by the ship. It looked like an ocean liner from a distance, but turns out to be a private yacht. Its owner is a villain, who covets Kitty, and the rest of the two reels are taken up with several hot fights, which have no direct influence on the advancement of the plot.

Animated Weekly No. 190. (Wed., Oct. 27.)—Snatches of the New York City equal suffrage parade; views of a football game between Penn State and Carlisle; the dedication of a Scottish Rite Masonic Temple in Washington, D. 31—Illustrate and describe other useful combinations which can be obtained by the use of an ordinary 25 to 30 ampere wire coil or grid rheostat by immersing the rheostat in water for artificial cooling.

Ans.—If you take the rheostat in Fig. 20 and place it in water as illustrated in Fig. 22, you can use such a rheostat for several other purposes and combinations than described in answer to question 29.

Suppose you should be on the road and you found it necessary to use a rheostat like illustrated in Fig. 20, for the control of two machines operating at 50 amperes each, then it would be very simple to connect the second arc to the very same rheostat as illustrated herewith in

Fig. 23. You will observe that in that case, for convenience sake, one of the line wires is connected to the center of the rheostat which then becomes one of 100 ampere capacity allowing 50 amperes through each side.

Another use to which this rheostat may be put is illustrated in Fig. 24 in which one arc may be operated at 100 amperes by merely connecting one line wire to the center of the rheostat and connecting the other two ends together to one of the carbons of the arc lamp. This latter combination will in many instances be of great value especially where A. C. is used and where no special means are provided for the control of the arc. Usually an A. C. arc is supplied by a transformer or Electric Economizer of some kind which delivers from 40 to 60 amperes A. C. to the arc.

For dense pictures, where great brilliancy is required, or where the distance is more than 90 or 100 feet, it becomes a great problem to project a picture with A. C. at the arc. In such a case a special transformer should be made, giving maybe 100 amperes A. C. to the arc, but we cannot always get such a transformer on short notice, therefore the illustration Fig. 24 should be kept in mind as one of the "tricks in the trade" which all up-to-date operators should be on to in case of an emergency.

32—Is it possible to use a 110 volt, 25 to 30 ampere rheostat as illustrated in Fig. 20 on 220 volt line? If so, state under what condition and what the result will be.

Ans.—With 220 volts on the line and with an arc which, on a pinch, we can maintain at a voltage of 60 to 65 on such a high line voltage, it is necessary to have a voltage drop in a rheostat equal to 65 subtracted from 220 or 155 volts.

On a 110 volt line we know that the ordinary rheostats for an arc are based upon an arc drop of 50 volts so that the voltage in the resistance is equal to 50 subtracted from 110 or a total of 60 volts.

If we take two rheostats intended for 110 volt operation with one arc in series we find that the voltage across the resistances will be 120, and if the voltage across the arc is 65 the total voltage drop of the arc and resistance is 185 volts.

In other words, on a 220 volt circuit with two 110 volt rheostats in series with the arc we would have a total drop of 185 which subtracted from 220 leaves 35 volts to be accounted for providing the amperes are maintained the same in all instances. This proves to you that under normal conditions it is not practical to take two rheostats intended for 110 volt operation for one arc and connect them in series for 220 volts at the same amperes, but you should have three rheostats of the 110 volt kind in series.

Going back to our original proposition of making use of a rheostat as illustrated in Fig. 20 on a 220 volt circuit we find that by operating the arc at 65 volts we require a 155 volt drop in the rheostat. One section of rheostat, Fig. 20 offers a drop of about 60 volts, therefore the other section if connected in series with it will offer a drop of 120 volts which, if deducted from the 155 volt drop required, leaves a balance of 35 volts which has to be taken care of by additional resistance equal to this drop or by allowing an increase in the current flow through the circuit.

FIVE HUNDRED STYLES IN STEEL CEILINGS GIVE EXHIBITORS BIG CHOICE

THE Berger Manufacturing Company, of Canton, Ohio, announces that its business in supplying steel ceilings, of which they have five hundred designs, the finishing of proscenium arches, box and balcony fronts with ornamental sheet steel has increased greatly within recent months.

This has been due to the desire on the part of theatre builders, architects and owners to make their houses more sanitary, fireproof and safe.

One of the most interesting and important facts is that designs of any kind can be had at any time. All styles of architecture have been followed in detail and that of various periods copied absolutely.

This makes it interesting to people who are remodeling and need finished material which shall correspond with the architecture of the interior or exterior of their houses.

OPERATION AND CARE OF DIRECT-CURRENT MOTORS

By Herbert W. Andem

OPERATORS having motor-generator economizers installed should observe the following simple directions in the operation of these outfits.

When starting direct-current motors be sure that the rheostat arm is in the off position. Then close the main switch.

Move lever of starting rheostat firmly on to the first contact-point, and hold it there two or three seconds to allow the motor armature to accelerate slowly; then move rheostat lever slowly from one contact to the next until it is in the short circuit position, where it will be held by the retaining magnet.

When stopping a motor, simply open the main switch with a quick movement to prevent an arc forming when breaking the circuit.

To insure the best operation, a systematic inspection should be made at least once a week. The points to be given special attention are as follows:

Cleanliness.—See that both interior and exterior of motor are kept free from water or dirt of any description. The exterior frame can be wiped off, while a small hand-bellows will serve to clean the interior parts and the windings.

Bearings.—See that excessive heating and wear of all bearings are prevented by proper lubrication and belt tension When linings of bearings become unduly worn, they must be replaced by new ones promptly.

Oil Wells and Rings.—See that oil wells are filled with a good quality of clean mineral oil nearly to the top of the over-flow hole of the oil filler. After the first week's run the oil should, under the average working conditions, be drained out about every sixty days, and replaced by fresh, clean oil. The drainage plug should be red-leaded or shellaced, and securely tightened, to prevent gradual leakage from the oil reservoir. The oil rings should move freely and carry sufficient oil up to the bearings.

Brushes.—See that a free movement of the brushes in their holders is maintained at all times. The brushes should also make a firm contact across the full face of the brush, and bear firmly against the commutator. As the brush wears down the adjustable spring tension should be moved up to take up this lessening of the tension on the brushes.

Commutator.—See that the commutator is kept clean and retains a polished surface. Ordinarily the commutator will only require occasional wiping with a piece of light canvas or non-linting substance very slightly coated with vaseline. If it becomes necessary to true up the commutator; or, replace brushes, these should be given the utmost attention to get them in the original condition of surface and brush contact.

Rheostats and switches should be kept clean and points of contact occasionally slightly lubricated with vaseline. An occasional drop of oil should be applied to the stud on which the rheostat arm swings.

The above simple suggestions and instructions, if rigidly attended to, will prevent trouble developing later. The old adage of "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" can well be heeded by operators in charge of electrical machinery. It is the little things that count in the long run.

CAMERON MOTION PICTURE PROJECTOR IS TAKEN OVER BY H. B. COLES

IT will be of interest to the trade to know that H. B. Coles, who has been connected with the sales management of two of the largest motion picture projection machine companies in the industry, has organized his own company.

The new organization is known as the Coles Picture Machine Corporation and has been started for the express purpose of manufacturing and selling the Cameron motion picture projector.

H. B. COLES

Knowing the sales end of the projection machine industry as well as he does, Mr. Coles should be in a position to do big things with his company.

At the present time there are in use about twenty-five Cameron machines which have stood up under the most severe tests for about three years in various theatres where the operators were not specially instructed in their care. In all cases the machines have demonstrated their ability to stand up and give satisfaction, which is the prime requirement in any projection machine.

Mr. Coles is not ready yet to state his selling plan, but says that it will be somewhat different from anything which has ever been tried in the past.

At a later date, the Cameron projector will be thoroughly discussed and illustrated in the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the benefit of the trade.

TWO THEATRES EQUIPPED WITH TWENTIETH CENTURY MOTOR GENERATOR BY HALLBERG

AS a gratifying result of the recent publicity given to his new Twentieth Century motor generator outfit, J. H. Hallberg reports that in one morning's mail he received an order from C. V. Danielson, Wilton, N. D., for a Twentieth Century, 220 volt, D. C. motor generator-economizer and also for a three phase A. C.-D. C. 30 to 70 ampere motor generator outfit to go to F. G. Spencer, Charlottetown, P. E. I., Canada.

Operating Electricity — Questions Answered — Repairing Equipment

Edited by J. H. Hallberg

Who Will Answer All Questions You Send in, No Matter How Simple or How Difficult

A PRACTICAL OPERATOR SHOULD BE A MEMBER OF EVERY EXAMINING BOARD

Local No. 626, Nashville, Tenn.—Local No. 626, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., requests a favor from you, as an authority on motion picture operating.

This city has an ordinance, requiring all operators to stand an examination, and have a license.

The examining board consists of a building inspector, a fire-chief and an electrical inspector.

Our organization has been in a violent controversy with the management of this city, in an effort to elevate our profession, and we find the examining board is in direct opposition to us. We feel that a practical operator should be placed on the examining board.

Ans.—The examination and licensing of motion picture operators by the municipalities has now become effective in practically all of the larger and medium sized cities. You yourself, have naturally, by forming your local organization, taken a step in the right direction with a view to not only secure for your organization the protection it deserves, but also to insure that only good and reliable operators secure positions.

In order to become a member of an organization like yours, I understand that an operator has to be a real operator, that is, he must know how to operate and take care of a modern machine booth. You naturally examine your own operators when they become members of your organization and by belonging to your organization the members will of course be benefited by any information desired on the subject of operating, as there will always be someone in the organization who knows what another one may not understand or know about.

It goes without saying that a body of operators knows more about the business than outsiders, and among the outsiders I naturally class the city officials.

There is no doubt in my mind that on the board there should be a representative of the fire department and the electrical bureau. It is not at all clear to me that a representative of the building department understands anything about picture projection, and I really think that the building inspector could be excluded. In his place there should be put a first-class, well informed operator, so that the board should, in my opinion, consist of three men, one an experienced motion picture operator; the other, the fire chief; and the third one an electrical inspector, or other representative thoroughly informed about the electrical equipment in an operating booth.

If a practical operator is not on the board it appears to me that many questions will be asked and require an answer which should not necessarily come within the knowledge of an ordinary operator. It also appears to me that many questions, which are the most pertinent and important ones from an operator's point of view, considering safety and perfect projection, will be overlooked.

It is easy to study and memorize a few answers as to the care of a moving picture machine, the connections required for different kinds of rheostats and transformers, the care of the film and the necessary precautions in handling the film. They are naturally the questions which will be put to a prospective operator by a board.

From my point of view it is altogether wrong to give an operator a license just because he knows how to prevent fire and how to connect the machine, which are the only points which concern the city. An operator should not receive a license until he knows how to project pictures in addition to the qualifications required by the city department, and that is, in my opinion, the main reason why a practical expert on motion picture projection should be a member of the examining board in every city and town.

According to the conditions which exist in many places, anybody who can answer a few questions concerning the safety of the equipment and what he would do in case of a fire, can get a license. I pity the manager who gets such an operator unless he is a member of a reputable and responsible union, or is in addition examined by an expert operator or similar authority.

It has come to my attention that in many of the moderately sized or smaller towns in particular, the electrical inspectors, in order to show their authority and apparent wisdom, ask questions of operators which really do not concern either the safety or practical side of good projection. These questions are often asked in a roundabout way to confuse and humiliate the applicant.

There can be nothing harder for an operator applying for a license than to meet such an inspector. We have all been before our school teacher sometime or other, and I think we can remember the day when we had to stand an examination. You admit we were all a little nervous. At that time it was only a matter of feeling and humiliation if you did not answer the question correctly. The possibility may have been that you had to stay in the same class another year.

When you take an examination as a motion picture operator then your bread and butter is back of the proposition. If you do not pass, due to what one might call the meanness or incompetency of an inspector, you stand a good show of never getting an operating job.

I know many operators able to put on good pictures who cannot answer all electrical questions put to them, especially if twisted.

The judgment of an experienced operator must, in accordance to my point of view, always be called upon if justice is to be done by an examining board of a municipality to motion picture operators.

WANTS TO KNOW IF HE MUST CHANGE LENS AND ENLARGE CURTAIN

H. B. O., Devils Lake, N. Dak.—We are taking the liberty of writing you for a little information.

Our curtain is now 9 x 12, a brick wall, but we can enlarge it to 10 x 13. The distance from the aperture plate to the screen is 68 feet, 4½ inches, and we are using five-inch lens. Would it be to our advantage to enlarge this curtain, and would it be necessary to change lens?

Ans.—A brick wall, if it is thoroughly dry and seasoned before you apply the finishing coat upon which the picture is to be projected, makes a very satisfactory screen. In this manner a perfectly flat surface is obtained and if the surface is stippled or roughened and then the compound, which should preferably be white with a bluish tint, is applied when dry you will have a soft and perfect surface, by which the picture will be reflected.

In many instances the surface of a wall screen is injured and turns, showing spots and blotches, due to the fact that the wall was not thoroughly dried out before the finishing coat was applied.

Your 9 x 12 screen is a good ordinary size for a small theatre not over 25 feet in width and where the distance is not more than 75 feet. However, if your theatre is wider and if you have plenty of height, I believe a 10 x 13 picture would look better.

Table of contents will hereafter be found every week opposite inside back cover.

Your 5-inch lens, if that is the equivalent focus of it, will give approximately a picture 9.1 feet high by 12.2 feet wide at a distance of 68 feet. If you desire this very same lens of 5-inch focus to project a picture 10 feet high by 13 feet wide, then it will be necessary for you to move your picture machine or aperture plate about 6 feet further back, so that your distance from the aperture plate to the screen will be approximately 74 feet.

If you cannot increase the distance between the machine and the screen then you must secure a new lens of 4¾-inch equivalent focus, which will at 68 feet project a picture approximately 9.7 feet high by 12.9 feet wide. As your distance is 4½ inches more than 68 feet, the 4¾-inch lens will give you a picture practically 10 x 13.

If your theatre is not more than 25 feet wide I would be tempted to keep the picture 9 x 12 as it now is with your 5-inch lens.

A good curtain compound applied carefully will give you a good finish and then after the machine has been set securely, after centering the light through the aperture plate on the screen focusing the outline of the aperture plate, the outline of the light should be marked off on the white wall and then the outside margin should be filled in with dull black, so as to come inside of the outline you made about one inch all the way around.

Remember that all surfaces for screens and the back outline should be matte or dull, not shiny. The only screen surface which is permitted to be of a shiny or polished nature is the metallic coated screen where high contrast and great brilliancy is the chief object.

BUFFALO OPERATORS TO HOLD THEIR DANCE NOVEMBER 17

THE Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, Local No. 229, Buffalo, N. Y., will hold its annual spot light and novelty dance at the German-American hall Wednesday, November 17.

The event is always attended by members of the theatrical profession in Buffalo and the near-by towns. It is expected that this year the affair will bring out in full force up-State operators and their friends.

THE Knickerbocker theatre, New York City, showing Triangle pictures, the Liberty in Cleveland and the house controlled by Manager Kemble in Brooklyn, N. Y., are using arc controller made by the Speed Controller Company, Inc., New York City.

Mr. Kemble has used the controllers all summer in projecting "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach music hall, and will install them at the Crescent for the opening of that house with Triangle pictures.

SPOKANE A CLEARING HOUSE FOR OPERATORS

ACCORDING to City Electrical Inspector W. A. Davis, Spokane is fast becoming a clearing house for motion picture operators of the Inland Empire. Since the Spokane city ordinance was passed, requiring operators to pass examinations and secure city certificates, seventy-one operators have been licensed.

Of this number many were from cities outside of Spokane. They believe possession of certificates will add to their ability to secure positions.

IN the issue of October 30, there was an error made in figure 21, on page 443. Instead of 50 amperes, as was stated, the strength of the current should have been given as 25, as mentioned in the text directly below figure 21.

WHEN A DYNAMO FAILS TO GENERATE; REASONS AND REMEDIES FOR THE CONDITION

By Herbert W. Andem

THIS case arises more frequently with a small sized dynamo than with a large unit. It is usually due to the inability of a self-exciting machine to "build-up," as it is expressed, its field magnetism.

At the start of running a dynamo to generate requires a certain amount of magnetism to be present, or retained, in the iron pole pieces. This is spoken of as "residual magnetism," and when this has been lost or destroyed in some way the dynamo will not "pick up" its voltage.

When the residual magnetism is too weak or has been destroyed, several reasons can be given for this to happen. Some of the more usual ones are a heavy vibration or jar to the machine.

A small outfit may receive a heavy jar from a fall when shipping it from place to place. The earth's magnetism will affect it also, at times. While the machine is rruning and the field circuit becomes broken or open, the strong current in the armature will react on the field magnetism, and either neutralize it or reverse its polarity. A single machine is not so apt to have its field current reversed as when a dynamo is connected with others.

When an operator finds the dynamo fails to build-up, it is advised to at first clean thoroughly the commutator, brushes and arms holding the brush-holders to the machine before sizing up the case of one of lost magnetism. After doing these things and the machine fails to generate, then he may best look over all the connections, especially the clamped connections around the machine, to see whether vibration has not caused some to become loose or even opened entirely.

Test for "Lost" Magnetism

If the residual magnetism has been lost, a test will show it by holding a nail or piece of iron against the iron pole face of one of the field coils. If the iron does not attract the piece held up to it, the magnetism has either been too weakened or lost.

It is then necessary to remagnetize the fields by sending a current through the field coils. This may be done by connecting to a source of electricity from another dynamo or battery of sufficient size.

If it fails to "pick-up" after the first application of this current, then try again by reversing the connections to the field-coils, since the magnets may have enough polarity to prevent them from building up in the direction first tried.

Also it may be suggested here to shift the brushes backward a little to make the armature magnetism assist that of the field.

If the magnet holds the iron held to it when not running, and then fails to hold this iron when it is running, the field connection should be reversed. This may be done by either changing the two armature wires or the field leads from the armature, but do not change both.

Building Up the Field With a Battery

After each of the above changes the field may have to be built up with a battery or other current, because the condition in these cases tend to destroy whatever residual magnetism may have been present.

If the external cricuit is short-circuited or the main switch from the machine is closed and the two carbons are together, it will also cause a dynamo to fail to pick-up its voltage; especially so with a shunt wound machine. A series dynamo will be assisted in building up by a temporary short circuit to the leads near or at the dynamo.

It often happens that the brushes are not set at the proper point; in fact, they may be set exactly wrong, so that the dynamo is incapable of generating any current whatever. This trouble is usually due to the fact that the proper position for the brushes is not the same for all kinds of machines.

Almost all ring armatures and some drum armatures require the brushes to be set opposite the "space" between the pole-pieces. On the other hand some armatures are wound so that the brushes have to be set in lines with the centres of the pole-pieces. Large machines are generally made this way.

Flexible Leads to Connections

It affords an easier position to see the set to the brushes at a glance, when in alignment with the poles. It also gives longer flexible leads to the connections to the commutator segments in case of a break at this point.

The fact is the proper position of the brushes depends upon the particular winding and internal connections, and no one should even state exactly where to set the brushes until he is familiar with the particular type of machine.

The proper position of brushes is the same for both generators and motors, except that in the former the brushes are given a "lead," meaning shifted a little in the direction of rotation, whereas motor brushes should be set a little backward.

The shifting is necessitated by armature reaction, which distorts the field magnetism.

THE STRAND, 1,000 HOUSE IN LEXINGTON, KY., OPENS WITH "ISLE OF REGENERATION"

THE opening of the new Strand theatre, Lexington, Ky., on October 15, was marked by three capacity audiences who freely expressed their delight with this new home of the screen drama. The theatre was opened with "The Isle of Regeneration." The building was designed by Joseph and Joseph, of Louisville, in Italian Renaissance, with white enamel brick trimmed in stone.

The main auditorium seats one thousand and the comfort of the chairs will be a great drawing card for the house. The seats are so arranged that there will be plenty of room to avoid anyone being disturbed by late comers. The balcony will accommodate four hundred, of which two hundred may be placed in the mezzanine boxes.

A semi-indirect lighting system is used throughout. Rows of air-vents at the top and near the bottom of the main auditorium afford a change of air by gravity to supplement the mechanical ventilation arrangement. The music for the theatre will be furnished by a pipe organ.

TEXAS THEATRE REOPENED BY MAN WHO BECAME EXHIBITOR AT THIRTEEN

JOHN MORRIS, JR., reopened John's theatre, Jacksonville, Texas, on October 6. The house originally began business in September, 1908, and stayed open continuously until July 15, 1914. During that time the theatre remained under his management. On July 15 Mr. Morris closed the house for the summer and opened an airdome, La Palma. This he leased a short time afterwards. It was closed by the lessee and never reopened.

Mr. Morris is well known in film circles in Dallas, from close business relations covering many years. He started in business at the early age of thirteen and will not reach his twenty-first birthday until this November. Mr. Morris has, therefore, practically owned and run John's theatre for the past seven years.

Should a Theatre Property Have Other Revenue?

The Question Whether Stores and Offices Are to Be Part of the Structure Discussed—In Some Cases Architect and Owner Have Considered the Matter with Great Care, Only to Find that Time Had Decided That They Were in the Wrong

THE question is often asked whether or not a property upon which a theatre is to be built, should be devoted entirely to its main purpose or whether additional revenue should be sought, through the provision in the plans of stores and offices.

The writer has known owner and architect to propound over this problem for an unusual period before a final decision was reached, and after using their best judgment, to have Father Time show them in the wrong.

We have previously noted that every detail of each individual problem must be studied by itself and this is no exception. Perhaps the greatest reason to give any consideration to provide stores and offices, either, or both, would be making it easier to obtain a suitable mortgage on the finished property.

It is a well known fact that the insurance companies and savings banks who are in the best position to grant large mortgages, do not look upon theatre properties as the safest of investments, and therefore look askance at any application for mortgage. It is further true that many will not grant a mortgage on such properties even for the smallest percentage of the true value of the same.

We may argue our heads off that fewer theatre properties have in the past been foreclosed for mortgage, than any other class of property, which is so. But that, nevertheless, will not change the mind of money lenders. We must face the existing conditions and stop theorizing, therefore, the providing of at least a certain amount of income, outside of the theatre property, brings the proposition into more of a business class, and a mortgage more readily obtained.

Additional Income

Another reason for such provision is naturally the additional revenue. It is the writer's opinion that where ground value is not of great moment, where increased seating capacity is obtained by devoting the entire property to the theatre, it is better to eliminate any and all additional tenants.

The extra seats thus obtained, even if filled only when the extra capacity is in demand, would generally more than pay the rental obtained from the additional tenants. A side mention may be made also of the fact of the lesser cost and the lesser insurance rates, that would result from the more simple problem.

The theatre tenant would not be bothered with the difficulties of administration such as heat, water, etc., that would have to be solved, in the more complex problem. With the entire occupancy of the land, a greater space for advertising matter could be provided and the whole proposition would smack more of the show house. We have, however, at times, quite a different condition in large cities. The value of the land in the centre of the population is so excessive that it is not advisable right at the start to burden the theatre with a first high cost of land upon which interest must be paid through rental.

Large Plots Not Obtainable in Big Cities

On the other hand, at times large parcels of ground cannot be purchased in the centre of cities at any cost. A solution has often presented itself by obtaining a large parcel of ground upon the interior of a city block, with access to the same from the main street through a narrow strip of ground, forming the main entrance. In a case of this kind, over the theatre entrance an office building thus built may be designed to great advantage and to great profit. Such a building if handsomely designed is of advertising value to the show house. It lends interest to the structure and the top story of such office structure may be devoted to a roof garden, which is not permitted in general, by the building laws, over the theatre proper.

Buildings of this kind may be found in most of our larger cities, the Palace theatre in New York, and the new Proctor theatre in Newark, are examples of such construction. The first floor of such buildings gives to the theatre a large and long lobby, accommodating at one time many persons awaiting the opening, or the change of the show, it provides good space for lobby display, and a central ticket office far more convenient, and more prominent than the recessed compartment.

PLAN TO LIMIT THEATRES IN BALTIMORE APPROVED BY EXHIBITORS

STEPS are to be taken in Baltimore for limiting the number of motion picture houses to be built in the city. This proposed legislation meets with the hearty approval of the leading exhibitors in Baltimore. As a matter of fact it is very likely that a measure is to be introduced into the city council, instigated by some of the Baltimore exhibitors. There is a feeling that there are now too many picture theatres in the city for the good of the business and a number of these places are now for sale without buyers.

President O'Meara, of the First Branch City Council, will take up with City Solicitor Field next week the advisability of preparing an ordinance restricting the location of moving picture theatres. He is doing so because of the numerous protests against such institutions in residential sections.

Mr. O'Meara has ascertained that the views of a number of councilmen are coincident, and that they also believe that the situation could be relieved by restricting the theatres to business streets and to blocks where the majority of the buildings represent a business development.

Because of the increasing number of ordinances for the establishment of moving picture theatres, City Councilman Tolson, of the sixteenth ward, is contemplating the introduction of a measure which will compel the building of the places within six months after final passage of the permits.

He is considering this step also because of a knowledge that in some instances authority to build the theatres has been obtained, but never exercised.

Mr. Tolson called attention to the possible practice of peddling this permit after it had been obtained from the council. Such a practice, in the opinion of Mr. Tolson and other councilmen with whom he has talked, could be stopped by a provision in moving-picture ordinances compelling the grantee to use the permit within six months. Failing such progress, he would have the permission automatically repealed.

BOSSNER LEAVES THE PARK, BOSTON, TO OPEN THEATRE IN CAMBRIDGE

WHEN W. Fred Bossner's four months' service as manager of the Park theatre, on Washington street, Boston, under the joint control of Paramount and the Park theatre company, came to an end, the entire corps of employes assembled in the theatre and gave him the surprise of his life.

To begin with, Charles Frank's symphony orchestra, which has been a big feature of the Park program under Mr. Bossner, played a special selection which merged into "Auld Lang Syne," sung by the audience.

Then a slide was flashed on the screen which read:

"MR. BOSSNER—AU REVOIR, BUT NOT GOOD-BY."

Lester Bigwood, head usher of the theatre, made a speech of presentation and handed the retiring manager a bouquet of flowers, a smoking jacket, a meerschaum pipe, a jar of tobacco, and from the Park theatre company a box of cigars.

Mr. Bossner expressed regrets that circumstances compelled him to leave behind him such a loyal band of workers, each one of whom had ever been eager to help him raise the standard of the house.

Mr. Bossner will open the new Inman Square theatre, in Cambridge, Mass. He had made elaborate plans for putting on the Farrar "Carmen" film November 1. It is understood that Paramount will still be represented on the Park's program at that time, although one Paramount release has been given up for a General film, the first of which, on view this week, is "Inheritance," by Essanay.

E. L. Knight, of Springfield, formerly manager of the Bijou, in that city, has assumed the position of manager under the Park theatre company, which is now in sole control of the house.

KIMBALL ORGANS INSTALLED IN LOEW'S ORPHEUM THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY, AND IN THE GLOBE THEATRE, BOSTON

THE largest theatre organs in New York City have just been completed by the Kimball Organ Company for Loew's Orpheum theatre. The instrument is a marvel in theatre organ construction. Built under the most unsatisfactory conditions the musical results obtainable cannot be surpassed.

This organ was fourteen months under construction. Robert Elliot, under whose personal supervision it was constructed and brought to its super-efficiency, deserves much credit and in consequence has been given the entire charge of the Kimball Organ Company's construction department.

This is an assurance to all buyers of Kimball organs that they will obtain the best in material and construction. The Orpheum theatre seats 2,500 and plays eight acts of vaudeville and Paramount features. The organ will be featured in solos and used in conjunction with an orchestra of twelve pieces for the feature pictures.

The Kimball company has recently also completed an organ in Loew's Globe theatre, Boston, Mass., where the addition of this musical equipment has met with great success. These organs have an improved automatic player equipment which is the last word in organ perfection.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

AUDIENCES MUST NOT BE FED TOO MUCH MELODRAMATIC MUSIC

THERE seems to be a furore at present for what are termed long hurries or agitatos by picture players. To have long numbers of this character, in fact, is not practical. There is a sameness in all such numbers. While there may be more notes or strains, as a rule they all sound similar, consequently these numbers should not be played longer than positively necessary. Melodramatic numbers are meant for effect playing only and no audience will appreciate them as good music.

Such numbers are only important in working up the climaxes of the tense dramatic situations in the picture play. Consequently, if you play them for any length of time before or after the picture point which you desire to accentuate, you in reality have killed the situation by making your music tiresome, failing to attract the necessary attention at the picture point in question.

It is nothing unusual to go into a theatre and hear a hurry or agitato played for five or more minutes. This is ridiculous and quite unnecessary. The audience must always be entertained, not jarred.

When there is lengthy excitable action opening with a fight or tumult, a hurry can be played until the action is accentuated, after which a properly selected gallop will hold the same temperament and you will be playing a number with a theme which will not jar or become tiresome. In substituting gallops to follow hurries you must exercise care, so as not to use gallops which are in reality fast polka movements.

Polka movements called gallops will never sound as if they were played fast, no matter how lively you play them, and it is impossible to give a musical impression of excitement or tumult with them. Such gallops are only good for horse races. When the screen action is of still greater duration, an overture with a long allegro vivace can be used, playing the allegro, then following with a hurried gallop until the end of the action.

Why Hurries Will Not Hold Interest

The temperamental effect is the same and your musical program will show more class, while it will not become tiresome to listen to. Hurries and agitatos are written in minor keys with the diminished seventh chord prominent, which is one reason why they will not hold interest very long, the musical possibilities being very limited under such conditions.

This does not mean that melodramatic music is not necessary in picture playing, but to illustrate its importance which you destroy by overdoing it. Agitated action on the picture screen when lengthy and not leading to an important picture climax, can be more entertainingly illustrated by slow high tension numbers, in legato movement with agitated strains accentuating the theme. Such agitated strains are often designated in music by the term meno mosso, meaning more movement. In such numbers the agitation is properly illustrated in your musical interpretation of the number.

Always make your decrescendos and diminuendos to follow the screen action. Picture humor is an essential accomplishment in picture playing. Don't allow the idea to root in your mind, that you can play a five reel feature having melodramatic inclinations, with five long hurries and five other numbers, and hope to have the audience appreciate your efforts.

Many times while seated with the theatre audience I have heard the remark, "I wish they would stop that and play something," when the music was grinding out a five-minute hurry.

Musician at Mercy of Audiences' Tastes

The musician should never forget, regardless of what his personal views or conveniences may dictate, we are always at the mercy of the audience. No exhibitor or manager is likely to continue the services of any musician, who can not command a certain amount of favorable comment.

My personal experiences have taught me to respect the comments of that audience which does not make a study of music, yet loves it. A theoretical knowledge of music does not make a good critic, for the brain that is tired of figures is the one that will find music a perfect diversion, being therefore in a more appreciative mood.

Dont forget that the success of the picture theatre is entirely due to the fact that the public finds wholesome diversion and change of thought in picture theatre entertainment. Sixty per cent. of your audience is tired when they come to your theatre. Don't let them go away tired and you surely will if you try to feed them a superabundance of melodramatic music.

THE only blind organist in a motion picture theatre in the United States is connected with the Regent, Harrisburg, Pa., of which Peter Magaro is manager, making his first appearance there in a recital on October 6. He is Professor C. Walter Wallace, who until now had been playing with great success in the Lyric, Reading, Pa.

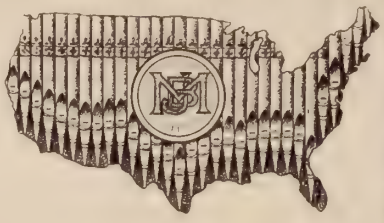
Professor Wallace is a musician of rare attainments. A remarkable thing about his playing in motion picture theatres is the fact that despite his affliction he is able to make the organ music conform with the acting on the screen.

This he accomplishes with the aid of his wife, who always sits at his side and indicates by different pressures of her fingers on his arm what kind of music is appropriate to the part of the film play being presented at any time. Miss Merchant, who has been organist at the Regent for several months, is to remain, she and Professor Wallace regularly dividing the programs between them.

Mr. Magaro has just had a four-manual organ installed in the Regent in place of the two-manual instrument, recently damaged by water from a flood backing up in the theatre cellar.

SONG WHICH MAY REPLACE "TIPPERARY" IN POPULARITY

THIS department has received copies of the march song, "Keep the Home-Fires Burning," Chappell & Co., Ltd., which will supersede the popularity of "Tipperary." It has a positive military suggestion in words as well as music. "The Perfect Song," from that most successful photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," is also published by Chappell & Co., 41 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City.



This number is the serious theme throughout the musical score of "The Birth of a Nation." It is an excellent number for organ, piano or orchestra. It makes an excellent romantic number.

Chappell & Co. is known as the publisher of the successful "Song of Songs."

Pipe Organ Show Pipes

will add a finishing touch to the interior of your theatre.

If your theatre is equipped with a pipe organ or a one-man instrument, our show pipes will give it the appearance of being equipped with an expensive cathedral organ.

We make these show pipes at a very low price. They are easy to install.

MUSIC SHOULD CHANGE WITH PICTURE THOUGHT ONLY

N. V., Mobile, Ala.—You are evidently laboring under the old impression that music must change with every scene. The music should change with the picture thought or temperament only. You lack a study of picture music repertoire.

After such a study you will find many numbers that have a pathetic or romantic appeal, giving a dramatic effect, suitable for illustrating agitation. You can avoid playing too much melodramatic music, which naturally will interrupt your better numbers, by being familiar with numbers of slow and agitated movement. You will know such numbers after a sympathetic study and playing them, endeavoring to have them express some meaning to you.

Interpretation in music is everything. Try "Apple Blossoms," published by Leo Feist; "Simple Aveu," by Thome, or "Chanson sans Paroles," by Tschaikowski, and you will get an idea of how you can musically illustrate high tension agitation on the screen with good music. Don't play these numbers the way the other fellow plays them, or says they should be played, but play so as to create some appeal with them.

You must not confine yourself entirely to the notes, but on the contrary endeavor to create style and color in your playing. The short dramatic numbers should only be used when certain important climaxes are to be accentuated. The most important in picture playing is the being familiar with the music you intend playing.

This will make picture synchronization with music simple. This is the one and only reason why original scores or positive suggestions have never been a success. It also places a responsibility upon the musician, which only one out of every hundred can master satisfactorily.

Unless you have a proper plot or see your picture in advance, I cannot see how you can get reasonably good results at all. Musical information will come to the picture musician in the near future. The question at present is, What will be more beneficial for the many?

SCHUMANN-HEINK COLLEAGUES FURNISH MUSIC FOR QUIMBY IN FT. WAYNE, IND.

W. C. QUIMBY, Ft. Wayne, Ind., one of the most successful exhibitors in the country, has surrounded his Paramount pictures with the best available music possible to secure.

His orchestra consists of Gaston Bailhe, former soloist of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra; Emmerean Stoerber, the celebrated German celloist, recently with the Thomas Symphony Orchestra, Chicago; Prof. George Baihle, pianist of the European School of Music; Helen Kinkade, organist, who began the study of music at the age of eight years; and Clarence Edwards, organist, who studied abroad for four years.

On October 14 these artists gave a joint concert, at two-dollar prices, at the Jefferson theatre, in Ft. Wayne, with the famous singer, Madam Schumann-Heink, which speaks for their ability.

OTTAWA OPERATORS IN A PICTURE FOR PUBLIC TO SEE IN THEIR OWN CITY

THE members of the Operators' Union, Ottawa, Can., had a film taken last week outside the Dominion Vaudeville theatre. This picture shows the whole membership of the union and will be shortly shown in the local picture houses, with a view to allowing the public to see the manipulators of machines which show pictures for their enlightenment and amusement.

The Operators' Union has commenced an instruction class for the benefit of assistants. The first of these classes was held a week ago. Attendance is compulsory and this ensures a successful outcome. However, judging from the number present at the first class, a week ago, little urging will be necessary.

NOTES.—This is a wonderful picture in its portrayal of love and passion and requires that your music at all times must have a romantic appeal.

Your numbers must be played quietly, yet expressively, throughout. Nos. 1 and 17 should be sweet, slow numbers in major keys. Nos. 2, 11 and 13 should be intermezzo-trots having a French musical accent. Nos. 3, 7, 9, 12, 20 and 22 are all slow numbers, having a dramatic as well as a romantic appeal. These numbers should have an agitated strain in minor key. Must be slow and played legato.

Nos. 14 and 24 are similar numbers; the numbers suggested should be used if possible. No. 5 is also a similar number, not quite as serious and the minor strain is therefore unnecessary. Nos. 4, 10, 21 and 23 must be slow legato lento waltzes wherein the minor keys predominate. Should be classy waltzes. No. 8, any concert waltz. No. 15 must be a concert waltz, with a long romantic introduction.

Nos. 6 and 18 should be light 2/4 intermezzos. Must not have the Western suggestion. Nos. 16 and 19 are melodramatic numbers, as are published by the Photo Play Music Company, 1520 Broadway, New York City. These numbers suggest screen agitation and must not be heavy or played fast.

CONVINCING PROOF

There are 75 Kimball Organs in use in Moving Picture theatres

IN CHICAGO

We believe this is absolutely convincing proof not alone of the value of the Kimball Organs, but of the necessity of organ music as a part of the program in picture theatres.

Thousands of persons have been induced to pay their initial visit to a "movie" because of the attraction of beautiful music.

Any owner or prospective purchaser of a moving picture theatre that hasn't a Kimball Organ as a part of his program is overlooking a valuable asset.

Perhaps among our hundreds of customers there are many who will tell you honestly what they think of organ music and of the Kimball Organs.

SPEER TOLD YOU SO

NOW WE LET MR. G. DENNIS STATE HIS EXPERIENCE!!

SPEER CARBON COMPANY, St. Mary's Pa.
G. P. Fryling, Treasurer.

THE GRAND THEATRE, Williamsport, Pa.
October 5th, 1915.

Dear Sir: I have been putting your carbons to the most severe tests possible. The results obtained have been very gratifying. The illuminating qualities of the "SPEER" carbons are the equal, if not the superior, of any other make. I have tried your carbons alongside of the "BIO," admitted as the best of foreign makes. I have been an enthusiastic boomer for "BIO'S" ever since their introduction in this country; in fact, I was one of the first users of the "BIO," and now am just as enthusiastic over the "SPEER."

The conditions under which I made the comparative tests are as follows:

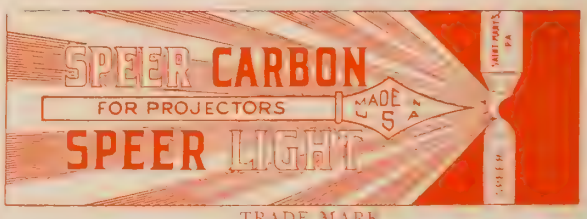
Two Power's Six A machines, each burning from 65 to 70 amperes of direct current on a voltage of 110. In one machine used "Bio's" and "SPEER" in the other, then reversed the tests to make allowance for any difference there may have been in amperage. The result being that your carbon was just as brilliant, gave just as white a light, and on same pictures the light seemed more penetrating than with the "Bio's." In explanation, may say that I mean by "penetrating" that the picture seemed to stand out better and was clearer in every way.

If you will take some honest criticism, I have the following to offer:

In making the tests referred to have discovered one defect in your carbons which I feel sure you can remedy. The binder of your carbon does not seem to be dense or fine enough. If you will examine them you can find a number of minute cracks running lengthwise. The arc or rather part of the arc has a tendency to break out through these cracks, causing a dimming of the light on the picture. The core or light giving part of the carbons burns perfect. Otherwise you have a real carbon. I am using the "Speer" entirely now and but for the one defect am perfectly satisfied.

If I can assist you in any other way of making further test, am at your command.

Respectfully yours,



(Signed) GARFIELD DENNIS, Chief Operator.

ALBERT CHEVALIER

Supported by

England's Favorite Actress

Florence Turner

In a Masterly Film Presentation of his Coster Play—
Dramatized from his Best Loved Song of the same name

"My Old Dutch"

THERE are many better-than-ordinary reasons why every Exhibitor should book "MY OLD DUTCH." Albert Chevalier is one of the greatest actors in the world today; internationally known as such. Florence Turner is an actress. She does much more than pose and look pretty. The play, taken from Chevalier's famous Coster song, familiar to millions of Americans is clean, wholesome, tender, strong and above all human. The production cost an immense sum—so great in fact, that if released by the average feature concern, the rental WOULD BAR ANY BUT THE BIGGEST, HIGHEST PRICED THEATRES IN THE COUNTRY FROM SHOWING IT. The Universal's distribution of overhead enables us to place this superb picture on the regular Universal Program at a REASONABLE ADVANCE—one which enables ANY Exhibitor to show this truly great picture—ADDING PRESTIGE to his theatre and PROFITS TO HIS BANK ACCOUNT. This is a business proposition which we urge you in your own interest to investigate immediately. Write or wire your Exchange for full particulars, or address

The Triangle Army is Growing Swiftly

Every day finds well known exhibitors lining up in the Triangle phalanx. They are coming in for just one reason—we'll leave you to guess what it is.

As an example, take Baxter of Denver. What would make Baxter contract to pay $50,000 a year for Triangle service in his new Isis Theatre but a fairly definite conviction that he was going to get it—and much more back? If you know Baxter you know he's no trailer. He gets in early on a good thing.

And Evins of Atlanta. If he bought carelessly his Vandette Theatre would soon be in the financial discard. But he's in the Triangle line-up to the tune of about $40,000 a year. He's made money in Atlanta, now he's insuring himself to make more.

Gross of the Columbia Theatre in Dayton sat down with a pencil and figured that if he spent $40,000 in one year for pictures they would have to be mighty good pictures—in fact much better than anything he had ever seen. So he looked at them at the Knickerbocker in New York and—signed a Triangle contract.

There are Baxters—Evins', Gross' in many other cities. All of them looking for better profits. Perhaps you are one.

"Decidedly Distinctive"

Boston, Washington, Dallas, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Baltimore, were some of the territories represented by visitors to New York.

A dozen exchange men—old, experienced, hard bitten—men who know the game, sat in the darkened projection room in New York to pass judgment on the promises we made that the New Kriterion Program would be worthy of their best efforts, that it had everything to insure its success—stars, story, direction, NOVELTY.

And the universal verdict was—"IMMENSE—BEST THING WE HAVE SEEN YET."

And these men, mind you, were backing their judgment with cold hard cash.

For the Kriterion Program is being built on conservative lines by successful business men who take nothing for granted.

Poe Brought to Life Through Genius of Henry B. Walthall

No tragedy sears the soul of man as the loss of the woman he loves.

Edgar Allan Poe, in the death of his wife, drained to the lees the cup of sorrow. To his grief was the added sting of death by cold and starvation.

Through night's long hours he knelt by her body in a bare, wind-swept room, his spirit broken, his soul tasting the dregs of uttermost despair.

Out of heart-rending tragedy his genius spoke in "The Raven." He probed to the depths those unfathomable mysteries of life. He pictured the greatest happiness that comes to man—Love, and the greatest desolation—Death. This is why "The Raven" strikes straight to the heart.

Henry B. Walthall, the image of Poe, a man of the same mold and temperament, who thinks and feels as did Poe, interprets America's greatest poet as no other living being could.

His genius sparkles on the screen as did Poe's in literature. He gives to the world a living Poe, the Poe of Love and Song, the Poe of Hope and Happiness, the Poe of Desolation and Despair.

This great presentation is embodied in Essanay's six-act photoplay, depicting the life of Poe, as written by George C. Hazelton and directed by Charles J. Brabin. Mr. Walthall is ably supported by Warda Howard and an all star cast.

Putting the Cart Before the Horse

ONCE upon a time the bread-making business was in a disorganized condition.

A lot of people—too many—were making bread. A vast amount of it grew stale before it could be sold.

Finally, one baker said to himself: "Everyone wants bread. I can sell every loaf I can make. All I need is a proper method of distribution."

So he sat down and worked out a distributing system that was one of the seventh wonders of the world. Expense was no consideration.

HE had a squadron of gorgeous delivery wagons built to order. None but thoroughbred horses drew them through the city streets.

He opened fifty or seventy-five stores with plate glass fronts and de luxe trimmings, marble counters, immaculately-dressed clerks, and uniformed flunkeys to let the customers in and out.

He canvassed the residential districts like a ward boss, and had a delivery list running into the thousands. He advertised like a circus.

FOR a month his stores were crowded. Then his trade took a terrific tumble. In two weeks it was so bad that the store managers nearly had heart failure when they saw a stranger enter the store.

The only busy part of his system was the main office, where he had to hire an extra force of clerks to handle notices from his customers to discontinue serving them after that date. After that was over, he fired the entire staff, with the exception of one man, and told him that if he would report every other Tuesday, he'd find enough to keep him busy for a couple of hours.

Then he shut himself in his office and began to hunt for the answer. While he was so engaged, a friend in the same line of business dropped in to call.

"I THOUGHT you'd gone out of business entirely," said the friend.

"Not yet, but presently," said the baker.

"Why should you?" the friend inquired. "You've got a sales system that is the envy of all your competitors. Six weeks ago we all thought you had the town bottled up."

"That was six weeks ago," murmured the baker wearily.

"WAIT till I get through," said the friend. "There's just one thing the matter with your proposition."

"Yes?" exclaimed the baker, eagerly. "For Heaven's sake, what is it? I've been looking everywhere for it."

"Your bread," returned the friend.

"My bread?" echoed the baker.

"Yes, your bread. The people won't stand for it. Every time you sell a loaf you lose a customer. Once is once too many for them.

"Your bread is either overdone or underdone, or it's soggy, or hard or tasteless. People aren't ultra-finicky about bread, but they're too particular to buy your kind more than once.

"That's where the rest of us come in. You've got the system. We've got the goods. The people will pay for the system if you deliver them the goods, but not otherwise."

"BUT think of my enormous expense," complained the baker. "I had to economize somewhere."

"Sure you did," retorted the friend. "But you economized in the wrong place.

"If you had put some of the thousands into your bread that you put into the varnish on your wagons or the pedigrees of your horses, you'd be on the corner of Easy street and Luxury avenue today."

"Do you really think so?" asked the baker.

"No, I don't think so," replied the friend. "I know it."

MORAL—A good distributing system is all right, providing you have the goods to distribute.

A rather obvious moral, it would seem, and yet one not readily recognized as applicable to pictures.

THERE are many ways to sell pictures successfully—comprehensive distributing facilities; effective selling methods; advertising to the public—all these are necessary factors.

But all of these are based upon one greater factor—good pictures; and all of these are bound sooner or later to collapse if they are not based upon good pictures.

YOU may discuss the most elaborate schemes to increase the circulation of pictures, but they all end at one point; namely, they must be based upon good pictures. You may put the schemes into effect and the result will be the same.

If one man today owned a raw stock plant, a projection machine plant, a great distributing system, his own theatres and advertised to the million people daily he would not eventually succeed against the other man who produces consistently good pictures—for the simple reason that the public will go to see the latter's pictures. You cannot divert them except with better pictures.

GOOD pictures are the basis of success, the only basis; and, let it never be forgotten, the basis of the good picture is the story told upon the screen.

Vol. XII November 13, 1915. No. 19

Publicity As It Was and As It Is

ONE of the best proofs that the making and marketing of motion pictures is becoming a business is the new attitude of the publicity men of the various producers toward the newspapers.

Formerly it was like every other transaction in the field, a game—a game of bluff, of poker, of "how much can I get," versus "how little can I give you?"

When the editor saw the press agent, or his sheet, coming, he put his valuables in the safe, figuratively speaking, and hung out his "Busy Day" sign. If the press agent got anything at all, it was not because he could offer news, but because he was advertising in the columns of the paper.

AND the whole object of the encounter was to create, out of a cloud of rhetoric, a mirage of news, so that the editor imagined he was not being fooled by simonpure publicity "dope."

The prime mistake of the old press agent was that he tried to create news, forgetting that news is news because it cannot be created. It may be discovered, unearthed, dug up from where it lies buried, but "news" that is invented is fiction and nothing else.

THOSE days, in a very material degree, are over. Not altogether, of course, because a good many press agents still cling to the old-fashioned way of getting publicity. But the younger, progressive, intelligent press-agent knows better.

Real confidence and respect on the part of the newspaper and the motion picture publicity man, and incidentally, for motion pictures, began when the publicity man stopped writing news items as if he were filling so much space he had bought at the regular advertising rates, and began to write as he knew the other contributors to the paper were required to write.

In all these, the realization that the short item is the backbone of a company's effective publicity is increasingly apparent. It must, and it will, become more so, until the short item has received the predominant recognition it deserves on every press sheet in the business.

But its most exhilarating effect is upon the press agent who "puts it over."

And the big story, in itself, fails because it cannot be repeated often enough.

It is the daily stream of paragraphs, notices, news brevities given to the readers of a newspaper every day in the week that drives home the publicity to its destination.

Without these the big story is as barren in results as a display of fireworks, and it is only worth anything because it is connected by these slender but powerful chains of day-in, day-out publicity which the self-centered press-agent affects to despise, but which are the cornerstone of his efficiency.

In Time of Peace, Prepare for War Insanity

THERE have been numerous startling as well as ridiculous instances of war panic and hysteria, both here and abroad, since August 1, 1914. But we do not recall a single one which, for stupidity and absurdity, parallels the action of the motion picture censor for British Columbia in regard to the Universal feature, "Judy Forgot."

"Judy Forgot" was condemned by the censor for the province. The reason he gave for his verdict was—unbelievable as this may seem—that the picture was part of a great German propaganda.

The picture is a farce-comedy. It was written and produced in this country before any such catastrophe as a European war was thought of, except in the chancelleries of Europe. The single element of German atmosphere in the entire production is that the bride and bridegroom spend their honeymoon in Heidelberg, and consequently a few of the scenes of the production are laid there.

If the censor knew as much about motion pictures as he imagines he knows about German propaganda, he would be very seriously inclined to doubt whether the scenes were made in Heidelberg.

None of these perfectly evident and accessible facts made any impression upon him. The word "Heidelberg" in the sub-titles had the same effect upon him that a mouse has upon a woman. And he behaved as a woman would toward a mouse—only more so.

The whole incident, apart from its war aspects, proves, of course, that the British, while they have developed most of their other resources, are still as far behind America as ever in their sense of humor.

The Daily Press and the Picture

FEW newspapers, as yet, have reduced their reviews of motion pictures to a sound and sensible basis.

That is to say, they do not understand that the picture is to be criticised as a picture, not as an offshoot of the stage play. They occupy a great deal of space in reassuring themselves that the silent drama can never take the place of the spoken drama.

What they should be doing is telling their readers the merits or the defects of the picture under review. What the stage is, or was, has nothing to do with the case. Comparisons are useless. The motion picture is an individual art in itself, and the newspaper critic will have to learn this fact, and learn something of what that art means, before his criticisms will be intelligent, not to say, worth anything to his readers.

The Press, the Press Representative and the Picture—V

A Dramatic Editor on a Detroit Newspaper Discusses the Handicaps and the Obstacles to Real Co-operation with the Manufacturers' Press-Agents—Nor Are the Exhibitors Much Better or More Intelligent in Their Recognition of What the Editor Wants—How a Rotogravure Section Was Received by the Producers

By A. L. WEEKS
Dramatic Editor, Detroit News

"WHY don't you print more motion pictures?" the proprietor of a photoplay theatre asked me the day before your representative put the same question. My answer to both was the same:

Because the matter intended for publication sent me by the film producing companies is not worth putting into type. When the press agent of a two-dollar attraction comes into my office the week before the show reaches the city, he has from a score to fifty photographs, a dozen special stories and as many reading notices. From this variety of material I may choose what suits my purpose.

The motion picture theatres almost without exception send me one picture, which I must use or use none at all, one reading notice which is either cut from a press sheet or mimeographed, and on special stories.

The one exception in Detroit is a theatre which employs a press agent, who is a former newspaper man, and has some idea of the demands of a newspaper.

What the Manufacturers Do

One company sends me every week a dozen photographs taken from a weekly serial which it is manufacturing. With the photographs is a synopsis of the week's instalment. You would expect that the names of the actors would be written on the back of each picture, but they aren't.

How this company can delude itself into thinking that any newspaper would print either the synopsis or the pictures I cannot understand. The whole package (which comes under a ten-cent stamp) goes into the waste basket.

Several film companies send their press matter in booklet form, very attractively printed, but it probably never occurred to them that if an editor cuts a story from the page of their pomphlet, he dstroys the stories on the other side. Often a story is continued over the page, and then it cannot be used at all.

Of the stories which come on neat and business-like sheets, usually fifty per cent. concern some dare-devil exploits of some little known actors—the stories palpably fakes and not worth printing even if they were true because the actors are not prominent.

Two or three companies send mats with their press matter. My paper never uses mats, and not many big city papers do. Too often they do not fit the columns or are either too coarse or too fine screen for the paper.

A Case of Indifference

Some months ago my paper began the publication of an expensive supplement in the rotogravure process. I wrote to a dozen film companies offering to print photographs of their stars if they would send them to me. Three or four sent pictures; others wrote that they would send them, that the matter had been referred to Mr. So-and-So—and the pictures never came; and some of the companies never acknowledged my letter.

The extravagant superlatives of the theatrical press agent have long been axiomatic, but I don't believe that P. T. Barnum in his palmiest days could out-praise some film press agents.

One theatre sends me every week a reading notice to which it is entitled by its advertising contracts. Every week the notice begins with the statement that this the finest motion picture ever produced. The notice continues in this strain and of course very little of it gets into the paper.

If the notice were worded more conservatively, I would print twice as much about the film.

I don't believe my experience is uncommon. Theatre proprietors say I am prejudiced against the motion picture. Those who know me know I am not.

But I am prejudiced against press matter which is either lies or nonsense, and I won't print it. We editors—and I know I speak for three—would gladly print more about the photoplays and the players if we could get it.

We realize that our readers want it, but I'm afraid we must do without it until motion pictures develop press agents who know something about writing for newspapers.

ILLUSTRATING THE ARRANGEMENT OF MATERIAL IN THE PARAMOUNT PRESS SHEET

PARAMOUNT PRESS, the weekly clip-sheet issued by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for use by newspapers, is another commendable example of intelligent endeavor to obtain the co-operation of the newspaper by co-operating with the newspaper. Last week's subject, the Selig Polyscope Company's Paste Pot and Shears, treated in some detail on this page, bears little or no resemblance to Paramount Press, but the two are equally available in form, and the presentation of news, even though Paramount Press, as a single sheet, is necessarily more limited than the "two pages in four" Paste Pot and Shears.

Within the limits of the single sheet, however, the results are such as to engage the favor of the motion picture department editor.

Newspaper make-up, simple and clear in form, is employed, the five leading stories of the issue ranging across the top of the page. Where cuts are to be used, a sample cut is shown in the body of the story, and occasionally special cuts, not connected with any particular item, are inserted, the result being an average of four or five illustrations to an issue. A two column department of squibs and personalities is set in at the bottom of the page under the caption, "Just the Gist of It."

One marked difference between Paramount Press and Paste Pot and Shears may be noticed.

No attempt is made by the Paramount press-sheet to furnish complete data of the month's releases, as in the case of the Selig weekly. The Paramount organ is issued upon the assumption, it would seem, that the elementary information concerning titles, casts, release dates and plots will be supplied to the newspapers by the Paramount exhibitors in each city.

The Aim of Paramount Press

The aim of Paramount Press is, therefore, to furnish the editors with additional material of a semi-feature of special nature, of usable length, but designed to supplement the theatre's announcements, and provide reading matter of general interest to the readers about Paramount stars and affairs.

The question is not one of superiority of method. The two methods are different and distinct. The popularity of both press-sheets is enough to prove that both are practically successful. We are comparing them merely for the sake of pointing out various ways of approach to the newspaper, each equally good.

The general appearance of Paramount Press reminds one, too, that the press-sheet of the present day is acquiring a refreshing sense of modesty as to the importance of its company and its product in the life of the nation. Its editor no longer spends his time in ringing all possible changes on the name of his company. He has gained a sense of news values.

He assumes the interest of the newspaper in motion pictures in general. He assumes—as it is now possible to do—that its editors are aware of the existence of his company; if not, he introduces himself and his company. But he only asks to be allowed to contribute a proportionate share of the newspaper's motion picture news, and asks only that the stories be accepted for what they are worth. If they are not used the fault is his. They should have been better stories.

Paramount Press is an example of this new attitude. Past Pot and Shears is another. The Metro press sheet, which will be reviewed here next week, is a third.

ROBERT B. MANTELL AND GENEVIEVE HAMPER ARE STARRED IN THIS NOV. 7 RELEASE

Triangle Service Signed for 200 Theatres Already

Company Expects to Put the Pictures on in 250 Houses Before the Release Days, November 7-8, Are Due, and Places No Limit on Expectations After That Date

THE Triangle Film Corporation announces that up to the end of October contracts have been made with more than two hundred theatres for the Triangle service, the first week of which is released November 7-8. It is considered probable that the service will start with at least two hundred and fifty houses. Judged by the eagerness of exhibitors to enlist under the Triangle banner, the opening of the New Year should witness double that number of theatres giving the Triangle plays.

One reason for this is that a considerable number of the contracts signed thus far are with so-called "service" theatres. Leading exhibitors, like W. H. Kemble, of Brooklyn; Jake Wells, of Norfolk and Richmond; Hulsey, of Dallas and Houston, expect to widen out the service from their own immediate houses to allied neighboring houses that appreciate the enormous prestige and great drawing powers of film attractions supervised by Griffith, Ince and Sennett.

Looking over the list of more than two hundred Triangle exhibitors, one notes the unusual number of "big city" legitimate playhouses included therein. Thus the Kernan Estate interests in Baltimore, represented by Messrs. Renton and Schanberger, are remodeling the Auditorium theatre there for the Triangle plays and will keep the house up to the same high standard as their Maryland theatre, the home of "big time" vaudeville.

It is rumored that one of the most important downtown playhouses in Pittsburgh will have the service as soon as a great attraction, now playing there, completes its run. Poli's will have it in New Haven, the Mishler and Scherer houses in Johnstown and Altoona, the Liberty in Cleveland, the Gaiety in Springfield, Ill., the New Isis in Denver, the Minneapolis in Minneapolis, the Liberty theatres in Seattle and Spokane, the Majestic at Des Moines, the Proctor houses, suburban to New York, the Trent in Trenton, the Jake Wells theatres in the eastern South, the Crescent (now the Triangle) in Brooklyn, the Powers in Grand Rapids, the Southern in Columbus, and many others.

Among the picture magnates who have taken the Triangle for their distinctively picture-exhibition theatres may be named B. S. Moss, A. L. Shakmann, Picker and Bennett in Manhattan and the Bronx; Nathan Ascher, A. M. Andrews, A. Bartelson in Chicago; Simpson and Gordon in Rochester; W. A. True in Hartford; C. J. Gross in Dayton; S. M. Baxter in Denver; J. G. Evins for Atlanta; T. S. Abernethy for Birmingham; Wassman for Nashville; E. H. Hulsey for Dallas, Houston, Galveston and Waco; Jensen for Seattle, and Clune for southern California theatres. These are names of exhibitors picked almost at random from the list.

Small towns, as well as medium-sized ones, and all the large cities, are in the list. The exhibitor at Plainfield or Watertown or Moline or Massillon or Gadsden will, of course, give only a sixty or ninety-minute entertainment and the musical features will necessarily be less pretentious than, say, the Auditorium, Baltimore, can afford; but the films will be identical. The small-town patron will get "The Lamb," "The Iron Strain," "My Valet" and "A Game Old Knight," with Fairbanks, Farnum, Hitchcock and Murray.

Big Four Gets Ready for Big Hit in Year-End List

More Strong War Dramas to Stir Patriotism Following Vitagraph's "The Battle Cry of Peace"—A Lubin, Entitled "The Nation's Peril," and a Selig, "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," Meant as an Answer to the Sentiments Expressed in a Certain Weak-Kneed Song, and Other Good Plays

WITH two war plays—Vitagraph's "The Battle Cry of Peace," and Lubin's "The Rights of Man"—the V-L-S-E's program for the next quarter, will bear three other dramas.

The first of these, an Essanay extra, is called "The Crimson Wing." Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, the author of "The Crimson Wing," is a well-known Chicago and Washington society leader and litterateur. He therefore made the most of his wide acquaintance among people of wealth, and secured the grounds and homes of such prominent personages as Harold and Cyrus McCormick, Orville Babcock, James Ward Thorne, Scott Durand and Howard Shaw, for his garden and villa scenes.

E. H. Calvert, a West Point man, who spent fourteen years in active service with the U. S. army, plays the leading role with Ruth Stonehouse. Mr. Calvert also directs the play.

Following this war play, Lubin will release through the V-L-S-E, a drama of preparedness against war called "The Nation's Peril." This is scheduled to appear November 22. It will probably be in five reels, featuring Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe.

Uncle Sam's Ships in a Lubin

The entire Atlantic squadron, including battleships, torpedo boats, submarines, destroyers and a marine corps were utilized in making this picture. It was directed by George W. Terwilliger.

Selig is the remaining manufacturer of the Big Four to capitalize the public's interest in the question of international argument. Its release, scheduled for December 13, will be a Red Seal play entitled, "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier." As is apparent, it is an answer to the popular song, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier." Harry Mestayer, the notable stage star, will enact the leading role. He will be supported by Eugenie Besserer, and an all-star cast. Gilson Willets is the author of the drama, and Frank Beals the producer.

"The Raven," is to be released November 8 by Essanay, through the V-L-S-E. Those who have seen the play say that the acting of Henry B. Walthall as Edgar Allan Poe, will stand as a high-light in the photoplay school of interpretation for a long time to come.

Essanay will follow this feature with a five-part drama, to be released December 6, called "The Alster Case," featuring Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse.

Walthall Again

On December 20, "A Daughter of the City," in five parts showing E. H. Calvert and Marguerite Clayton, will be released. Mr. Walthall again makes his return on January 3, with Edna Mayo in a six-part drama from the Broadway success, "The Misleading Lady."

Selig's contribution to the V-L-S-E program for November, will be an idyllic production of Charles Major's story, "Sweet Alyssum," in which Tyrone Power and Kathlyn Williams will be starred.

The next Lubin release after that of "The Nation's Peril," will be on December 6, when the story of sea life, captioned "The Man's Making" will be released. This was produced by Jack Pratt, with Richard Buhler in the leading role, Rosetta Brice supporting. It is in five parts.

On December 20 this company will show Edgar Lewis' first production for the Lubin Company, dramatized from William Vaughn Moody's "The Great Divide." It was produced at the Grand Canyon, Arizona, with Ethel Clayton and House Peters. Others of the cast are Mary Moore, Warner P. Richmond and Hayden Stevenson. This also is in five parts.

Hitchcock in January Comedy

In January, Raymond Hitchcock will be seen in a Lubin comedy in five reels, probably called "The Wonderful Wager," based on the story of "The Ford Flivver," written by George V. Hobart, and adopted for the screen by Mark Swan.

In this picture, the entire Washburn circus will be used.

Three V-L-S-E releases are announced for November by the Vitagraph Company. "The Turn of the Road," a five-part feature produced by Tefft Johnson, in which Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour, Bobby Connelly, Naomi Childers and Robert Gaillard, will be seen in the portrayal of the principal roles, is the first, to be released November 1.

A Cyrus Townsend Brady story, "Heights of Hazard," that contains every known thrill, will add additional interest to the month's program. It will be released November 15. "Heights of Hazard" is also a five-part feature and will introduce Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff and Charles Kent in the leading characterizations.

Robert Edeson, Fay Wallace, Lillian Burns, Charles Eldridge, John T. Kelly, and a special cast of Vitagraph players, will be seen in "The Cave Man," on November 29, produced under the direction of Theodore Marston.

On December 13 there will be released, "A Price for Folly," one of the strongest dramas on the Vitagraph program. It was written by George P. Dillenbeck, and produced in five parts by George D. Baker, with Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Harry Morey, Charles Kent, Louise Beaudet, Ethel Corcoran and Arthur Cozine.

Frank Daniels, the inimitable king of comedy, whose first Vitagraph release, "Crooky," established him as a screen comedian in a class by himself, will round out the year's Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features, on December 27, in "What Happened to Father," written especially for him by Mary Roberts Rinehart, produced by C. Jay Williams.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" Is a Call to Arms in Boston

National Defense Picture Takes Public by Storm and Brings Forth Eulogium from Roosevelt, Who Says Every American Should See Blackton's Production

Boston, Nov. 2.

"THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" was shown to the Boston public for the first time Monday night, November 1. Where "The Birth of a Nation" had entertained its countless patrons, the Vitagraph's silent plea for preparedness began its bombardment of Boston.

The picture made a marked impression on its first night. As former President Roosevelt remarked, it is a picture every American should see, and Boston is beginning to realize that fact.

The various scenes which depict the invasion of American shores and the helplessness of the nation to withstand that invasion were received with deep thought by the first-night audience. Without doubt the seven weeks of the film's run at the Majestic theatre will bring out crowds.

Meanwhile the New England rights to "The Battle Cry of Peace" have been sold to a syndicate. What the price is no one will announce, but report places it in the vicinity of $60,000. The syndicate which bought the rights consists of: Frank J. Howard, pioneer motion picture exhibitor in this section; Arthur E. Lord, M. Shoolman, Nathan H. Gordon and Ernest Hortzmann, of the Gordon amusement interests, and R. W. Drown. Plans will be announced.

When the new Toy theatre in Providence, R. I., a theatre which is one of the most unique in the United States, since its entire orchestra floor is taken up by loge boxes, was opened for private inspection Sunday night, October 31, an audience distinguished by the presence of state, city and military officials was present to view the Vitagraph spectacle, "The Battle Cry of Peace."

The high officials present expressed themselves much pleased with the film, and stated that they recognized the great good such a picture could do for the country in arousing the people to a sense of responsibility concerning the conditions of the nation's defenses. LESLIE H. ALLEN.

ALBERT MACKLIN IN JUVENILE PARTS FOR GAUMONT

Albert Macklin, well known in pictures as a juvenile actor, sailed Tuesday, October 26, with the Gaumont companies, to spend the winter in Florida working in pictures for that organization.

He will appear in Rialto Star Features photo-dramas.

Best in "Butterfly" Roles Focused in Pickford Part

Little Mary Will Probably Create Version Embodying All Good Points in Characterizations of Cho-Cho-San by Operatic and Stage Stars

"IF told that she were to play the beloved little Cho-Cho-San in motion pictures, I am quite sure that the average girl would be overwhelmed with delight," said Mary Pickford while discussing the forthcoming production of John Luther Long's "Madame Butterfly" in which she is to be featured by the Famous Players Film Company.

"So was I," she continued. "But my joy soon became somewhat clouded with apprehension when I realized that I had a great many precedents and several pre-conceived notions concerning Cho-Cho-San to meet satisfactorily. When Long's story was first published in a magazine it was widely read. The readers formed their own mental pictures of the little Jap girl. Then it appeared as a book and was studied by thousands more who likewise pictured her according to their own conceptions.

"Next came David Belasco's stage version of the subject in which Blanche Bates gave her remarkable interpretation of Cho-Cho-San. The next stage of the development of the story was the operatic presentation in which some of the foremost singers in the country were starred. Finally, there appeared in New York this week a Japanese prima donna, the first native daughter of the Flowery Kingdom to sing the role in this country, who gives her version of the way in which her compatriot would have acted under the conditions created by Long.

"And now I am to present Cho-Cho-San—a mute Cho-Cho-San—on the screen. It means that I must either conform to all the other characterizations or create a distinctly different one which will please my audiences. So that is why my enthusiasm over the honor and privilege of playing 'Madame Butterfly' on the screen is not unmixed with violent tremors of apprehension. Frankly, I feel as nervous over my first oriental role as I did over my first part on the stage when I was a mere child, and infinitely more disturbed over it than I was over my first appearance before the camera.

"Now that the film is all complete," added Miss Pickford wistfully, "there is nothing to do but sit still and wait for the verdict of the public when the Paramount releases it

MARY PICKFORD AS "MADAME BUTTERFLY"

"I believe November 8 is the time set. It will live in my memory as long as I exist as one of of the crucial moments of my career.

"The most alarming thing about 'Madame Butterfly' was the receipt of a number of letters from people who had read that I was to play Cho-Cho-San. They all expressed great joy over the news and said that they looked forward to seeing the film with keenest pleasure. Wouldn't that positively crumple you all up? It certainly did reduce me to the proverbial pulp.

"But when we went out into New Jersey and I saw the marvelous Japanese gardens which Sid Olcott had found for our settings, I was so enthusiastic over them that, for the time, I forgot all about my nervousness and entered into the spirit of the thing, trying my best to understand the ceaseless chatter of the little Japs who assisted us in all the funny ceremonials and played minor parts in the scenes.

"If unremitting toil and painstaking attention to detail have their reward, the picture should be free from every minor defect, as everything was done to guard against errors in customs, ceremony and costume.

"It was not until the picture was completed that I began to worry over it again. Everybody tells me that it is ridiculous for me to be apprehensive about the way it will be received and Mr. Olcott, who has seen it in its completed form, declares that it is the best work that I have ever done."

LE GUERE FOR "THE TURMOIL," COLUMBIA-METRO

George Le Guere, noted for his juvenile characterizations on both the speaking stage and the screen, has been engaged for the role of "Bibbs Sheridan" in "The Turmoil," the five-part feature picturized from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name, which is now in process of production at the Columbia Pictures Corporation studio for release on the Metro program.

Mr. Le Guere was born in New Orleans and comes of an old Southern family that came to this country from France with Lafayette during the Revolution. He was educated at Georgetown University in Washington, D. C. Although still a comparatively young man, Mr. Le Guere has created twelve prominent parts in notable Broadway productions.

Mr. Le Guere made his debut on Broadway as understudy to Robert Edeson in "Strongheart." Since then he has supported such well-known stars as David Warfield, Lena Ashwell, Lulu Glaser, Gertrude Quinlan, Eleanor Robson, William Hodge, Gertrude Elliott, Ada Lewis, Blanche Walsh, Dorothy Donnelly, Edmund Breese, Walker Whiteside, Tim Murphy, Jane Cowle and others. He made his screen debut in "Bachelor's Romance" with the Famous Players, and made his first appearance under Metro auspices in "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," in which Emily Stevens is starred.

HAL FORDE GOES TO JACKSONVILLE FOR GAUMONT

In order to give the American public "Lessons in Love," Hal Forde left Friday, October 29, for the Gaumont studios at Jacksonville, Fla.

"Lessons in Love" will be released as a multiple-reel Rialto Star Feature. It is being directed by Richard Garrick.

Pathe Completes Plans for Serial to Follow "Neal"

Company Picks Arrow Film Corporation, with Studios at Yonkers, N. Y., to Produce the Picture—Emmy Wehlen, Who Played the Title Role of "The Merry Widow" in England, Is Cast for Leading Female Part—Howard Estabrook, Who Made a Hit in "Brown of Harvard," Will Be in Male Lead

AFTER months of careful preparation Pathé announces the completion of plans for the series, "Who Is Guilty?" which will follow "Neal of the Navy." The first release of the new series will be on December 11, the week after the release of the last episodes of "Neal of the Navy."

Emmy Wehlen, a favorite of the legitimate stage, and Howard Estabrook, one of Broadway's younger stars, will play the leads. The engagement of these players is an assurance that Pathé intends to make this series the most pretentious of all the long list identified with its name—a remarkable list beginning with "The Perils of Pauline" and running down through "The Exploits of Elaine," "The New Exploits of Elaine," "The Romance of Elaine," "Who Pays?" "Neal of the Navy," and "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." The Arrow Film Corporation will produce "Who Is Guilty?" at its studios in Yonkers, N. Y., and the series will be under the personal direction of Howell Hansel, the well known director, who is now director-in-chief of the Arrow Film Corporation. At present the supporting cast includes Lila Chester, Henry West, Mrs. Balfour, Stanley Walpole, E. J. De Varny, and Katherine Reichart.

Emmy Wehlen was strongly attracted to the stage when a child only six years old. For two years she devoted herself to preparing for a career in grand opera. Learning, however, that there is no royal road to success in that line, and that four more years of study were required, she decided to take up musical comedy and studied under the best masters.

Her first parts were soubrette in musical comedy, but she varied them with engagements in the dramas of Sudermann and Ibsen. She appeared in musical comedy in various European countries but the scene of her greatest success was England, where she played the title role in "The Merry Widow." Then came a long engagement in "The Dollar Princess." She first appeared on the American stage in "Marriage a la Carte," an English play.

On the expiration of her engagement here she returned to England to become leading lady at the famous Gaiety theatre. She returned to America with "The Girl on the Film." She may be said to have been almost a transatlantic commuter, for she went back to England to take the lead in "After the Girl," with which production she returned to the United States. Since last December she has settled down in this country.

Estabrook and Miss Wehlen Co-Stars

Howard Estabrook, who is co-star with Miss Wehlen in the Pathé series, has enjoyed an almost meteoric career upon the stage. He was born in Detroit, Michigan, where his father is president of the Iron and Wire Works, one of Detroit's leading industries. It is interesting to note how he came to adopt a theatrical career. His uncle was county treasurer and young Estabrook's first position after leaving school was as assistant cashier in his uncle's office.

It happened that a short distance down the street from the county treasurer's office was a theatre playing stock. They needed a juvenile and young Estabrook applied for the job and got it. For a while he held down both positions at the same time. Then came his chance. The stock company put on "Shenandoah," and he was offered a good part. He took it and made good with a bang. The result was that he wrote to Mr. Seymour of Charles Frohman's interests applying for a job, and got it—with William Collier in "The Dictator." "On the Quiet" was his next engagement and with it he came back to New York. "Brown of Harvard" saw his first important part and in it he made a big hit.

It resulted in his election to the Lambs' Club, and in his being tendered a number of very flattering offers. Clyde Fitch made one of them and got the prize for which they were all angling. The medium in which he was placed was "The Straight Road." This was followed by the lead in "The Boys of Company B" under Daniel Frohman's management.

After that engagement he married Gretchen Dale, the daughter of a San Francisco banker, and with his bride toured Europe for two years. On his return he wrote and produced "Mrs. Avery," putting it on at Weber's theatre. As a result he was elected to membership in the "Society of American Composers and Dramatists." Then followed engagements with Holbrook Blinn in "The Boss," and one with Wilton Lackaye, in both of which he assisted in the stage direction.

He was in the original cast of "Within the Law" and when that play was sold by Mr. Brady was withdrawn and placed in the part of Laurie in "Little Women."

Leading man with Grace George in several of her plays and revivals came next, and then the leading part in "Things That Count," which had an all season run at the Playhouse. David Belasco secured him for "The Vanishing Bride." When "Search Me" was put on this past summer at the Gaiety he was at the same time playing the lead in Edward Jose's Gold Rooster Play, "The Closing Net," which picture has only been released a short time, but has made a big hit. He is now appearing with Elsie Janis at the George M. Cohan theatre in "Miss Information."

Hansel on Stage for Years

Howell Hansel, who will direct "Who Is Guilty?" is one of the best known producers in the business. He was connected with the dramatic stage ever since he was nineteen years old up to three years ago. He was born in Terre Haute, Indiana, and made his debut with Madame Modjeska in "As You Like It," at the Union Square theatre in New York. He was for three seasons with Charles Frohman, two with the Lieblers, and has appeared with James O'Neill, Margaret Mather, Kyrle Bellew, and Henrietta Crossman.

His last engagements on the speaking stage were with Blanche Bates in the Belasco production of "The Fighting Hope," and with Mr. Belasco in "The Woman." He went into the motion picture business immediately on the conclusion of this last engagement, and has been with Thanhouser, the World Film and Lubin. He directed "The Million Dollar Mystery" from start to finish.

As for the stories of "Who Is Guilty?" they have been written for newspaper syndication by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, the novelist, an account of whom appeared last week in these columns. They are put into scenario form by George Brackett Seitz, who has written many Pathé successes. The series will be in fourteen chapters of two parts each, each chapter complete in itself. The theme deals with various social problems of the day.

The question of "Who Is Guilty?" for the various infractions of man-made laws will be left to the observer and the subject will always be handled in the most truthful manner possible consistent with good taste.

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Thomas A. Edison has been in San Francisco during the past week inspecting the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and many special events were arranged in his honor. Thursday was Edison Day at the fair and one of the largest mid-week crowds that has assembled in many months gathered to see the famous inventor.

Under the direction of George Breck, head of the local agency handling Edison moving picture projection machines, moving pictures of the great American were taken on the Exposition grounds and elsewhere. This is the first vacation that Mr. Edison has taken in many years and he made the most of it while here.

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, has secured the W. Lindsay Gordon studio for the forthcoming August Thomas-Raver productions.

This studio is located in Staten Island in the heart of a most picturesque section of this picturesque island, thoroughly accessible and properly equipped for productions that demand the standard of the Raver-Thomas output.

In entering into the agreement for the building, Mr. Raver was allowed to assist in the installation of lights and the selection of scenery and settings, necessary for his calibre of productions.

"The Other Girl" is the first picture to be produced by this new company. The cast has been completed and work is already under way.

Kane to Represent Manufacturers and Exchanges

He Believes That Specialization Is Needed to Get Best Results and Declares That in a Day of Large Marketing Concerns the Individual Is Still Important

WITH offices overlooking Times Square, New York City, Arthur S. Kane, well known in film exchange work, has gone into business for himself. He proposes to represent manufacturers and exchange and theatre men over the country, among whom he counts scores as his friends. His quarters are at 901 Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

"With the formation of the first large marketing concern, we thought the era of the individual in the film business had passed," said Mr. Kane at his new office. "That was more than five years ago, and instead of the individual being eliminated, I believe he is coming more and more into his own. What is required now along marketing lines is specialization.

"There are many subjects and classes of subject in the market to-day which require special treatment, but they do not get it. This is not the fault of the exchange manager, because with numerous things to look after he does not find time to center his attention upon some special object. He has a great volume of business along the same line which requires all of his efforts to keep it on the move.

"Consequently, when a concern releases something which is not in conformity with the rest, it is exceedingly difficult to get results.

"That is why some of the organizations are now refusing to take anything requiring special handling and they are wise in doing this."

Mr. Kane has spent the past few days calling on friends in New York, after an absence of more than four months with his family in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast. He says if there were one thing needed to show the tremendous vogue of the motion picture, the San Francisco Exposition furnishes the illustration. Literally, in the various buildings there are motion pictures to the right of you, motion pictures to the left of you and motion pictures everywhere. Mr. Kane called the Panama-Pacific Exposition the Motion Picture Era of the World.

Eastern Growth Forces Larger Morosco Quarters

Company's Representative on Atlantic Seaboard, Carl H. Pierce, Is Compelled by Rapid Increase of Business to Take Out Twice Original Space in Candler Building

THE continuous growth of the business at Oliver Morosco's eastern film offices has for some time demanded larger quarters, and in order to facilitate the increased activities, the New York offices will be moved to a more spacious suite in the Candler building.

A floor space of almost twice the size of that now occupied by the offices has been taken over by the company, and it is expected that the staff will be comfortably installed in its new home the early part of next week. There will be three private offices occupied by Carl H. Pierce, who is at the head of the eastern headquarters; Julian M. Solomon, Jr., accessory and advertising manager, and Peter J. Schmid, publicity representative.

A large space will be allotted to the stenographic and billing department. The storeroom fitted out with library bureau steel shelving for the accessories and special advertising boosters, the mimeograph, multigraph and addressograph machines, and cut cabinets will be in charge of Carl Berger.

A little over a year ago Carl H. Pierce, with the assistance of Julian M. Solomon, Jr., represented the company in the East, occupying desk room at 440 Fourth avenue. The rush of business soon compelled them to take an office in the Candler building when Peter Schmid joined them.

Stenographers and other assistants were steadily added to the staff, and the space in which to work, together with the storeroom, soon became overcrowded. A new exhibitor's aid department has just been installed under the care of George K. Henken.

Crisp Autumn Days Put Snap in Lubin Affairs

Instead of Outlook for Things in "The Sere and Yellow Leaf," Sometimes Expected of the Season Anywhere, Vigor and Vim Characterize the Company's Fall Volume of Production—All Department Heads Meet Weekly for Conference with General Managers Lowry and Singhi

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.

THESE crisp autumn days see things stirring at Lubin's. At the big studios on Twentieth and Indiana avenues, in the new studio (with club and dressing rooms) at Seventeenth and Glenwood avenues, and at the large "ranch" out at Betzwood, all is vigor and vim. Not a larger output, but a better one is the motto.

Joe Farnham is now at the helm of the publicity department. He seems happy in his new job, and popularity has already claimed him for its own.

Of the recent staff of scenario writers, besides Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, there are Anthony P. Kelly, Mark Swan, George Spink and the scenario editor, Daniel Ellis.

Of the directors, the only two veterans, as one might call them, those who have been on the Lubin staff for longer than a few months are George Terwilliger and Joseph Kaufman. The more recent acquisitions, already mentioned, are Jack Pratt, Tom McKim, Edgar Lewis and Clay M. Greene.

Carl Metcalfe has also risen to directorial dignity, and this completes the "we are seven" ranks.

Gone from the Lubin forces are Ormi Hawley, Mary Charleson, Romaine Fielding, Mae Hotely, Arthur Hotaling, Charles Brandt, Edith Ritchie and some lesser lights.

Standbys of Lubin Screen

Some of the old standbys still seen on the Lubin screen are Ethel Clayton, Rosetta Brice, Octavia Handworth, Francis Joyner, George Clarke, Peter Lan, James Daly, Clara Lambert, Billie Reeves, Florence Williams and Kempton Greene.

The very newest luminaries, more or less known to fame, are House Peters, Nance O'Neil, Carrie Reynolds, Mary Moore. Mimi Yvonne, Warner Richman, Hayden Stephenson, Richard Buhler, D. L. Don and Craufurd, Kent.

Raymond Hitchcock has come back for "The Wonderful Wager," which will see the light of day in January. The actor is having the time of his life at Betzwood, capering around with a whole circus, helping suffrage by making speeches to the "girls" campaigning for the cause, helping to burn down a "whole street" in his play, and doing various and sundry other stunts.

Edgar Lewis is returning with his Great Divide Company. After ten days' further work on this play around the studio, it will be completed.

Ethel Clayton will return to her usual place as star of the Kaufman Company, while Lewis will direct Nance O'Neil in a play not yet decided on. Jack Pratt's company has returned from Block Island. Rosetta Brice and Richard Buhler are Pratt's leads. Octavia Handworth, Mimi Yvonne and Carrie Reynolds are part of the Terwilliger forces.

Kaufman has Inez Birch of "Misleading Lady" fame, Francis Joyner, Craufurd Kent and June Daye. The latter is well known as Vinnie Burns of the Lubin westerners. She expects to remain in the Philadelphia studios for the present, and has decided to change her former congnomen for the more euphonious "June Daye."

The next big Lubin drama to appear will be "The Nation's Peril," on November 22. This was jointly written by George Terwilliger and Harry Chanle.

On December comes "Man's Making," both written and produced by Jack Pratt, with Richard Buhler and Rosetta Brice as leads. In January, Nance O'Neil will appear in "The Streets of Silence," an original work by Anthony Kelly.

While production goes merrily on, executive meetings are being held weekly, at which General Manager Lowry and Singhi hold conclaves with heads of all departments, including publicity, scenario staff and directors. At these meetings questions relating to efficiency and betterment are thoroughly aired. With business in full swing, philanthrophy flourishes nevertheless.

The Lubin Beneficial Association endeavors to pay sick benefits to all its members, as well as helping with funeral expenses. On Monday, November 1, occurred the first Halloween entertainment and dance of the association. This took place at Lulu Temple.

Amongst the well known people who participated in the program were: Raymond Hitchcock in comic songs; Billy Reeves, in his "Substitute" act from "The Follies"; Richard Buhler, in a sketch; Jack Pratt, in songs; Walter Law and James Cassidy, in "The Seal of Silence"; Potter and Hartwell, in a comedy act; Carrie Reynolds, a well known vaudevile star, in song; George Spink, in a piano act; seven cabaret singers; Wally and Lottie Kelston, in a comedy song and dance.

Bartley McCullum was stage manager, and Kempton Greene floor manager, for the dance afterward. Only one dollar was charged for tickets. The committee in charge were: Walter Law, Kempton Greene, Wally Kelston, Bart McCullum, Joe Keegan, Donald Scott, Gus Anderton, Charles Hyatt.

The present officers of the Lubin Beneficial Association are: Peter Lang, president; Charles Hyatt, vice-president; Isadore Schwartz, treasurer, and Donald Scott and Joseph Keegan, secretaries.

A substantial sum is expected as the result of the affair.

Eight Stage Stars in 6 Equitables in Six Months

Harriet Ford, Author of "The Argyle Case," "The Dummy," and Other Legitimate Successes Will Write Scenarios for Triumph, Producing Ally of the Company

WITH the Equitable program now practically outlined for the forthcoming half year, Equitable's chief producing ally, the Triumph Film Corporation, of which Arthur H. Jacobs is the executive head and Joseph Golden, director-in-chief, announces, as its activities of the next six months, six releases, in which eight stars of the legitimate stage will make their appearance.

Triumph's past releases on the Equitable program included Hilda Spong in "Divorced," Lenore Ulrich in "The Better Woman," Julius Steger in "The Master of the House," and Helen Ware in "The Price," all of which were supervised by Director Golden himself.

Through General Manager Jacobs arrangements were entered into last week whereby Harriet Ford, author of "The Argyle Case," "The Dummy" and other big legitimate successes, will in the future devote her time to constructing scenarios exclusively for Triumph. Miss Ford is considred one of the most prolific and versatile of dramatic writers of the day, and at present has contracts for four different legitimate productions for Broadway, appearing during the forthcoming season.

Henry Kolker, who is now working in "The Warning" under the directorial auspices of Edmund Lawrence, has been engaged for three additional productions, which will characterize the Equitable releasing chart at periods of from three to four months apart. Mr. Lawrence will begin work immediately upon the production of "The Ransom," in which the estimable Julia Dean will be seen in a stellar role of strength.

Miss Dean recently began rehearsing for her latest starring vehicle, which opens at a Broadway house soon, and it will be necessary for her to divide her time between studio and stage, but as Equitable will not release the Dean picture until early in January, ample time is allowed for her legitimate work.

Marie Empress, last seen in "When We Were Twenty-One," in which she portrayed the role of the vampire woman, will be featured by Triumph in a sensational dramatic offering, based on one of Guy De Maupassant's stories, which is now in the working.

Miss Empress will begin work about November 14 upon the completion of a large wardrobe. The De Maupassant script calls for elaborate apparel.

Charles J. Ross, now playing in "The Senator," William H. Crane's former vehicle, is at work at Washington, D. C., under the direction of Joseph H. Golden. "The Senator" will be seen on the Equitable program about December 20.

The Triumph scenario department is now in complete charge of Eva Unsell, formerly with Famous Players, Harriet Ford, Mr. Golden and Arthur Jacobs.

Film Currents Crackle in Rothapfel Live Wire Talk

New Yorker, in Countrywide Tour Under Auspices of Mutual, Meets in New Orleans Hundred Screen Men, Who, Note Books in Hand, Take Down Electrifying Management Hints

New Orleans, La., Nov. 1.

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL of New York came to New Orleans; he saw, and he conquered, at the most representative gathering of film men that the South has ever witnessed.

Because Atlanta was eliminated from his itinerary, Mr. Rothapfel came direct from Washington, arriving in New Orleans Sunday night, October 24. He stayed in the city almost two whole days. Every minute of his time was occupied by local exhibitors. The newspapers accorded Mr. Rothapfel generous space, advertised the fact that he would hold an open levee for all exhibitors. The result was that the carpet in his luxurious quarters at the Hotel Grunewald was worn by the constant tramping of many feet. To say that New Orleans was delighted with Mr. Rothapfel is but putting it mildly.

The banquet of Monday midnight drew exhibitors from all over the Southern territory as far as Dallas. Ross Hardenbrook, New Orleans manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, under whose auspices the Rothapfel-Mutual tour is being conducted, had sent out several hundred invitations. There were almost a hundred covers set in the Grunewald, quite filling the big Gold Room of that hotel.

To reproduce all the good things Mr. Rothapfel said is virtually impossible in limited space. Even a third of his talk, if subdivided, would fill Motion Picture News with "live wire" stories for many moons to come. His every word was absorbed by the exhibitors, many of whom took copious notes of his talk.

Al. G. Shear, New Orleans manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, was toastmaster. At the banquet were besides Mr. Rothapfel, Silas Bent, Ross Hardenbrook, New Orleans manager Mutual; Maurice F. Barr, manager World Film; Al. G. Shear, New Orleans manager of Consolidated; J. T. Ezell and B. King, manager and assistant manager, General Film Company; Al Durning, manager Greater New York Film Rental Company; Meyer Simmonds, Peerless Film Company; Karl A. Bugbee, manager Metro; C. J. Briant, Metro; E. C. Kirkpatrick, manager Paramount; Sid S. Levy, General Film Company; Arthur B. White, manager Orpheum Theatre.

Out of town guests were: Samuel E. Cohn, Typhoon Fan Company, New York; H. M. Hardie, Crystal Theatre, Dallas, Texas; P. L. Bible, Old Mill Theatre, Dallas; Sol M. Sugarman, Meridian, Miss.; E. V. Richards, Jr., manager Saenger Amusement Company, Shreveport, La.; William F. Rosenbaum, representing the National Board of Censorship; R. B. Wiley, manager Strand Amusement Company, Montgomery, Ala.

Local exhibitors were: J. Eugene Pearce, Herman Fichtenberg, and his four aides, Billy Gueringer, G. J. Dureau, Jr., Carl Goldenburg and J. H. Mulligan; F. R. Heiderich, Jr.; Mrs. Edward H. Waldsdorf, G. B. Mars, Nathan Sobel, P. O. Blankenship, Louis Dolhonde, August Waldsdorf, W. G. Tebault, Jr., P. Fabacher, J. J. Fabacher, W. J. Currie, J. E. Clark, Frank Nicolosi, L. H. Yarrat, C. A. Gibson, Bert Kiern, V. O'Shie, L. Recknagle, W. G. Wiley, C. S. Gainnie and Joseph Alsina.

The press: Carlton F. Pool, the New Orleans Times-Picayune; John L. Ebaugh, advertising manager, New Orleans Times-Picayune; M. R. Kattmann, press representative, Orpheum Theatre; O. S. Samuel, Variety; Phil J. Reilly, Mose Stern, Jules Benedic, Motion Picture News.

Two More Stanley Releases from Horsley for Mutual

Next One in Series Will Show What Might Have Happened to Explorer in "Starvation Camp" While on Quest for Missionary Livingston in Africa

DAVID HORSLEY has decided to continue the "Stanley's Adventures in Africa" series, picturizing the famous explorers trip into darkest Africa, now being carried on in David Horsley's Centaur Features, for two more releases.

The forthcoming release, "Stanley in Starvation Camp," which will be distributed through the Mutual branches, November 11, is the fourth part of the series. It is in two reels and tells the story of Stanley's trials and privations while on his quest in the jungles.

Set in the South African jungles, where animal life predominates, there is ample opportunity for bringing into the stories the talents of the Bostock animals. This is a feature Mr. Horsley and his director have not overlooked, and with the well-known performing ability of the Bostock group at their command it is no wonder that many big animal scenes have been obtained.

The "Stanley" series is being directed by Frank Montgomery, who has in his company of players Roy Watson, Ed. Roberts, Court Tietze, Charles Gay, A. Van Antwerp, Charles Weelock, Princess Mona Darkfeather, Marie Manley, Anna DeLyle, and Captain Jack Bonavita and the Bostock animals. All of the Stanley subjects are released every other week on the Mutual program.

American Film Adds New Glass Studio to Plant in Santa Barbara, Totaling 25,000 Square Feet

NEW STAGE AT THE AMERICAN STUDIOS, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

INCREASED demand for the Flying A. Beauty, Clipper Star Features and Mustang photoplays put out on the new Mutual program has resulted in impressive additions to the already extensive plant of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, California.

Within a few days, work will be completed on a new glass studio and related structures covering a total of 25,000 square feet, giving the American company an aggregate of four acres of studio space on their plant which has recently been enlarged to cover a plot of ten acres.

The new glass studio covers an area of 80 by 130 feet and is 22 feet in the clear inside. Adjoining the studio is a new scenery dock, workshops, property store rooms and transformer rooms. President S. S. Hutchinson of the American company now claims the "world's greatest motion picture plant."

LASKY "CARMEN" IN THIRD WEEK AT SAN FRANCISCO

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

The Lasky production of "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar, has proved to be such an attraction at the Imperial theatre that Manager J. L. Partington has retained it for the third week, and it is anticipated that fully one hundred thousand persons will have seen it by the time the engagement is brought to a close.

Besides this great feature, the usual Paramount travel pictures and other scenic subjects are on the bill, in addition to the splendid operatic selections rendered by artists from the Lambardi Opera Company.

It has been a long time since a moving picture was shown in San Francisco that has attracted such brilliant audiences as has "Carmen."

Universal to Move to Fort Lee, N. J., from Bayonne

Many Employees Will Go with Their Families, as Company Offers an Increase of Salary as an Inducement for Them Not to Resign

THE Universal Film, which is packing up and preparing to leave Bayonne for Fort Lee, N. J., is also busy making plans for the comfort of its many employees who will move out of Bayonne with the company. Plans are under way for a bus service that will carry the Universal employees who will reside in Bayonne after the company moves, to and from work and while the plan has not been adopted, it will probably go through very shortly.

Many families with members employed by the Universal are preparing to move to Fort Lee and many more of the employees have already secured stopping places at the town where they will be working in the future.

The concern decided to raise the pay of all employees who went along with them and that inducement has made many change their minds about resigning. As has been the practice the Universal Company will continue to look out for the welfare of their faithful employees.

Much of the work that heretofore came to the Universal by arrangement of the latter company now goes to the Centaur Film Company, which plant is directly opposite the Universal establishment at Forty-fifth street and Avenue E.

This arrangement will mean the hiring of experienced hands by the Centaur and probably a great number of the Universal employees will find places there.

Superintendent Murphy, who took John Nickolaus' place in the local factory, has been delegated to look after things in Fort Lee and his selection meets with the hearty approval of all concerned. Mr. Nickolaus has gone to Universal City.

Mr. Murphy is well liked and is well up in his particular line of business.

Col. Selig Is Made Member of Chicago School Board

Mayor Confers the Honor Upon President of Polyscope Company While Motion Picture Magnate Was Away, Visiting His Studios in Los Angeles and Las Vegas, N. M.

MAYOR WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON, of Chicago, on Monday evening, October 25, nominated six new members of the board of education of Chicago. The Chicago board of education is among the most powerful and important educative boards in the United States. Included among the nominees was William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company.

Mr. Selig is at present visiting his motion picture studios in Los Angeles, Cal., and Las Vegas, N. M., and was not apprised of the fact that he had been nominated as a member of the Chicago board.

In commenting upon his nominations, Mayor Thompson said: "I think my appointees are the best group of individuals ever suggested for membership on the board. There were many names suggested to me and the choice was a difficult one."

Mayor Thompson classifies Mr. Selig as a self-made man and one qualified in every way for membership on the Chicago school board. Mr. Selig is known as one of Chicago's most influential business men and is probably one of the most widely read men of the present day.

His personal friendship with literary men and women of high standing is also very extensive.

Mr. Selig's nomination for membership on the Chicago board of education is not only a tribute to Mr. Selig as a man, but is also a tribute to higher art in motion pictures.

FOUR TELEPHONE PRESIDENTS PAY INCEVILLE A VISIT

Inceville, Cal., was honored last week by the presence of four telephone presidents, whose combined income reaches into the millions: U. N. Bethel, president of the New York Telephone Company and senior vice-president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company; C. E. Yost, president of the Northwestern group of the Bell system; B. E. Sunny, president of the Chicago Telephone Company, and George E. McFarland, president of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company.

BLANCHE SWEET WILL CONTINUE IN LASKY PRODUCTIONS

Reports having reached the Lasky Feature Play Company that certain motion picture manufacturers, believing that Blanche Sweet's contract to appear exclusively in Lasky productions on the Paramount program had expired, or was about to expire, had made overtures of employment to her. Messrs. Wise and Lichtenstein, attorneys for the Lasky company, this week made known generally that Miss Sweet will continue for a considerable period under the Lasky direction.

The determination to make a public announcement of the contractural relations between the producing firm and the star was decided only after a circular letter had been sent to various manufacturers calling their attention to the existing contract between the Lasky company and Miss Sweet. Many of the companies responded to the letter of warning and expressed pleasure that the Lasky firm had seen fit to stop senseless reports of Miss Sweet's sudden termination of her Lasky contract.

When Miss Sweet was engaged by the Lasky company last autumn she already had won the right to stardom on the screen. Since then her career has been a series of successful productions, the latest being "The Secret Sin," "The Case of Becky," "The Secret Orchard," "Stolen Goods," "The Clue," and others.

TOO MANY PICTURE THEATRES IN CHATTANOOGA

There are still five nickel houses in Chattanooga showing the usual five-cent type of pictures, and Charlie Chaplin still draws crowds.

No money is being made by the Chattanooga exhibitors, as the town has too many houses.

The prices paid for features in Chattanooga by the exhibitors are a joke, and all branch managers have stood cuts on their services.

One of the larger film company's features are being shown three days each, with two changes weekly, for $75.

"Evolution, Not Revolution," in Picture Industry

President Rowland of Metro, Unimpressed with Predictions of Over-Night Changes, Foresees Continued Progress Toward Better Subjects, Regardless of Length

PRESIDENT RICHARD A. ROWLAND of the Metro Pictures Corporation is optimistic over the motion picture situation, but in an interview this week he pointed out some of its present difficulties. Mr. Rowland said:

"Motion pictures have grown far enough away from the swaddling clothes period to assure the exhibitor and the public of one big definite fact. There will be no revolution in the making of moving pictures, either long or short, and the nature, character and quality of the business is not scheduled for any over-night changes. There will be a continued growth toward better, finer pictures, but the progress will be evolutionary rather than revolutionary.

"I am moved to call the attention of motion picture men to these facts because there seems to be an impression in some quarters that motion pictures are going to be transformed by the magic wand of printer's ink and great capital so that masterpieces will spring up from the ground or blossom out on the trees.

"Speaking for Metro and for Metro only, I may be permitted to say, that we are aiming at and striving for and concentrating on a consistent feature service. Our manufacturers are more anxious to make good than to make money, and making good pictures of course means profit to the producer and to the exhibitor.

"With no desire to indulge in personalities or register complaints against any one in the great motion picture industry, I cannot refrain from giving a word of warning against what I believe is the most serious menace to the entire business. I refer to overcapitalization and frenzied finance.

"Those acquainted with the conditions surrounding the actual manufacture of motion pictures know that a successful business makes a swollen capitalization unnecessary, and they know also that of the huge sums raised only a modest percentage goes into the actual cost of picture making. The big balances go to the promoters or into the enormous wastage that has marked the recent progress of the business.

"As in all businesses somebody has got to pay for all this. The interest on all these great capitalizations must be met, to say nothing of the dividends that have to be provided for if the business is to be continued at a profit. I believe sincerely that the skyrocket financiers constitute the most serious problem the industry has to consider, because as a whole the motion picture business is now on firm ground and proceeding satisfactorily along substantial lines.

"There is no cause whatever for alarm among exhibitors. The exhibitors generally are wise enough to know that a fairly consistent service is as good as anybody can expect, and that with a fairly consistent service they can succesfully continue in business on a good profit basis.

"I am firmly of the opinion that Metro pictures are their own best proof of excellence and I had rather have an exhibitor see the pictures than to tell him about them.

"Reference is being frequently made to the high quality of Metro advertising, but my invariable answer is that our advertising must be of the highest class to live up to the pictures themselves."

Its Serial Heroine Signs with Pathé for Another Year

Before Appearing, However, in a New Series, Under the Direction of Ramirez-Torres, Pearl White Will Star in "Hazel Kirke," Made by the Whartons

PEARL WHITE, famous as the heroine of the Pathé serials, "The Perils of Pauline" and the "Elaine" trio, has just signed a contract for another year with Pathé. She will first star in the famous theatrical success, "Hazel Kirke," which will be put into pictures by the Whartons, and then will probably be featured in a new serial, which will be under the personal management of M. Ramirez-Torres, assistant managing director of Pathé.

Miss White has for several years been one of the three or four of the best known stars in the business, practically all of which time she has been identified with Pathè pictures.

She was born in Missouri, and broke into things theatrical by the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" route, that great nursery of histrionic talent. For several years she was connected with various road shows, and then obtained an engagement with a circus. For two or three years she worked under "the big top," and then went back to the stage, where she has been ever since, playing wtih some of the best and some of the worst companies in existence, as she expresses it.

Some three years ago she received an offer from Pathé to appear in pictures, and with Pathé she has been ever since, with the exception of short intervals.

Miss White possesses a marked individuality upon the screen—she resembles no other player before the public. Her popularity is tremendous as is amply evidenced by the bewildering amount of her daily correspondence, which comes from all parts of the civilized world. For nerve and willingness to take chances while working before the camera she easily stands among the leading women in pictures.

DOROTHY DAVENPORT IN LEADING ROLES FOR LASKY

Member of a family that has been prominent in the American theatre for many years, Dorothy Davenport has been engaged as a regular member of the Lasky Feature Play Company, and is busy at work on two elaborate productions in which she has leading roles at the studios in Hollywood, Cal.

Miss Davenport made her first appearance in Paramount theatres in the Lasky production of Lou-Tellegen in "The Explorer." She will be the heroine in the picturization of "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," supporting Theodore Roberts and Carlyle Blackwell.

Miss Davenport is a daughter of the noted comedian, Harry Davenport, and the celebrated actress, Alice Davenport. She is a niece of the late Fanny Davenport, for many years the reigning favorite of the Broadway stage.

Her career on the legitimate stage was brief. After a few seasons as a child in vaudeville, she joined the Biograph Company at sixteen, and has appeared at different times with the Reliance, Nestor, Selig, Ince and Universal. With the latter organization she played leading roles with Wallace Reid, a screen romance that ended in their marriage.

Her first motion picture was in support of Henry B. Walthall in "Life's Cycle."

South America a New Land for Paramount Films

Travel Pictures, Giving the Geography Ideas of Childhood's Happy Hours a Heavy Jolt, Show Our Neighbors Below the Equator in an Entirely Different Light

THE series of travel pictures being shown weekly by the Paramount Pictures Corporation are proving tremendously popular, due probably to the fact that the trade searchlight is at this time focused on the great continent of Opportunity.

Thousands of these men are learning for the first time that the republics of South America are something more than just merely a nondescript continent to the South. In the minds of many, South America is just considered some kind of a jungle, inhabited by monkeys, parrots, snakes and swarthy-faced, blanket-covered, slouch-hatted Indians; and productive of rubber, coffee and a few other things, remembered from grammar school days.

People are now learning that in South America there is a beautiful, prosperous city, larger than Philadelphia. That one of its mountains is the highest elevation in the Western hemisphere. That the Iquassu Falls are higher and wider than Niagara.

How many people in the United States today know that the police force of Buenos Aires is nearly twice as large as that of New York?

As a matter of fact, in Argentine there are from 800,000 to 900,000 people, with all the hopes and possibilities of the best among the people of this country.

Concerning Brazil, where school geographies are apt to state flatly that 93 per cent. of Brazil lies in the tropics, they say nothing about the 7 per cent., a territory almost half as large as the United States, which has a most magnificently tempered climate. In a matter of natural resources it is one of the rarest countries in the world.

The people who have been following the Paramount Travel Pictures have also learned in a recent release that Chili is one of the most progressive South American countries, having wars innumerable and the money to pay for them, and that the United States Steel Corporation is about to invest some $10,000,000 in iron properties there.

Paramount Travel Pictures show that Chili is the most important contributor to the nitrate market. The United States is furnishing the chief market for product, and in return will sell Chili most of its necessities.

Mentioning these three countries does not mean that the other republics of South America are less important. In fact, in natural resources, many of them are shown by Paramount Travel Pictures to be richer in agricultural and manufacturing resources than some of the large ones.

Folder Gives Complete Description of Subject, with Reproduction of All Advertising and Publicity Matter for Use of Exhibitor in Exploiting a Play

WHAT is a most complete, as well as helpful—from the standpoint of the exhibitor—piece of business literature, is now being issued by John W. Grey, assistant to A. E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, with every Blue Ribbon feature released through the V-L-S-E.

This is a folder 9 x 12, giving the complete description of the production, together with a reproduction of all the advertising and publicity matter available for the exhibitor's use in exploiting the play.

The pocket of this folder, printed in four colors on the outside and inside pages, shows the half, one, three, six and twenty-four sheets in full colors together with a synopsis of the high-lights of the story.

Enclosed in this is a press sheet three columns wide of regular newspaper measure, and of such size as to make it easy to clip, containing the story of the feature, human interest incidents in connection with its filming, personality sketches of the leading players and extraneous press material. This matter is so indexed that the busy exhibitor or editor can turn to the type of story he wishes instantly, without poring through a mass of information.

The second insert consists of reproductions of the electrotypes prepared by the advertising department of the Vitagraph Company for the exhibitor's use in the newspapers.

With this sales manual before him, the exhibitor has every available scrap of information he can possibly need to know about a feature for intelligent consideration, effective advertising, and correct staging. The Vitagraph Company will issue these manuals for each of their V-L-S-E features.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City

ANOTHER NEWSPAPER THAT IS DOING ITS DUTY BY THE EXHIBITORS OF ITS CITY

AGAIN we call the attention of exhibitors to a striking example of a newspaper that is doing its duty by the motion picture.

Exhibitors who live in the city where this newspaper is published are our witnesses for the correctness of that statement. Their testimony appears in the form of generous advertising in the paper.

The newspaper in question is The Omaha World-Herald, whose photoplay editor is Ross H. Chamberlen. A short time ago The World-Herald had no photoplay department. Now, it thinks in terms of whole pages with regard to pictures.

The issue of October 17, which we wish to discuss particularly, devoted not one, but two pages to its motion picture department. When we say department, we mean department, not a mere jumble of miscellaneous matter built around a few advertisements. The World-Herald's department is intelligently edited, presenting a variety of news and comment touching nearly every angle of the motion picture industry in which the reader is conceivably interested.

There is a great difference between a real motion picture department in a newspaper, and one that pretends to be, but isn't. The latter species consists, for the most part, of just enough press stuff to "carry" the theatre ads. The World-Herald does not belong to that species.

The ads are there—yes; the press stuff if there—yes. But the whole thing is done with the eye for news, always news. The editor is not satisfied merely with what the press agents hand in, though that material is valuable—invaluable, if it is written from the news angle. But he also makes his department as useful as possible to World-Herald readers by giving them what they want, and in the shape they want it. To be specific, he gave them, in the October 17 issue:

A human interest story about the late John Bunny, written from an actual conversation between the editor and the lamented actor.

A query box.

A guide to the week's pictures at prominent theatres.

Short press notices of important productions at all houses.

Longer stories about big features.

Five illustrations of players and scenes.

A story about the building of a local theatre.

Other articles giving glimpses of players "behind the scenes."

Typographically, The World-Herald's department could be improved. The cuts are not as clear as they might be, and the department head, while it has a good idea back of it, is technically a little crude.

These are minor defects that can gradually be overcome. The department as a whole is excellent. Exhibitors should know about it, and let their newspapers know about it.

When a newspaper devotes two pages of a single issue to a genuine motion picture department it deserves praise—and publicity—for doing so.

NEW MOTION PICTURE DEPARTMENTS

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has in the last few months added many pages of photoplay matter to its columns. The Sunday magazine section has a special photoplay page of which A. H. Giebler is editor, that is devoted to the interests of motion picture enthusiasts, and usually a story of one of the photoplay serials is run on another page. During the week several columns of items about photoplayers are printed, and regular reviews of the big features showing around town are given room twice a week and on Sundays.

WASHINGTON FANS TO SEE SCREEN STARS IN THE FLESH

Tom Moore makes a departure in announcing that prominent picture players will appear in person at the Garden theatre, Washington, D. C., periodically. The first of these was Earl Williams, who will be followed by Julia Dean, Francis X. Bushman, Anita Stewart, Bryant Washburn, J. Warren Kerrigan, Edith Storey and others.

Late John Bunny, on Visit Last Fall, Gave Out a Very Interesting Interview.

Declared Possibilities of Clean Screen Productions Were of Organic Nature

"When the book trust ceases to control the little red school house on the hill, then the motion picture, as an educational necessity, will step in and do more to interest children in their studies than anything else possibly can."

This is what John Bunny, famous screen comedian, who died recently told the writer last fall upon the occasion of his visit here at the head of a theatrical [illegible] of the "Thy [illegible]

Today and tomorrow the Strand offers the funniest film of the season, Marie Dressler, late star of "Tillie's Punctured Romance," in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise." Miss Dressler is ably supported by an exceptionally strong company, and in addition the ever popular Pathe Weekly will be shown.

Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday comes Theda Bara in her greatest triumph, Sin." Miss Bara is without doubt the greatest portrayer of vampire roles in the world, and in "Sin" gives a wonderful characterization.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, talented young stars in the silent drama, are featured in "The House of Scandals," to be the Orpheum's feature picture Tuesday. BALBOA PLAYER HAS THE COOKING HOBBY

Lillian M. West, Who is Mrs. Edwin J. Brady in the Kitchen, Is Some Cook, Too.

Cooking is the hobby of Lillian M. West, the attractive young player who is seen in some of the best feature films put out lately by Balboa. When quitting time comes at the studio, she quickly emerges from her make-up and hastens away to her cosy little apartment in Long Beach and prepares the evening meal.

For herself? Not now, gentle reader, for only recently she joined hands with another well known Balboan, Edwin J. Brady, who plays villain parts. Miss West's cooking has so improved his disposition that some close observers contend he is in danger of becoming good natured enough to be a leading man.

The Franklin News, recently started at Oakland, California, by Rex Midgley, of the Franklin theatre, is a four page publication in the form of a newspaper devoted entirely to attractions coming to the Franklin and to motion picture news in general. Five thousand are distributed each week. Advertisers are finding the paper a profitable medium and it is becoming self-supporting. The cut reproduces part of two pages of the issue of Oct. 10. Note the newspaper make up, with its well written heads and good display of cuts. Also the review quoted from Motion Picture News. Outside advertising is not permitted to "bury" the theatre's own publicity.

TWO MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS, WITH SMALL CAPITAL BUT LARGE ABILITY, ACHIEVE SUCCESS

HOW two men, starting five years ago with $40 as capital, have, by the use of brains, made genuine successes as exhibitors in the small town of Brooklyn, Mich., is told in a letter received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS from C. B. Estes, one of the exhibitors in question. With his brother, C. H. Estes, he operates the Square Town Electric Theatre.

Listen to their story. It contains several first class "live wire" suggestions—first class because they have been tried, and have worked:

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
"New York City, N. Y.
"Gentlemen:

"We started in the picture business almost five years ago, here in this little town of 600 inhabitants.. Our capital at that important stage of our existence consisted of the magnificent sum of $40. With this $40 we bought a second-hand two-pin Edison machine, borrowed chairs from the defunct People's Church, got a book of the Michigan insurance laws, built a booth under its specifications and went to work. We subscribed for several trade journals, studied everything we could get our hands on that had any bearing on the picture business and kept our eyes and ears open to everything that was going on about us.

"Today we own a neat little theatre equipped with a Powers Six machine, seated with 150 Hardesy upholstered folding chairs, an $800 piano with electric Teleckra attachment which is played by cable with rolls inserted at the ticket office and operated by the writer who is a musician. We have our own lighting plant consisting of a three K. W. generator and six-horse power special electric oil engine, both Fairbanks, Morse make. We have a battery of four electric fans and plenty of ventilators. Our chairs are arranged in rows of ten chairs each, divided by one main isle which is 48 inches wide.

"Besides our regular newspaper advertising we use 1, 3 and 6 sheet posters, window cards, heralds, dodgers, banners, slides, etc., and have what we call a regular automobile mailing list.

"We have two distinct sets of shows a week, one for the town people and another for the country people. We have learned by paying attention to what we hear about us that the same class of shows will not do for both classes of people. And another thing—we have always encouraged our patrons to talk freely to us of their impressions of different subjects; by so doing we have been through a regular school of instruction and have profited greatly thereby. We are extremely particular about our projection and our pictures are run as they should be, at a speed of about eighteen minutes to the reel. The pride our townspeople take in bringing their city visitors to our theatre and the wonder these visitors express at finding, in many cases, a better show in such a small town than they can see at home, is compensation enough for our untiring labors. Our bills are paid promptly, in fact immediately, therefore we enjoy the best of credit everywhere, which is a poor man's best protection.

"Beside our own electric plant, which we only use for matinees and special occasions, we use the village power, 110 volt I. C. Both plants are available at a moment's notice through a system of double switches, so we are doubly protected against accident to either plant. Through our care in building our booth under the insurance laws, we had no trouble in passing the state fire inspection. The state fire marshal told us we had a very fine booth. Under the new state laws it would be impossible to make a start like we did five years ago and the really poor man, no matter what his ability may be, must stay on the outside and look on with hungry heart.

"The best is none too good for our people and as far as in our power lies they are going to get it. Thanking you for the never ceasing help you give us in the NEWS, we are

"Yours truly,

MILWAKEE LEADER JOINS RANKS OF LIVE NEWSPAPERS

Thanks to the extended campaign of "Motion Picture News" for photoplay sections in the daily papers, Milwaukee at last has a daily that devotes a certain part of its news columns each day to the photoplay. The Milwaukee Leader is the paper, and according to Walter Wyrick, who inaugurated and is in charge of the column, it was through the suggestions made in "Motion Picture News" that he first realized the value of such a column.

Under his direction the column has become very popular despite the fact that it has only been running for a few days. Profiting upon the advice of the "News," the Leader made no attempt to get any advertisers until the column had been running for some days. The result was that the theatres saw just what they were getting and rapidly came in line.

Just at present the space is very limited, but as the theatre advertisers increase their space it is expected that the space devoted to photoplays will be increased.

Mr. Wyrick says he reads the "News" almost exclusively as he finds that he can secure more real stories in its pages than in any other medium, not excepting the clip sheets. It is expected the column will soon grow to a solid page on Saturdays and at least a column daily.

THE WEEK'S BEST LIVE WIRE STUNT

When a railroad puts on special excursion rates, solely to enable people along its line to see a motion picture, the last word in the history of photoplay popularity would seem to be written.

That is what happened the other day in Pennsylvania. The Susquehanna & New York R. R. ran excursions from nearby towns to Towanda, Pa., Oct. 18, where the Keystone Opera House, under the management of William L. Woodin, was showing "The Heart of Jennifer." Many of the scenes in this picture were made in Central Pennsylvania lumber camps and along Schrader Creek.

Manager Woodin deserves praise for his enterprise in arranging this unusual "live wire" stunt. No wonder he is turning away business.

FOX OFFICES IN MONTREAL TO BE HEADQUARTERS FOR CHAIN OF CANADIAN EXCHANGES

THE opening of a handsome suite of offices in Montreal, at 322 St. Catherine street West, by the Fox Film Corporation, is a step that has set the Canadian trade agog with interest.

Since William Fox has announced his decision to open a chain of distributing offices the length and breadth of the Dominion of Canada and his main office in Montreal, the interest of filmdom has been keenest. Numerous inquiries have already been made from various points in the Province of Quebec concerning their service.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has given in Montreal, where he has been for a few days, an example of his executive ability in cleaning up the situation for the organization. In company with Mr. Sheehan were Carey Wilson, the Corporation contract manager; N. H. Spitzer and Jerome Abrams, special representatives from New York, the last mentioned having been laying the lines for his superiors to take up.

Chandos St. John-Brenon, a brother of Herbert Brenon, the Fox producer, now in Jamaica staging the million dollar Kellermann picture, has been installed as manager of the head offices.

The offices have the best location in Montreal, situated as they are in the very heart of the retail district, facing Montreal's largest department store, next door to the main post office, and occupy the largest floor space of any motion picture exchange in Canada. The two floors are 90x30 feet.

The first floor is devoted solely to manager's office, general office, cashier's office, shipper's office, shipping department, publicity department, rewind room and film vaults; here also will be kept the more perishable of the high art stock supplied by Mr. Fox to all of his exchanges. The upper floor, same size, is devoted solely to an exhibition room where is now being installed a Powers 6B Machine and many innovations in the way of artistic decorations and comforts to the patrons of the Corporation. To the rear and entirely separate, is a large store room.

A rumor has gained currency to the effect that it was Mr. Fox's intention to build a studio in the environs of Montreal and that by next summer Fox Productions, from start to finish, would be made in Montreal. Questioned in this regard, Mr. Sheehan had nothing to say, neither denying nor confirming such rumor.

The Dominion head offices are finished in mahogany partitioning and are the latest and most convenient arrangements for a large and central film exchange of an up-to-date kind.

Special invitations will be issued to exhibitors, city officials, prominent citizens, theatre managers, etc., for the official opening of the offices, at which will be given a musicale soirée and a "run-off" of several of the best features of the Fox Corporation.

SCHWERIN, FOX REPRESENTATIVE, VISITS HOME TOWN

C. F. Schwerin, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Chattanooga recently. Chattanooga was Mr. Schwerin's home town and he operated the second moving picture theatre there. He also operated and was the organizer of the Princess Skating Rink and was instrumental in forming Chattanooga's famous spring festivals.

He left for Memphis, Nashville and Washington and then to New York, where he has been living for nine years.

CRESCENT CITY EXCHANGEMEN HELPING ALONG "GO-TO-THE NEWSPAPER" MOVEMENT

THE past week saw several shifts and new men in the ranks of the constantly-growing exchange field at New Orleans. The exchanges apparently are enjoying good business and giving keen competition. The motion picture situation is daily growing better, as exchange men in New Orleans, while unfortunately not co-operating through means of organization, still are extending helpful individual boosts in following MOTION PICTURE NEWS' "go-to-the-newspaper" movement.

Daily an announcement of the appointment of a V-L-S-E agency is expected. There have been several rumors in this respect, but nothing definite. Another interesting announcement expected shortly is the New Orleans opening of the Triangle program. The public has heard of the Triangle combination through newspapers and trade papers; and the program undoubtedly will receive tremendous support for the reason that the people are talking about it.

Sam Norvell, of Milwaukee, Wis., has been added to the sales force of the World Film Corporation, and will come under the jurisdiction of Maurice F. Barr. Again is Mr. Norvell a member of the World family, he having been employed out of the Chicago office at the beginning of the year. F. R. Gilbert, of Dallas, Texas, also is a new representative for Mr. Barr. He succeeds U. C. Jones.

With Al Durning as manager of the Greater New York Rental Company, Albert Pirolle, formerly bookkeeper for the former office, becomes assistant manager of the United Program Film Service, a position formerly held by Mr. Durning.

A new wrinkle for the assistance of salesmen traveling out of the New Orleans office has been devised by Joseph Klein, Southern Division manager of World Film. Mr. Klein gives his salesmen press sheets covering the World and Equitable productions; and, when a franchise is closed in a country town, the salesman hands these sheets, localized, to the exhibitor for distribution to the newspapers.

Announcement is made by the New Orleans office of Kleine-Edison that a new Kleine-Edison office is to open shortly in Detroit, Mich., to serve Michigan and parts of Illinois and Indiana. It is noted in this connection that a similar announcement made by Kleine-Edison's New Orleans office, to the effect that a new exchange would open in Cincinnati, was carried by MOTION PICTURE NEWS a week or so ahead of official announcement or any other trade paper.

MUTUAL'S SIOUX FALLS BUILDING COLLAPSES

The Sioux Falls, S. D., branch of the Mutual, a three-story building, collapsed last week, causing $10.000 damage. It was on West Ninth street, near the heart of the business district. Excavation for a new building adjoining caused the collapse. The manager, who was in the building, heard the walls cracking and made a hurried dash for his life.

Manager Taylor of the Omaha exchange has been there ever since, getting affairs straightened out. A new building has been secured. All accounts during that time were handled from the Omaha office.

UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE, OMAHA, HAS AUTOMOBILE SERVICE

The Universal exchange at Omaha, Neb., has substituted automobiles for its horse service between the exchange and the express trains. The more rapid service makes Manager Van Husan wonder why he didn't make the change a long time ago, he says.

Growing business made the change necessary.

KANSAS CITY V-L-S-E ACCOMPLISHING THINGS IN PUBLICITY

The publicity department of the V-L-S-E, in Kansas City, is accomplishing things. It is helping the exhibitor to improve his business; it is helping the newspaper get more advertising, and last but not least, it is getting the business for the V-L-S-E exchange.

H. E. Stahler, one of the road men in Kansas, has succeeded in having the newspapers, in seven out of every ten towns in which he works, start motion picture pages, and in one instance a small town daily started a page and it was not a week later until its contemporary began advertising the fact that it was the paper that carried the real live moving picture news of that city.

L. J. Scott, a former exhibitor, is in charge of this department. He deserves great credit for his work in the way of advertising the industry by working on the newspapers in his territory, in an effort to have them start moving picture pages.

This publicity department was due to the thought of Manager Pearson. The question of advertising comes up in every talk for a contract, and Manager Pearson thought out the plan of a publicity campaign that would take care of it.

NEW KRITERION PROGRAM WINNING SUPPORT

Last week was a busy week for the new Kriterion Sales Corporation. B. M. Corbett, Mr. Muller and Mr. Bower, of the Kriterion corporation of Boston, spent several days during the week in going over the coming productions of the new program.

E. T. Peter, of Dallas, Texas, who spent ten days in going over the Kriterion coming program, accepted it for his territory. Cotter and Walsh, of the St. Louis Kriterion, were so well pleased with the coming program that they have closed for Kansas City territory in addition to the territory they control now.

One of the largest exhibitors in Baltimore, who controls four high class houses, and who has shown all of the previous Kriterion releases, has shown some of the pictures three times, and has arranged to run future Kriterion releases.

BERNARD VISITS NEVADA EXHIBITORS FOR FOX

W. Bernard, who travels out of the San Francisco branch of the Fox Film Corporation, is making a trip through Nevada to get exhibitors in that state lined up before the winter season commences and makes travel difficult.

It is stated that more business than ever is being booked since the new cash policy has been adopted.

MADSON NEW MUTUAL MANAGER AT SALT LAKE

J. E. Madson, manager of the United Film Service of Salt Lake City, has resigned to accept a similar position with the Mutual Film Corporation there. Mr. Madson has many friends in this community, and his success in his new position is assured.

CENSORS' ACTIVITIES CHIEF TOPIC IN PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGE CIRCLES

A PRIVATE view of the Fox Film Corporation's "Carmen," with Theda Bara in the title role, was given at the Arcadia theatre, Philadelphia, on Thursday, October 28, after the regular performance.

Mr. Hennessey, manager of the Fox Exchange, sent out invitations to a number of interested people, including the representatives of the press, and asked for a frank expression of opinion from them. In view of the exciting adventures of the Lasky "Carmen," curiosity is rife as to what the Board of Censors will do to this one.

Already exhibitors are eagerly clamoring for this picture. It is not yet decided who will have the first Philadelphia showing.

The Famous Players Exchange report a whirlwind success on their Lasky "Carmen." So great was the demand for seats at the Stanley theatre, that the scheduled run of one week was lengthened into two. From the Stanley the picture goes to the Palace, another big link in the Stanley chain of houses. The exchange has already four prints of Carmen working in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Pope, manager of the Continental Feature Exchange, says that "Damaged Goods" was utterly barred out of Pennsylvania by the State Board of Censors. Those Pennsylvanians who wish to see this highly commended picture with its great moral lesson must take a trip to New Jersey. At Atlantic City, the City Square theatre, Edward J. O'Keefe proprietor, showed the film to 10,000 people in two days.

F. W. Martsch, formerly with the Metropolitan Booking Office, has transferred his services to the Tri-State Star Feature Company, where he is head of the booking department.

The whole exchange from President Binns down is agog over their latest acquisition, "The Victory of Virtue," the United Photo Plays Company's release with Gerda Holmes and Wilmuth Merkyl as stars.

A private screening of the picture will be given in a few days, after which it will be decided who of the several theatre managers, eager for the first showing of the film, is to have that privilege.

J. S. Hebrew, manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, has been in Washington a few days looking after business connected with the branch office located in the Capital City.

Tillie's Tomato Surprise with Marie Dressler is going well on V-L-S-E program in spite of hard knocks given by the censors. Strong protests were made before some essential parts of the picture were allowed to remain in. One of the things was "Tillie" falling into a barrel of molasses. Echo is kept too busy asking "Why?"

VALUABLE HINTS GIVEN EXHIBITORS IN LETTER FROM NEW ENGLAND FAMOUS PLAYERS EXCHANGE

ADMIRABLE pointers to help the exhibitor, not only of Paramount, but of any sort of pictures, are given in a letter written to Paramount exhibitors in New England by George K. Robinson, manager of the efficiency and publicity department of the Famous Players Company of New England, with headquarters in Boston. In part, his letter reads:

"It is advantageous to use a house bulletin weekly, to let the people know what you have and when you are going to have it, and above all things, be persistent in the use of it.

"Then have your house light. Experiment with colors, such as having amber in your ceiling lights, also at your entrance, side lights green, and the boxes green, blue or red. Don't use a brown colored globe, but dip them in color. The right effect will not hurt your projection, and it has this advantage: it lets a patron see where he is going to sit, also beside whom, and the manager can always see his audience.

"Try and mould the leader of your orchestra or your pianist to fit his music to the picture, and by all means cut out the effects by the drummer.

"Have the ushers polite and watch what they say to the patron, such for example, as, 'May I trouble you to rise?' If he has to disturb the patron again, have him say, 'May I trouble you again to rise?' If a lady has her hat on make him say, 'Would you oblige the management by removing your hat, as it obstructs the view of patrons back of you?' instead of, 'Hats off.' If any argument arises, don't let the usher settle it, but have him call the house officer or the manager.

"Have the manager know as many of his patrons as possible. Never advertise

NORTH ENDORSES NEWS CAMPAIGN

When a Trade Paper comes out and advocates the use of the newspapers it is time for all interested parties to sit up and take notice. In the "Motion Picture News" under date of Oct. 16, the first article entitled "The Newspaper vs. The Trade Paper," deserves the most careful attention of the exhibitors throughout our territory and we hope that every one of our PALS have already read this carefully and then made another call on your publisher demanding motion picture pages. If there is a publisher in the country today who cannot see the logic in the statements made in that article and fails to take advantage of the suggestions, then, if he is not already running a motion picture page, that publisher is as sound asleep as old Rip Van Winkle ever was. WAKE HIM UP, PALS. NOW!!!

anything you are not going to do. Don't cheat. Watch your projection. Keep your machines up, get new parts for those worn, and keep the booth clean from the floor to the lenses. Paint the inside green, as this helps the operators, and kills lots of escaping rays that mar the picture.

"The game of exhibiting is one of 'who is fit,' and you all can become so."

DETROIT MUTUAL MANAGER LOOKS FOR LARGER QUARTERS

G. J. Trask, manager of the Detroit office of the Mutual, says business is so good that he is looking around for a new location, which will enable him to enlarge his facilities and have his offices on the first floor.

"Our business in Detroit and throughout the state is getting better all the time," he told the News representative. On the subject of whether stage people were more in demand than screen stars for pictures, Mr. Trask spoke decidedly in favor of screen stars.

"A good screen star in a picture, to my way of thinking, is much better as a drawing card than the stage favorites," he said. "People want the picture stars."

COAST'S LARGEST THEATRE BOOKS "COLLEGE ORPHAN" FOR WEEK

The Los Angeles Universal exchange has booked the Carter De Haven subject, "The College Orphan," produced by William C. Dowlan, for the week of October 25 at Clune's Auditorium, the largest theatre on the Coast, and where "The Clansman" was shown for twenty-four weeks.

This theatre attempts at all times to secure the best available subjects, and all members of the Universal producing staff, here, together with those of the local exchange, are highly elated that this subject is to be shown here.

PATHE'S DETROIT OFFICE REPORTS VERY ACTIVE BUSINESS

L. E. Franconi, manager of the Detroit office of Pathé, reports a very active business.

The Washington theatre has contracted for the first run rights on the J. Rufus Wallingford series. Thirty theatres in Detroit are running "Neal of the Navy," and first run rights on Pathé Gold Rooster features have been contracted for by the management of the new Duplex theatre, in course of erection at East Grand Boulevard, near Woodward avenue.

GOLDSTONE ATTENDS MEETING OF WORLD BRANCH MANAGERS

Philip Goldstone, manager of the World exchange at Omaha, Neb., went to Chicago, Friday of last week to attend a meeting of all the World branch managers in the United States.

SEATTLE EXCHANGES MUST INSTALL AUTOMATIC SPRINKLERS

A city ordinance has been passed in Seattle compelling all film exchanges to install an automatic sprinkler system throughout their film vaults, inspecting and shipping rooms.

HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST IN AND ABOUT THE VANCOUVER EXCHANGES

WHAT practically amounts to the establishment of another exchange in Vancouver, B. C., is brought about by the importation of V-L-S-E subjects by W. P. Dewees, of the Rex theatre, who is securing them from Manager Tom North, of the V-L-S-E office in Seattle. A sort of co-operative circuit, with each house paying its pro rata share of the duty on each subject used, is now being formed under the supervision of Mr. Dewees. The Province and Bijou theatres in Winnipeg, through arrangements made with John A. Schuberg, are already using the service, in addition to the Rex and Globe theatres in Vancouver, and the Columbia in Victoria. The two latter houses are among those controlled by the National Amusement Company.

S. B. Taube, who has been associated with the Universal organization in Canada for several years, and has lately been in charge of the Vancouver office of this company, has handed in his resignation, to take effect immediately. James E. Finch, accompanied by D. G. Walkley, manager of the Calgary office, arrived in Vancouver from Toronto last Saturday, and on Monday took over the branch there. Mr. Finch has lately been special representative for this company in Eastern Canada, and was formerly associated with the Famous Players and World Film organizations as road man. Mr. Taube, an efficient manager, will shortly announce his new connection, having already received two offers.

William Alexander, representative of the Fox Feature Film Corporation, spent two days in Vancouver, and it is altogether likely that as a result of this visit the Fox productions will soon be brought into Vancouver territory. An offer has been made for the Western Canadian rights, but further negotiations will undoubtedly be necessary before a definite settlement is reached. C. St. John, formerly with a Winnipeg newspaper, has been appointed representative for the Fox company in Canada, and it is stated that offices will be opened immediately in Eastern Canadian cities. Stops were made by Mr. Alexander in Calgary and Winnipeg, where negotiations were opened with exchange men.

Manager E. R. Fauser, of the Dominion Film Exchange, has begun the importation of Kleine-Edison features through the Kleine office in Seattle. These subjects are being kept in Canada only one week, being shown at the Orpheum theatre in Vancouver and the Royal Victoria theatre in Victoria. Mr. Fauser states that all Kleine features which have not heretofore been shown in Vancouver, such as "Julius Caesar," will also be brought in.

Still another exchange is projected for Vancouver, but the promoters are not yet ready to make an announcement.

WASHINGTON FAMOUS PLAYERS EXCHANGE NOW HOUSED IN LARGER QUARTERS

THE Famous Players Exchange which is the Washington D. C. office of the Paramount Program, has moved into larger and more commodious quarters at 1210 G street. Under the management of George M. Mann this exchange has developed until it at present holds the sixth place among the Paramount offices over the country. The new quarters have been fitted up with special reference to efficiency in each department. Mr. Mann's office is set off so as not to be disturbed with other business; the publicity department, under the direction of J. Hesser Walraven, is also to itself and away from the bustle of shipments and visitors. An attractive reception room forms the entrance to the offices, while the shipping and clerical departments are adequately and efficiently housed.

Paper, photos, booklets and slides pertaining to films are systematically arranged, with ample space for delivery and packing. The films are stored in fireproof safes and the building itself is considered fire-proof.

An innovation is the installation of a system of dictaphones whereby Mr. Mann may consult Mr. Walraven without either leaving their desks. In like manner either of these officials may dictate to the clerks installed in another office. "This," said Mr. Walraven, "will be a great time saver and will greatly facilitate many matters which may be of common interest to several of us. Our offices are about twice the size of the old ones, which of itself speaks for the growth of Paramount in this territory. We had outgrown the other quarters and a move was absolutely necessary. With the news weekly we are inaugurating additional force and space was also necessary, and all have been housed in our present offices."

Mr. Mann has surrounded himself with men who are experts in their particular line. With Mr. Whitiker as a road man, Mr. Walraven conducting the publicity end, he has found it necessary to add to his force recently. Francis Petrot, formerly a newspaper man of Waterbury, Conn., is assistant to Mr. Walraven and James J. Goebel, expert cameraman, will handle the news items for Paramount in the Washington vicinity.

DRESNER GETS ASSOCIATED RIGHTS FOR TWO STATES

A. Dresner, general manager of the Kriterion Film Service of Indianapolis, Ind., has been spending the last two weeks in New York getting a line on the Associated Program, and has contracted for the states of Indiana and Kentucky.

Mr. Dresner started with Lubin about twelve years ago. He has managed the General Film in Cincinnati and Universal Film in Washington, and has also controlled a vast number of theatres throughout the middle western states.

London, Oct. 20.

A BRITISH Film Board of Trade, modeled after the recently organized Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, is advocated by The Cinema, which points out the dangers confronting the film industry in England, and the need for organization to successfully combat those dangers. The Cinema, addressing English renters directly, says:

"Consider what has happened to you—the trade—during only the past few weeks:

"You have had a thumping tax placed on your imported negatives without your representatives being consulted in any way.

"The position of London as the world's film-market has been seriously damaged, if not destroyed.

"A heavy blow has been dealt to the British film-printing business.

"Consider, in addition, what you are now and prospectively faced with:

"A possible increase in film taxes.

"Restrictions on licenses.

"Restrictions on exhibition of films.

"Restrictions on attendance of children.

"Restrictions on film storage.

"A possible tax on seating accommodation.

"And what are you doing to face the position? The answer can be expressed in one word:

"Talk!

"The Cinema, claiming the privilege of an intimate friend, wishes to assure you, with the most emphatic sincerity, that the present is the time for Action—not Talk!

"You have no central organization. You have no single body that can speak with a united voice on behalf of the whole trade. You have no representative committee or governing board that can protect the interests of the trade against conflict with outside interests. You fritter away your time, temper, and energy on sectional sessions and individual intrigues. You are divided against yourselves.

The Remedy

"What you need is a Film Board of Trade. The Cinema has suggested the formation of such a body on several recent occasions, and we suggest it again.

"Look at what has been done in the States during the past few weeks! The American trade is threatened with a wholly reactionary and restrictive censorship. They have united to meet the danger, and united in no half-hearted fashion.

"They formed a Moving Picture Board of Trade on September 15, and by September 20 over £2,000 had been received in subscriptions. £2,000 in five days!

"If it means so much to the American trade, does it not means as much, at this juncture, to the British trade? The appeal is to the business, not the patriotic, instinct. There is nothing the matter with our patriotism."

After calling the charter of the American Board "ideal," The Cinema proceeds:

"The board of directors consists of representatives of manufacturers, suppliers, renters, exhibitors, and several of the miscellaneous factors in the industry. They have already elected a president, a vice-president for each section, and a number of standing committees, including executive, membership, auditing, finance, arbitration, and publicity, together with various secretaries and a counsel.

"That is exactly what we want in this country, and we cannot get it, apparently, because the members of this industry are, as a trade, lacking in public spirit, jealous of each other individually, suspicious of the different trade organizations, and short-sighted where their joint interest is concerned."

SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER TO APPEAR IN LONDON FILM PLAYS

London, Oct. 20.

Not long after Sir Herbert Tree announced, just previous to starting for the United States, that he would put his Shakespearean successes into the films, appearing before the camera himself, Sir George Alexander accepted an offer from the London Film company by which he will appear in a picturization of "The Gay Lord Quex" and "The Importance of Being Earnest."

Canadians Give Ovation to Valli Valli in a Metro

After Showing of "High Road" the Star, on Informing Audience in Imperial Theatre, Montreal, That a Brother Is at the Front, Is Greeted with Wild Applause

METRO pictures made their Canadian debut by turning away over ten thousand patrons from the Imperial theatre, Montreal, on Monday night, October 18. Great preparations had been made for the occasion, some of the leading people of the whole province were present, and congratulations poured in through hundreds of telegrams.

When Manager Howard Conover and the officers of Metro Pictures, Limited, came down to the theatre at seven o'clock they found the police reserves had been called out by the theatre employees, and every seat in the house taken. By eight o'clock Bleury street was packed so that cars could not be run through it, and hundreds of autos and carriages were lined up, till it resembled the opening night of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Most of the distinguished visitors were forced to wait until the second show began, and when "The High Road" came on the screen for the second time a well known society editor declared that it was the most distinguished assemblage ever seen in a Montreal theatre.

After an introduction by Alderman Boyd, a leading city official, Valli Valli came on the stage in person, and told the audience that it was one of the happiest moments of her life, as she felt that she was among her own people. She told them that her brother was at the front, fighting for his king and country, and that her every sympathy was with Britain in the war.

Cheers interrupted her again and again, and when she spoke of the patriotic scenario contest now being conducted in Canada, to encourage the writing of a Canaian scenario to be made in Canada, the applause was deafening.

As she was making her exit a member of the staff of Metro Pictures, Limited, came forward with a flower basket of sterling silver, three feet tall, which he presented to Miss Valli on behalf of Metro Pictures, Limited, and Mr. Herbert Lubin, its managing director. The house went wild in their applause, and were delighted when it was announced that an additional surprise was in store for the audience in the personal appearance of Edward Brennan, the popular screen favorite, who supported Miss Valli in "The High Road." He was presented with a silver cigarette case.

It is interesting to note that the management of the Imperial theatre radically changed its policy to bring in Metro pictures, raising the prices for the best seats from fifty cents to twenty-five cents. A beautiful stage setting was provided to show off the new program to the best advantage, the Astor roof garden being duplicated most effectively, with the orchestra on the stage. "The High Road" as a picture received a great deal of applause, and the Montreal newspapers on the following morning were high in their praise.

After the theatre party a banquet was tendered to Miss Valli, at which the leading financial boards, newspapers and military were represented.

Metro pictures will hereafter be the regular program at the Imperial for the first three days of each week.

ORRAL HUMPHREY TO STAR IN "ENGLISH" COMEDIES

Orral Humphrey who in "The Diamond from the Sky," appears as the English barrister, "Marmaduke Smythe," will be starred in a number of "English" comedies when the serial is finished.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

ELABORATE PRODUCTION FOR NEW BEATRIZ MICHELENA SUBJECT

Elaborateness of sets and costumes will be an outstanding feature of the early scenes of Edwin Milton Royle's "Unwritten Law" as it is now being produced in motion pictures by the California Motion Picture Corporation at their San Rafael studio.

This announcement is particularly interesting to Beatriz Michelena's following of admirers, since it will be her first opportunity to appear on the screen as a daughter of wealth, and it will consequently stand out in sharp contrast to the great majority of her previous roles. Heretofore, she has won her way to the hearts of the motion picture public in such impersonations as "Salomy Jane," "Mignon," "Lovey Mary" of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Lily" of "The Lily of Poverty Flat," and "Nell Sanders" in "Salvation Nell."

In each of these characterizations the predominating environment was one of poverty. In the present picture, however, Miss Michelena is to be introduced as the bride of a millionaire attorney with aspirations for the Governorship.

EQUITABLE RENTS PLAZA THEATRE FOR "LABYRINTH" SCENES

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, last week rented the Plaza theatre at Madison avenue and Fifty-ninth street, New York City, and staged several of the big scenes in "The Labyrinth" in which Gail Kane is appearing.

Two thousand extra people occupied the auditorium seats, while the entire "Town Topics Company" from the Century theatre, in full stage attire, presented the second act of that play before the camera, with Gail Kane taking the principal role instead of the regular leading woman.

The entire theatre was wired and lights installed and the scenes staged from six in the morning until late in the evening.

E. Mason Hopper directed the efforts of the multitude of extras and forty principals.

MANTELL AND NANCE O'NEIL IN FOX PHOTOPLAYS SOON

The William Fox production of "Carmen" is to be followed shortly by other Fox photoplays of note. Robert B. Mantell in "The Blindness of Devotion" will be released November 7, followed by Nance O'Neil in "A Woman's Past."

"The Blindness of Devotion," which is by Rex Ingram, is a story which combines beauty, love hatred, revenge and action. Mr. Mantell is supported by Genevieve Hamper. The production is under the direction of J. Gordan Edwards.

"A Woman's Past" abounds in dramatic situations and is a drastic arraignment of the morals of present-day society. It is from the New York stage success by Captain John King and is directed by Frank Powell. Seldom in her career has Miss O'Neil, it is said had a better vehicle for the display of her talent than that afforded her in the character of Jane Hawley.

CHAPLIN IN SILK HAT AND DRESS SUIT FOR NEXT COMEDY

Charles Chaplin of the worn out shoes and old clothes appears in a new role in the latest Essanay-Chaplin comedy, "A Night in the Show," which soon is to be released.

In this play Mr. Chaplin doffs his old costume and appears in dress suit and silk hat. But even in this disguise it is impossible not to recognize the Chaplin walk, the Chaplin capers and the inimitable Chaplin mannerisms. He is Charles Chaplin, whether in the garb of a hobo or a man of society.

This comedy proves conclusively, it is said, that it is not Charles Chaplin's make-up, funny as that has been considered, that endears Chaplin to the photoplay public.

Critics who have watched him at work on his newest piece declare that he is funnier than ever, although a new Chaplin in a new role.

WHITWORTH TO MAKE HIS SCREEN DEBUT IN "WASTED LIVES"

Robert Whitworth, the English actor, is the latest recruit from the legitimate stage to join the ranks of film stars, having recently been engaged by the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Whitworth will be remembered for his appearances with Nazimova in "Bella Donna," and with Phillis Nielson-Terry in "The Adventure of Lady Ursula."

His first part as a screen actor will be in "Waste Lives," a three-part society drama by Ouida Bergere, upon which Director Theodore Marston is now at work for the Vitagraph Company.

ALICE BRADY WITH MILTON SILS IN "THE RACK"

Alice Brady is the star in the forthcoming production of "The Back," based upon a Brady success.

In that picture, Milton Sils, who made such a success in "The Pit" and "The Arrival of Perpetua," will also be seen.

The picture is in the hands of Emile Chautard, who recently completed "The Little Church Around the Corner."

ALL STAR VITAGRAPH CAST IN "AN INNOCENT SINNER"

An all-star cast of Vitagraph players, that includes Jewel Hunt, Harry Morey, Garry McGarry, Anders Randolf, Arthur Cozine, Jay Dwiggins and Belle Bruce, have begun work on Alice Williams' two-part drama, "An Innocent Sinner," being produced under the direction of C. Jay Williams.

FAMOUS PLAYERS WILL GIVE "OLD HOMESTEAD," RURAL CLASSIC, AN ELABORATE PRODUCTION

BY a rare coincidence, the first scene taken in the old Durland Riding Academy which was acquired for studio purposes by the Famous Players Film Company after the burning of its Twenty-sixth street headquarters, was the opening of "The Old Homestead," the rural classic which for over thirty years served to endear itself, and its star and author, Denman Thompson, to the American public.

It is doubtful if any other play is as well known to the masses as "The Old Homestead," with the possible exception of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is one of the few plays which the great motion picture public knows as it knows its alphabet.

Denman Thompson's old home will be used, by permission of his son, Frank Thompson, from whom the rights to the play were obtained, as the settings for the rural portion of the story. The outlying districts of the typically quaint New England town in which it is situated will also be called upon to furnish additional rustic atmosphere for this production.

It was in 1875, while incapacitated by a severe attack of rheumatism, that Denman Thompson conceived the idea of "The Old Homestead," which he first wrote as a vaudeville sketch under the title of "Joshua Whitcomb." In its elaborated and expanded form, "The Old Homestead" had its first presentation under its present name at the Boston theatre in 1886.

Conservative estimates are that over twenty-million people have laughed and cried over this play, which in the last three decades has been presented in every village and hamlet in the United States and Canada.

James Kirkwood, under whose direction the adaptation is being made, states that "The Old Homestead" will prove unique in the history of feature films because of the scarcity of studio sets which will be used. With the old Thompson home, the neighboring village, and old Grace Church in New York, which forms one of the important settings, all to be used as actual backgrounds, and with many scenes transpiring in the streets of New York, there are but very few scenes which will be staged in the studio.

The Famous Players are especially indebted to Frank Thompson for the personal cooperation and assistance which he has given them in their efforts to preserve to the last detail the traditions and atmosphere with which the elder Thompson's presentation of "The Old Homestead" has so long been invested. From the photographs furnished by Mr. Thompson the producers have been able to copy exactly the costumes and make-up of the original characters in the play.

SMASHING NAVY DRAMA AND STORY OF EVOLUTION ON VITAGRAPH CALENDAR

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY'S "Colton, U. S. N.," a smashing navy drama, has been completed by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Paul Scardon. Charles Richman played Colton, the lead.

Two interesting features in "Colton, U. S. N.," are fleet maneouvres by fifteen battle ships, four torpedo boat destroyers and three colliers, under command of Vice-Admiral Henry T. Mayo, U. S. N., and a thrilling series of pictures of a landing of 280 marines, getting away from their battleships and making a landing on shore through the surf, and their advance in realistic battle formation against a supposed enemy.

After finishing the scenes at Newport the company went to Annapolis, Md., where the Naval Academy served as a background for tense moments, as well as adding color to the story by showing glimpses of social life in which the cadets were prominent.

The principal players concerned in the enactment of "Colton, U. S. N.," included Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff, James Norrison, Zena Keefe, Anders Randolf, Charles Wellesley and Thomas Mills. It will be released as a Blue Ribbon feature in five parts.

Of the long list of plays adapted by Vitagraph for the screen, the one best suited to the camera's requirements, is "The Cave Man," produced by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Theodore Marston, featuring Robert Edeson in the character of Haulick Smagg. "The Cave Man" was written by Gelett Burgess, and originally produced in Providence, R. I., as a legitimate comedy-drama, with Mr. Edeson in the portrayal of the leading character.

In producing "The Cave Man," Director Marston spared neither pains nor labor, used every known device and camera trick to enhance the value of its situations. Supporting Mr. Edeson are Fay Wallace, Lilliam Burns and George de Beck and other players.

It is in five parts, and is one of the most typically representative Blue Ribbon features yet announced by the Vitagraph Company for release.

"GIRL AND THE GAME," NEW FILM NOVEL OF RAILROAD LIFE, WITH HELEN HOLMES, FROM MUTUAL

"THE GIRL AND THE GAME" is the title of the new film novel to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation, following "The Diamond from the Sky."

Announcements coming from the studios of the recently organized Signal Film Corporation, which is making the new filmized novel, say that the first installment will be ready for release December 13. Helen Holmes is the star of "The Girl and the Game," which is being produced by J. P. McGowan. The story has been written by Frank Hamilton Spearman, a novelist who has attained unusual success.

HELEN HOLMES AND J. P. McGOWAN

The motif of the plot is railroad life. It is interesting to note that it was by the writing of the railroad stories that years ago Mr. Spearman, then a western banker, first broke into literature. His town was a division point on one of the great transcontinental railroads and he there came in touch with the life which gave him the elements of successful fiction, although many of his subsequent works embody entirely different materials.

Mr. Spearman's successes number a long list of famous novels, among them "Robert Kimberly," "Whispering Smith" and others. His "Held for Orders" was a thriller that got the attention of the thousands.

The story of "The Girl and the Game" threads through all the romantic ramifications of American railroading, all the way from the impressive office of the magnate in Wall Street to the smoky switch yard shanty and the roundhouse and out across the great rail girded reaches of the plains. There are flashes of society life and the heroine flits through contrasting situations of rare dramatic contrast.

Helen Holmes is preeminently the star for this sort of production. She has long been known as "the railroad girl." Her father was a railroad man of prominence. She was born and reared in Chicago and became famous there as an artist's model. She was the model for "The Santa Fe Girl" who has decorated posters all over the world. She is an exponent of the strenuous life of the open—athletic, five feet five, brown hair and eyes, a master-hand at the wheel of an auto, motor boat and can handle a yacht like a born soilor, it is said.

A special studio has been built for the Signal Film Corporation for the production of this series. This is said to be the most thoroughly equipped "railway studio" in the world. This studio backs right onto a real railroad. A station, water tank, roundhouse and various other structures necessary have been built with the most faithful attention to realism.

"The Girl and the Game" will run through fifteen releases of two reels to each installment.

MORENO TO ESSAY FIRST STRAIGHT COMEDY ROLE

Antonio Moreno, a prominent Vitagraph leading man, will essay his first straight comedy role in motion pictures in the forthcoming production of the two-part feature "A 'Model' Wife," by E. Lawrence Gibson, an author new to the motion picture fans.

While Mr. Moreno has appeared in a number of comedy productions, he has always played a serious part.

In "A 'Model' Wife," he will be one of the comedians playing opposite Lillian Walker, who heads the cast, and an association with such popular Vitagraph players as Louise Beaudet, L. Rogers Lytton and Lillian Burns, under the direction of Wilfrid North.

BOSWORTH, FOR FIRST TIME, TAKES "RUFFIAN" ROLE IN PICTURES

For the first time in his long and varied career before the motion picture camera, Hobart Bosworth plays the part of a ruffian. And he does dirty political jobs and gets in jail for it—actually serves time—the same as all other bad men who do those petty little things before the camera, so it goes without saying that Hobart Bosworth is as bad a bad man as he is a good good man, when he plays that kind of a part.

HOBART BOSWORTH IN "TAINTED MONEY"

In other words, it has always been a little fad of Mr. Bosworth's that he did not relish bad men's parts in motion pictures, but in considering the story of "Tainted Money" and the giving away in the last part of the picture of $25,000 in one flop besides lending his opponent a large sum of money, Mr. Bosworth thought he would try to be such a bad man who proves to be a pretty good man after all.

"Tainted Money" is from George E. Hall's story, adapted to the screen by F. McGrew Willis and produced by Ulysses Davis for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Supporting Mr. Bosworth are E. Clark, J. Curtis, William Mong, Frank Newberg, W. Harris, Grace George and Jane Novak, whose excellent work in this picture prompted the Universal officials in choosing her to play opposite Hobart Henley in "Graft," the new Universal serial. "Tainted Money" will be released as a Broadway Universal Feature.

ROBERT WARWICK TO STAR IN "MARK TRUITT" FOR WORLD

World Film Corporation is to produce "The Ambition of Mark Truitt" in feature film form. Henry Russell Miller is the author of this book, as also of "The Man Higher Up."

Robert Warwick will play the leading role in this production of "The Ambition of Mark Truitt."

KALEM'S WINTER PLANS INCLUDE THREE SERIALS, AND NUMBER OF NOVELTIES

PLANS are now being completed by the Kalem Company for the winter activities of their various organizations. Several original manuscripts have been secured and work arranged far into the winter.

Foremost among the productions, of course, will be the "Stingaree" series. These episodes are based on the book of the same name by E. W. Hornung, the famous creator of "Raffles," and the first release date on this series has been announced as Wednesday, November 24, with two reel episodes to follow on each succeeding Wednesday. The complete series is in twelve episodes.

The support that the showing of this feature will have in the publication of the fiction stories in the daily newspapers also speaks well for the reception of the series by the general public. As in previous series produced by this company, each episode will tell a complete story. Attractive paper has been designed for lobby display and several unique advertising features arranged.

The "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series, with Helen Gibson in the title role, the Kalem Company plans to continue indefinitely, it is said. The titles of those planned for the immediate future, the company announces, include "The Dynamite Train," "The Girl and the Special," "The Tramp Telegrapher," and "The Girl on the Bridge."

The Kalem Company adds that the reception given to the first episodes of "The Ventures of Marguerite" promises to make that series a rival in popularity to "The Hazards of Helen." Never has Marguerite Courtot been given a role more to her liking than that of the heroine of the series. One of the big features of the series has been the gowns worn by Miss Courtot. The costumes which the star wears are creations by Russek, of Fifth avenue, and by many he is considered the foremost fashion authority in America.

Supplementing these features, Kalem also has arranged for a number of novelties that will be announced later.

BETTY GRAY AS SOCIAL COQUETTE IN AN IMP-UNIVERSAL

Betty Gray, the new Imp-Universal leading lady, will appear as a social coquette in the coming Brinsley Shaw picture, "The Social Butterfly," in which she is supported by Harry Spingler and Paul Panzer.

In this picture Miss Gray will wear a smart array of gowns.

ATLAS ENGAGES MARCIA, DANCER, FOR COMEDY SCENE

The Atlas Company, on the Associated Program, have just completed "And He Came Straight Home," a comedy for which they engaged Marcia, a well known dancer, to dance in the Egyptian dance of this picture.

The Atlas Company are at present working on a new comedy, "The Reverend Slips a Cog," and have rented the D. & C. Navigation Company's steamer, "City of Detroit."

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CAST IN "A MODERN CAMILLE" FOR WORLD

"A Modern Camille," a forthcoming World Film feature directed by Albert Capellani, starring Clara Kimball Young, is, of course, based upon Alexandre Dumas' famous play of the same name.

Paul Capellani, the director's brother, is to play the part of Armand Duval.

Other members of the World Film supporting Miss Young are Lillian Cook, Robert Cummings, Edward H. Kimball and William Jefferson.

KEYSTONE STATE EXHIBITORS RESENT WHOLESALE "SPY" SYSTEM ORDERED BY GOVERNOR

BETWEEN 5,000 and 6,000 employees of the State of Pennsylvania are now arrayed against the motion picture exhibitors of that State, to trip them up in some violation of the censorship law, as the result of Governor Brumbaugh's action, recorded in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in calling on the heads of all departments of the State government to direct all their employees to act as "gumshoe" detectives to "shadow" the picture men.

The Governor's order has created a sensation throughout the State, even outside motion picture circles. It has been the subject of newspaper editorials and much other comment.

Exhibitors resent this wholesale espionage that has been established over their business, not so much because they fear they may be arrested and fined for occasional violations of the law, but because the act of the Governor tends to reflect on the integrity of the men engaged in the picture business as a class, and to cause the exhibitors to be looked upon by the public in general as business men who are under suspicion of being constantly and willfully breaking the law, when such is far from being the truth as proved by the small number of prosecutions that have been inaugurated since the censorship law went into effect.

Statisticians at the State Capitol have figured out that the 5,000 or 6,000 amateur detectives put on the trail of the motion picture men through the Governor's order, constitute a force sufficient to have an average of two or three men scrutinizing constantly every motion picture theatre in Pennsylvania. The six thousand persons on the State's payroll include among others the hundreds of employees of the Highway Department stationed in all parts of the State; the numerous agents and attaches of the Health Department and Board of Public Grounds and Buildings; all the Game and Fish Wardens; the entire membership of the State Constabulary; the famous Pennsylvania police force which patrols every corner of the State; all the investigators of the factory inspection and other bureaus of the Department of Labor and Industry; to say nothing of thousands of other men in a dozen other departments or bureaus scattered throughout every county.

One of the things that is most distasteful to the exhibitors with regard to the new order is the fact that the Governor should single them out as the one class of business men for which such an elaborate system of espionage should be devised.

What the exhibitors are wondering is why the tremendous detective force should be turned loose to see that this one act of the Assembly relating to motion picture censorship is strictly enforced, when for hundreds of other acts treating of far more serious offenses than those dealt with in the censorship law, only the ordinary police precautions are deemed necessary.

SATURNALIA OF FILM BANNING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

The British Columbia censor has condemned the Kleine-Edison feature, "The Magic Skin," which had been brought into Canada from the Kleine office in Seattle by Manager E. R. Fauser of the Dominion Film Exchange, Vancouver. Manager Pilling of the Orpheum theatre, which was to have shown the picture, was present while it was being run off for the benefit of the censor, and while he regretted the loss of an advertised feature, he was forced to in the censor's decision. The Vancouver exhibitors have on more than one occasion demonstrated their ability in a much more sensible way than the regularly constituted official—with less hysteria, perhaps, but with vastly more common sense.

One of the short subjects condemned recently was George Ade's "Fable of the Roystering Blades," rejected because it "ridicules the temperance movement."

Following are some of the official reasons given for the absolute rejection of various pictures: "offensive to organized labor"; "vulgarity, and excessive bar room scenes"; "beating a lady on the street"; "burlesqueing minister"; "gangster story—criminal life"; "exploiting insanity for comedy purposes"; "offensive to Anglican Church"; "excessive drunkenness"; "intensely vulgar." Actually hundreds of subjects have been condemned in British Columbia during the past year on just such pretexts as these.

"NATION" RECEIVES FOURTEEN CUTS IN KANSAS CITY

"The Birth of a Nation," when shown to the members of the Welfare Board of Kansas City, received fourteen cuts, which however, did not seem to hurt much, as the play went over big to capacity houses on Sunday, October 24.

The papers there have given this first two dollar picture good notices.

CENSOR BANS "JUDY FORGOT" AS GERMAN PROPAGANDA!

"Judy Forgot," one of the Universal Features, with Marie Cahill, was this week condemned by the censor for British Columbia on the ground that the picture is part of a great "pro-German propaganda"—probably as sensible as most of the reasons given for rejections in this province, but still not sensible enough to satisfy S. B. Taube, manager of the Universal exchange in Vancouver, who had the film run off at the Colonial theatre before a party of invited guests.

While some of the scenes are laid in Heidelberg, whither the bride and groom go on their honeymoon, nothing which could possibly be construed as being pro-German was revealed; but this undoubted fact did not deter the censor, who professed to see a conspiracy behind the making of the picture.

Mr. Taube requested permission to change one or two sub-titles, which would transfer the scene of the play to Switzerland, but was notified that the picture would not be passed under any conditions whatever.

The offer, however, indicates how little the German angle had to do with the working out of the story.

An effort was made to secure another Universal Broadway picture to fill in the date at the Colonial, which has first run on these subjects, but this was found to be impossible.

INJUNCTION AGAINST AD OF FILM BASED ON "DAMAGED GOODS"

The Mutual legal department reports the granting of another injunction against the advertisement of a film entitled "A Victim of Sin," as a photo-drama based on "Damaged Goods." This time the offending film appeared in Detroit, Michigan. The injunction there is against J. H. Kunsky, Inc., David Mundstuk and Jonas Rosen, who had been supplied with the film and the infringing advertising matter from the New York concern against which an injunction was issued recently as told in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

One by one infringers are being run down and prosecuted. Action in these cases is brought in the name of the America Film Company, the makers of the original and genuine "Damaged Goods" with Richard Bennett and his Broadway cast of co-workers. Actions are pending or shortly to be instituted in a number of other cities.

EXHIBITORS' OWN INACTIVITY MAY BRING SUNDAY CLOSING

If any of the retail grocers who are endeavoring to force the Milwaukee delicatessen dealers to close their places of business on Sunday and who have already had a law passed providing that stores of this nature shall be closed on Sunday attempt to get out a warrant for any of those stores that remain open, Milwaukee will be closed tight as a drum next Sunday.

This was the edict issued by District Attorney W. C. Zabel when questioned regarding the Sunday closing law which becomes effective November first. Mr. Zabel added that while he was not in favor of the law, yet as district attorney he must see that it is enforced, if any citizen complains of violations.

"If a person comes into my office and demands a warrant, that person will be accommodated," he said, "but at the same time, I shall insist that the prosecution be made general."

Inquiry among the Milwaukee down town exhibitors following Mr. Zabel's statement, developed the fact that they had been laboring under the opinion that they were exempted under an amendment, known as the Heim bill, which exempted theatres from the Sunday closing statute. As a matter of fact, this bill was defeated in the State Legislature last session through the lack of interest displayed in it by the exhibitors after it had been favorably reported out by the committees

Thanks to their own inactivity, Milwaukee exhibitors are now facing the prospect of having their houses closed up every Sunday, when a little interest and an effective lobby sent out from Milwaukee when the bill was up would have prevented an action of this kind.

'FRISCO CENSORS UNDECIDED ABOUT "DAMAGED GOODS"

The Board of Censorship of San Francisco has inspected the feature production "Damaged Goods," but a definite decision as to whether it will be passed there has not been announced, it being understood that the board is divided on the question.

This picture was shown recently to a large gathering of physicians and many of these have come forward with strong endorsements, expressing the opinion that the showing of the film would be productive of much good.

It is anticipated that the Board of Censorship will decide in favor of allowing it to be shown on account of its educational value.

NEWARK POLICE CHIEF BANS FILM, THEN APOLOGIZES

A typical illustration of the arbitrariness of a certain class of public officials toward moving pictures, was provided in Newark, N. J., last week, when the Chief of Police of that city ordered an exhibitor not to show the widely-known V-L-S-E feature, "The Blindness of Virtue."

The exhibitor immediately got into communication with F. F. Hartich, the manager of the New York office's booking department of the V-L-S-E. An attorney himself, and supported by General Manager Walter W. Irwin, a counsellor of note, Mr. Hartich immediately began to make things hum.

Among the preliminary steps to legal action, Mr. Hartich submitted the tribute to the great moral lesson "The Blindness of Virtue" teaches, by Rev. Thomas B. Gregory.

He also pointed out the inconsistency of the action at this time, in view of the fact that "The Blindness of Virtue" had already been shown in Newark eleven times. Thereupon, the police department apologized to the exhibitor, and informed him that he might show this play at any time that he desired.

JERSEY CITY EXHIBITORS PLANNING FIGHT ON SUNDAY CLOSING

Despite appeals and protests motion picture theatres of Jersey City have been forced to remain closed Sundays during October. The disappointed public addressed petitions to the chief of police and the mayor, but to no purpose. Motion picture exhibitors have organized a Liberal Sunday League, and its president, William M. Britten, announced that plans had been agreed upon for the reopening of all the motion picture playhouses in Jersey City on the first Sunday in November. Exhibitors believe the public will remain loyal to them and declare their willingness to provide the Grand Jury with the necessary material for a test case.

Mr. Britten said: "I can promise that motion picture theatres in Jersey City will be opened on Sundays in the very near future. I was not in favor of having one management assume all the responsibility for opening on Sunday when it will be so much more effective to have them all open at the same time. Knowing public sentiment in the question as well as I think I do, I am not afraid of any legal action the municipal authorities may undertake."

ATLANTA FILM FIRE BRINGS RIGID INVESTIGATION OF EXCHANGES

Following a disastrous film exchange fire on October 16 in Atlanta, Ga., in which three girls lost their lives, a rigid investigation of all Atlanta exchanges was ordered in special resolutions passed by the general council of Atlanta October 19 and 20. The resolutions provide for the appointment of a special committee of three members of the council. They will make a careful investigation of all film exchanges.

The committee will look into the advisability of requiring a special building, one story in height, where all film exchanges shall be quartered, and where no other business of any kind shall be allowed. The city electrician has reported that complete protection from fire may only be accomplished by segregating each exchange in one story buildings.

Two points were brought out in the investigation; that the city laws were woefully inadequate in respect to fire protection at film exchanges; and that under the existing laws no blame can be attached for the recent catastrophe. As an outgrowth of the recent film fire, and its investigation, it is reported that an alarming number of buildings in Atlanta, where large numbers of people work, are in just as dangerous condition as was the burned building.

ATLANTA MINISTERS DON'T WANT "NATION" SHOWN THERE

Atlanta ministers, represented by C. B. Wilmer, Dr. Dunbar H. Ogden and John J. Eagan, have registered a protest with Mayor James G. Woodward against allowing in Atlanta a display of "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Eagan recently saw the picture in New York and declares that in his opinion certain parts of it should not be displayed in the South. The film has been booked by the Atlanta theatre for December. The mayor has not announced what he will do.

NEGRO LOSES SUIT AGAINST NEW JERSEY EXHIBITOR FOR ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION

THE decision of a jury in the suit of a colored man, Ernest Jones, to recover $500 damages from the City Square theatre, Atlantic City, established a precedent of much interest to all moving picture patrons as well as exhibitors.

The suit was brought in the District Court, the man Jones claiming he was refused a ticket for the first floor on account of his color and therefore entitled to damages under the old Civil Rights Act.

Ed. J. O'Keefe, proprietor of the theatre, through his attorneys, former Judge C. L. Cole and H. W. Lewis, denied this, claiming that a ticket had not been asked for by Jones and so could not have been refused. However, trouble had been previously had with a negro man accompanying Jones and so tickets were refused him on this account and not for the reason of color.

Judge Frank Smathers in his charge to the jury declared that a ticket was merely a license and was revocable at the pleasure of the management who was not compelled to assign any reason for his action, but must refund the money paid. However, a ticket could not be revoked on the ground of race or color, as such action would be a violatior of the Civil Rights Act, but it could be recalled for any other reason the management chose to assign.

After witnesses were called on both sides, the case went to the jury who after a short deliberation returned a verdict for the defendant, O'Keefe.

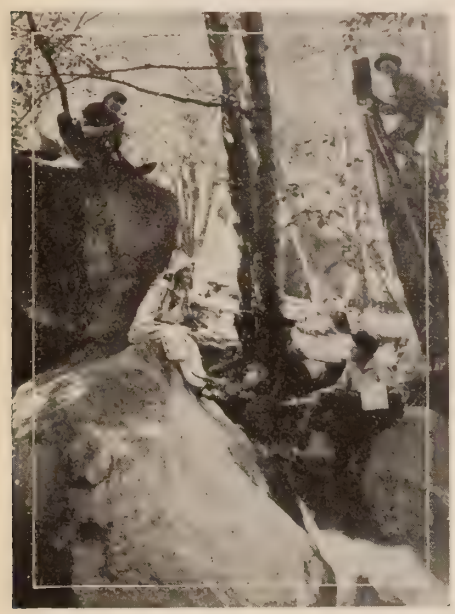
J. J. Crandall and Walter Comer were the attorneys for the colored man.

As this is the first time in the history of Atlantic City that a court has been called upon to lay a construction on the Civil Rights Act, the decision was eagerly awaited by a number of New Jersey lawyers.

Theatre managers throughout the state followed the case with the closest attention and are now fully posted as to their legal rights in such matters.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen



Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Oct. 30.

HARRY COLEMAN, musical comedy comedian, has been engaged by "Pathe" Lehrmann for work in L-Ko comedies for the Universal, and another new member of the producing staff is Lee Lawson, late technical director at the Universal, who has a similar position at the L-Ko studio.

The Harry Edwards and Billy Ritchie L-Ko company of ten players, spent the past week at San Diego making a two-reel comedy. An attractive California bungalow was built across the street from the L-Ko studio, and this week burned to the ground for scenes in the two-reel race-horse comedy in which Billy Ritchie was featured.

Harry Gardner, writer, newspaper editor, song publisher, and former Indiana representative, has been added by scenario editor Hampton Del Ruth, to the Mack Sennett

ROBERT LEONARD AND ELLA HALL MAKING SCENES, UNDER DIFFICULTIES, FOR "THE CALL OF THE CHRISTMAS BORN"

Keystone corps of writers. Mr. Gardner has had a very wide experience, and his former success lead to the belief that he will prove a valuable man in the new position. Marta Golden, formerly with the Keystone Company, has been re-engaged and is playing opposite Fred Mace in "A Janitor's Wife's Temptation."

Rolin Starts New Comedies for Pathe

With the arrival of Hal E. Roach this week from New York, production of additional comedies for Pathé was taken up by the Rolin Film Company players. While in the East Mr. Roach made arrangements to change the name of these comedies, which in the future will be known as "The Lonesome Luke" series. Ten of the series have been completed and shipped to the Eastern laboratories, and others will be made with the same strong cast.

Police of Los Angeles and surrounding cities are up on their toes because of a bold daylight bank robbery which was recently successfully made, and the bandits escaped in an automobile when the police thought they were film actors making scenes. This week the vigilant officers swooped down on a Lasky company making scenes in the famous Busch sunken gardens in Pasadena where gambling devices of all kinds were being used, and it required showing the camera and a permit from the police department of Los Angeles before the Pasadena officers would leave the scene. More than two hundred and fifty people took part in these scenes which were for the coming Fanny Ward subject being made by Cecil B. de Mille. Supporting Miss Ward are Jack Dean and Sessue Hayakawa. In this Miss Ward is introducing a number of new gowns all of which are worn with pantalettes of a new and striking style. The actress is also wearing her very remarkable collection of diamonds.

The active work of producing the Valeska Suratt subject was taken up this week by Director George Melford. The company spent several days at San Diego filming scenes for this.

Anita King is expected to arrive home by train from New York City after her continental auto trip and will immediately be starred in a Lasky production.

Lasky Adds Cafe for Players

One of the recent departments added at the Lasky studio is that of a printing plant where all titles and sub-titles of the company will be printed together with a quantity of stationery, blanks, etc.

Plans are being made now for the establishment of a weekly newspaper of which Kenneth McGaffey, head of the publicity department, will be editor.

Another feature added at the Lasky studio is a cafe for the players, and especially Cecil B. de Mille, who is now directing day and night producing two photoplays at one time, and does not have time to leave the lot for food. The most recent subject taken up was that of featuring Edna Goodrich and the present title is "The Woman and the Law."

The Jesse L. Lasky Company has been advised that the attempt of the Philadelphia censors to eliminate several scenes of "Carmen" has been set aside by the court following the projection of the picture in the court room. This is a second victory of the Lasky Company over the Philadelphia censors who recently ordered eliminations from "The Secret Orchard."

VICTOR MOORE (Right) IN "CHIMMIE FADDEN OUT WEST" (Lasky)

An exterior set representing a big theatre, store and office building is being erected near the Keystone studio for use in a coming Arbuckle subject. This building is to be the supposed home of a big motion picture play house and will be burned before the picture is finished. During the week the subject featuring Charles Murray and "A Janitor's Wife's Temptation," in which Fred Mace does the cross-eyed act through about one hundred scenes, completed for Keystone release on the Triangle program.

William Collier arrived at the Keystone studio Sunday, and will begin work as soon as a suitable story for him can be prepared.

Sam Bernard is working on his first subject, and Weber and Fields will soon complete their second.

Ford Sterling and a band of Keystonites are making a colored picture, that is, all the players of this are colored—by the use of make-up—and many of the scenes are laid at a southern darkey's home.

"Fall of a Nation" on the Stocks

The National Drama Corporation, whose first production will be an adaptation from the Thomas Dixon novel "The Fall of a Nation," has been busy during the past week selecting players, and active filming will probably be taken up in about ten days. Many of the battle scenes will be staged at the old Universal ranch, which is now being laid out for this. Work of building the studio for this company has been taken up and the contractors have an army of workmen busy.

William H. Selig, Director Colin Campbell, Tyrone Power, Kathlyn Williams, Eugenie Besserer and Guy Oliver are at San Francisco for a week where the first scenes for a coming five-reel subject are being made.

The Kalem comedy company finished two single reel subjects this week, one being "Nearly a King," in which the Kalem pig played in the star role of a sacred pet. The other is entitled "The Guardian Angel," and will serve to introduce two new Kalem players, John McDermid and Charles Mulgro, who support Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare. Mulgro has been connected with the profession since 1857, when he appeared first as a comedian, and this week was so full of "pep" that the Director, William Beaudine, had difficulty in securing a good portrayal of a gouty man. The company will next take up an Italian story, "The Bandits of Macaroni Mountain."

Griffith Builds Coast's Greatest Set

For eight weeks a large number of workmen have been engaged on the making of a replica of scenes of Jerusalem for the Griffith production, "The Mother and the Law." There are now a number of sets on the grounds, many of which have been used, but the largest is that of a building requiring twelve scaffolds in order that the workmen may add the finish. This building has the appearance of a weather stained one of stone. It is about a thousand feet in length, and the greater portion is sixty feet with long banner poles extending fifteen feet above and the highest portion is seventy-five feet. Over all doors and windows there are decorations in keeping with the time the walls or buildings that this represents were made. It is by far the greatest set ever made on the West Coast.

The H. C. Matthews company producing for the Universal, are making the final scenes for the three-reel dramatic fairy tale "The Secret of Happiness," the theme of which is that contentment is the secret. The principal parts of this are taken by Elsie Albert, S. W. and Kathrine Griffith.

A second enthusiastic meeting toward the reorganization of a social club of photoplayers of Los Angeles was held at a local cafe during the past week and proved a very enthusiastic gathering. At this additional plans were made for a benefit to be given entitled "The Weber and Fields Jubilee," in which all the stars of filmdom now in Los Angeles will take part. Edna Goodrich and Fanny Ward have made application to appear in the chorus and Julia Dean, Jane Grey and a number of other stars will take part. It will, if present plans are carried out, be the greatest all-star entertainment given in America with the possible exception of the Lamb's Gambol or the Titanic benefit. The question of a name for the organization was discussed at length, and a committee of nine were finally selected to make a report at another dinner to be given during the coming week. The most popular names suggested were: Los Angeles Screen Club, The Panto Art, and The Photoplayers.

"Recoiling Vengeance" a Bison Drama

The U 101 Bison is filming "The Recoiling Vengeance," a drama of three reels which is an adaptation of a story by Edward Ferguson, prepared by Ruth Ann Baldwin, manager of the program department of the Universal West Coast studios, and author of "Damon and Pythias" and "The Black Box" serial. The principals of the cast for this are: Edward Hearn, Betty Schade, Rosita Marstini, Albert Miller and Caroline Meredith. The action of this constitutes the adventures of a confidential agent of the British Secret Service, accompanied by his wife, while delivering important papers to the officials in Afghanistan. They are followed by foreign spies, and foil their pursuers time after time, until the British are finally thrown into a cage of tigers. The mistreatment of one of the men by the leader of the spies results in their lives being saved.

Co-director Horace Davey is filming "Saved by a Skirt," in which Neil Burns proves to be a bride elect of two minutes' notice by donning his sister's clothes and marrying his sister's sweetheart where a nearsighted justice of the peace presides. This action was necessary that the sweetheart marry by a certain time in order to save his inheritance. The situation is explained to his sweetheart and they are secretly married. Ray Gallagher and Billie Rhodes are the other members of the cast.

The Al Christie Nestor company has finished the filming of "Wanted a Leading Woman," and for several days have been creating riots of fun in the production of a Scottish comedy entitled "Love in a Kilt." The scenes for this are laid in the mountains and lochs of Scotland, and Lee Moran, Harry Rattenberry, little Gus Alexander and Harry Lyons are all attired in the Scottish garb, while Eddie Lyons plays the role of the American, with Betty Compson as a Scottish lass. The work on this has kept the Universal studio in a turmoil of merriment, and if the picture is one half as funny on the screen at is is in the making, there will be an explosion.

Al Curtis is filming "Dad's Awful Deed," a Joker comedy in which the hard-up father attempts to induce his daughter to marry his creditor, all of which brings on a number of unusual comedy situations that Max Asher, Lillian Peacock, Victor Leroy and William Frahney stage in a laugh making manner.

First "Graft" Episode Under Way

Director Richard Stanton has corralled all the grafters or at least a very big number, and used them in scenes for the first of the fifteen episodes of the serial entitled "Graft." Number one of the series starts off with one grafter being killed, and as there are fifteen episodes and about as many grafters, it is presumed there will be enough to last through the entire series. In number one, which is of an introductory nature, Dudley Larnigan, played by William Sheerer, district attorney of New York, is put to death in a mysterious manner by his party's opponents. His son, Bruce, taken by Hobart Henley who is featured in this serial, wins a campaign to succeed his father by enrolling the women of the city to support him, and he starts his work of avenging the death of his father by cleaning out the ring of grafters who heretofore have in a measure succeeded in running the city. Jane Novak appears as the daughter of the head of an insurance trust who takes the lead in organizing the women to support Larnigan for prosecuting attorney. Glen Wright appears as the organizer of the grafters.

Lynn Reynolds, who for the past ten weeks has been directing the action of the Sydney Ayres company in one and two reel subjects, has been given a company, and during the past week made the first subject entitled "Mary Ann's Decision" of one reel, scenario for which is by Harvey Gates. The principals of this cast were Myrtle Gonzalez, Arthur Shirley and Val Paul. With the completion of this subject, Mr. Shirley leaves the Universal to become a member of the National Drama Corporation stock in the production of "The Fall of a Nation," and will be succeeded by Fred Church as leading man. In the making of the first subject many scenes were laid on Mt. Wilson, and one thrill for the film was the fall of one character off a cliff. The dummy used fell far down into a ravine where it was impossible for the company to get it, and while they were making additional scenes tourists came upon it and sent in a call for the coroner.

Otto Producing "Undine"

A company composed of Mr. and Mrs. Smalley, Marie Walcamp, Juan de la Cruz, Charles Hammond, Ethel Weber, W. H. Carr, Frank Forde, Al Zeigler and Frank Williams have gone to San Francisco to secure scenes for the five-reel subject "Hop," adapted from the Rufus Steele story entitled "Dope." Filming will be commenced with the arrival of the Japanese boat Nippon Maru, which comes into harbor at San Francisco Tuesday. The author resides at San Francisco, and the story is written around scenes in San Francisco Chinatown and the bay. Arrangements have been completed for members of the California State Health department, police, fire and National Secret Service officials to take part in this.

Director Henry Otto and company of about forty have gone to the Santa Barbara Islands for a stay of two weeks where they will make the exterior scenes for the film entitled "Undine," an adaptation from the story of the same name by De La Motte Foque, prepared by Walter Woods. Ida Schnall, one of the best known swimmers of America who holds the championship for high and fancy diving, and has been used for a model by the country's greatest artists who claim she has a perfect figure, has been specially engaged to play the name part in this. Douglass Girrard, Edna Maison, Carol Stellson, Caroline Fowler, O. C. Jackson, Josephine Rice, Thomas Delmar, Elijah Zerr and Jack Nelson constitute the cast. In addition twenty-five of the prettiest diving girls of California beaches were secured to take part in this, and accompanied the Otto organization.

The Joseph Franz Western Universal company is filming "The Voice of the Wilderness," written by Ben Cohn. This is a tale of early cattle ranch days of the West, wherein the son lives a life solely to avenge the man who was dishonest and injured his father. This party later proves to be the father of the girl the son loves, and a reconciliation is effected wherein the dishonest man makes ample payment for his misconduct. The cast for this includes William Crinley, Edythe Sterling, Sherman Bainbridge, Norbert Myles, Rex Roselli and Lule Warrenton.

Filming of the remainder of the Terrence O'Rourke series adapted from the Louis-Joseph Vance stories, has again been taken up with the star of the first six releases, Jack Kerrigan, in the name part. The direction is in charge of Otis Turner, and the scenarios are prepared by F. McGrew Willis and Walter Woods. Mr. Kerrigan has been surrounded by a notable cast of characters which includes Bertram Grassby, Maude George, Harry Carter, Lois Wilson and Eddie Polo. Number seven of the series, now being made, deals with the adventurer rescuing several from the hands of brigands in Scondi, an oriental kingdom. In the action, the queen becomes infatuated with the youth, but he leaves her for his former sweetheart.

"Colonel Steele, Master Gambler," is a character story with Murdock MacQuarrie playing the name part. This consists of fade-ins that tell the story related by a gambler of early days and his adventures in a western town. Arthur Moon and Edna Payne are prominent in the cast.

Potel Joins the "Army"

Victor Potel has joined the army, at least for the subject, "Safety First and Last." In this he is a member of the Coyote Centre Home Guards. When assigned to the duty of delivering important messages across the Mexican border, he and his companion are attacked by a Mexican army, and he succeeds in roping them all, thus proving himself a regular hero. Lillian Hamilton, Jane Bernoudy and Albert Morrow have been made members of this company, which is under the direction of Roy Clements.

A company of players from Universal City have spent the past week at Bear Lake Valley making exteriors for the Canadian Northwest story, "Bloodhounds of the North," which features Herbert Rawlinson, with Agnes Vernon playing the opposite lead. The day the company left Bear Lake Valley, one of the first snow storms of the season began, and for a time it was feared they would not be able to get to the foothills. The altitude here is approximately six thousand feet above sea level.

The Robert Leonard and Ella Hall company has spent the past week in the vicinity of Arrowhead Hot Springs on a holiday story entitled "The Call of the Christmas Born." In the making of this, they penetrated far into the foothills and secured some wonderful mountain and wilderness effects, which caused Director General Henry McRae to send the company back for several additional subjects to be made in the same vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven have returned to Universal City from New York for a stay of one year, as the result of a contract recently made with President Carl Laemmle. Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven will be remembered as stars in the five-reel Broadway feature, "The College Orphan." They will be featured in comedy dramas.

Wiltermood at Universal City

Frank M. Wiltermood, formerly scenario writer at the Universal and Balboa studios, has been added to the Universal City scenario staff. The Universal company under the direction of Rupert Julian, is spending several days in the San Gabriel canyon filming scenes for "The Gilded Youth."

"Transgression" is the title of a story dealing with life in New York art circles, written by F. McGrew Willis, and being produced by Leon Kent. The principals in this are Mina Cunard, Malcolm Blevins and Jack Livingston.

The last few scenes for the subject "Tainted Money" of five-reels featuring Hobart Bosworth, were made the latter part of last week, and this week the filming of "Two Men of Sandy Bar," a well known Bret Harte story, was taken up under the direction of Lloyd B. Carleton, who has just become a member of the Universal staff of directors. Mr. Carleton was for a number of years with the Lubin Company, and for the past six months has been directing at the Seliz Zoo. The scenario for this story was adapted by Olga Printzlau.

Calder Johnston, formerly manager of the scenario department of Universal City, is now serving in the same capacity at the American studio at Santa Barbara.

President F. M. Marion, of the Kalem Company, and Mrs. Marion, are in Los Angeles spending several days at the two studios of the company, one located at Hollywood, where the "Ham" comedies are made, and the other at Glendale, from which studio emanates the "Hazards of Helen." "The Mystery of the Grand Hotel" series, and where the "Stingaree" series is now being made.

Kalem to Continue Western Companies

The appearance of an advertisement in a trade paper offering the Hollywood and Glendale studios for sale has caused many rumors to the effect that the Western producing companies would be disposed of, but while here, Mr. Marion stated that such was not the intention of the company.

A very novel introduction has been filmed for the "Stingaree" series under the direction of James Horne at the Glendale studio which consists of Stingaree, played by True Boardman, when he becomes tired of living a clubman's life, shooting up the beautiful dining hall at a London club. With a six-shooter he breaks the fancy plates on a plate rail about the room, and as the shattered pieces fall large letters appear which spell the title of the subject—"Stingaree."

The company has just returned from the desert, where they completed the first four episodes of the series, and are now beginning on the fifth, which is entitled, "Bush Ranger at Bay." Frank Jonasson, character actor of the company, was badly injured when a number of the forty horses used in the desert scenes stampeded and ran through a small canyon in which he was enacting a prospector's scene.

An interesting fact in connection with the selection of True Boardman to play the name part in this series is the fact that this book is one of the first that Mr. Boardman remembers reading when a boy, and it has always remained a favorite with him. In his boyhood days he played Stingaree in his back yard. When he went on the stage he had visions of playing this, and ofttimes studied the stories with the view of dramatizing them. When assigned the part, Mr. Boardman was greatly pleased, and has since shown his intimate acquaintance with the story in the portrayal of the role. In this connection it may be added that this week the little son of Mr. Boardman, True Boardman, Jr., played the part of a runaway boy, a Stingaree, in the current number of the "Hazards of Helen" series entitled "The Girl Who Dared." In this the boy takes a train from his home town, and the girl operator learning of this rides a horse to catch the train, and succeeds in swinging on to the steps from the horse's back.

Enid Markey Hurt In Film

Three times in as many weeks has Enid Markey, Ince leading woman, met with mishap. Her latest accident occurred, this week, while she was was enacting another big scene with Frank Keenan and a company of 100 players in the current Ince-Triangle feature in which Keenan is to be starred. Miss Markey is playing the part of a military commander's daughter who barely escapes suffering ignominies at the hands of a despot who covets her. She seeks shelter in a convent, where, with the nuns and other refugees, she attempts to prevent the entrance of the leader and his mob. The men succeed in breaking in, however, and it was during the enactment of this thrilling scene that Miss Markey was injured. As the barbarians rushed passed the door, Miss Merkey was carried off her feet and thrown to the ground. Before she could arise, a half dozen men had trampled upon her during the excitement. Prostrate, she was carried to her dressing room and there revived. She was taken home for a two-day rest.

HELEN WARE IN A STRIKING POSE FROM "CROSS-CURRENTS" (Fine Arts—Triangle)

Work was commenced this week on the erection of an immense set on the first completed stage at the new Ince Culver City studios. This when completed will depict the New York Stock Exchange, and will be used for many of the biggest and most important scenes of the current production in which H. B. Warner will be starred.

In order that, in future, he will not be compelled to cast about for a suitable place in which to make a final inspection of his productions, Thomas H. Ince this week signed a lease which gives him the exclusive right to the Brooks theatre, sometimes known as the Mozart, in Los Angeles. The theatre will be used each week for the showing of the Ince-Triangle features before they are shipped to New York for distribution. These exhibitions will not be public, but will be viewed only by Ince himself, and his staff of assistants. The actual work of cutting and assembling of the Ince films is done in the Inceville factory, but at the studio there are no adequate facilities for proecting the pictures with the full and original musical accompaniment, which has proven such a tremendously valuable asset of the Triangle plays. Hereafter, a twenty piece orchestra will render the especially written music.

Jackie Saunders as "Ugly Duckling"

At the Horkheimer Balboa studio a feature picture entitled "The Ugliest Girl in The World," is being made, and in this Jackie Saunders will be featured in the name part. It is understood that it will be necessary for Miss Saunders to disguise herself for this part, but in the end the make-up may be removed as the duckling becomes the most beautiful bird.

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the Balboa company, has been successful in buying a million one cent green postage stamps used during the expositions here, which bear the picture of Balboa, discoverer of the Pacific Ocean, after whom the company is named. Since these stamps were first issued, the Balboa company has been using them exclusively, and with this supply will be able to do so for many moons. In this way Mr. E. D. Horkheimer successfully picked off a nice bit of advertising unintended by Uncle Sam. At the close of the expositions all Balboa stamps will be withdrawn from sale in various parts of the country to be sold to the Balboa company at Long Beach.

Tom Chatterton, playing opposite Directress Cleo Madison in the five part subject, "Live and Let Live,"in staging a too realistic scene lost two teeth. The dentist's bill was seventy-five dollars, but Director Henry McRae believes they got a bargain in the realistic scene which was presented.

Sturgeon Starts New Blue Ribbon

The Blue Ribbon feature, "God's Country and the Woman," to be produced by director R. S. Sturgeon, will be taken up shortly, and Nell Shipman has been engaged to play the name part. Opposite her will be

Wm. Duncan, featured in "The Chalice of Courage" and other Vitagraph features, who has spent considerable time in Alaska.

In the filming of "The Squared Account," a one-reel subject just finished under the direction of William Wolbert at the Vitagraph studio, with a cast of George Kunkel, Jack Mower, and others, Otto Lederer was injured to the extent of a bone in his arm being fractured. He completed the picture notwithstanding the injury. Director Wolbert is now making a three-reel subject entitled "Paloma," written by Daisy Eloise Smith. George Stanley has been cast to play the part of the old Spaniard in this.

The third Vitagraph company under the direction of Dave Smith, is now filming "The Return of Eli Judson," with a cast composed of George Holt, Jack Wetherby, George Kunkel and Corrine Griffith.

NEWS OF THE WEEK IN AND ABOUT SAN DIEGO

San Diego, Cal., Oct. 30.

One of the Lubin companies, under direction of Edward Sloman, with B. C. Hayward at the camera, has been busy on a three-reeler written by Julian Lamothe, entitled "The Bond Within," with L. C. Shumway, George Rauth, Adda Gleason and Adelaide Bronti in the cast. In a portion of the scenes some of the old adobe ruins and houses in Old Town, as the first settlement of San Diego is known, were utilized. There was also a place for quite a group of young Mexican boys. The story is built around the experiences of Mexican refugees.

Melvin Mayo has been directing two one-reel pictures, both written by Julian Lamothe. One of them was "The Dusty Gentleman," with Ronald Bradbury playing the lead, Francelia Billington, the poor relation, Helen Wolcott, the proud daughter, Jay Morley from the city, in the heavy, and William J. Spencer as the father. In the play a trick effect was worked with the camera, operated by D. L. Davis, which will be found to be a new thing in dissolving scenes.

The other play directed by Mr. Mayo and also filmed by Mr. Davis, was "The Little Sister of the Poor," with Miss Billington as Sister Teresa, Miss Wolcott as La Belle Corinne, a woman with a past; Mr. Bradbury in the lead as Bert Wilson; Jay Morley as Duval, an admirer of La Belle. It is a story of contrast, of good and evil, of a nun and a woman of the world. The California building at the exposition was used in a portion of the filming, the handsome entrance being utilized as a church exterior.

Jay Morley has severed his connection with the Lubin company and has returned to Los Angeles.

The aeroplane which recently fell, killing Lieut. W. R. Taliaferro, attached to the North Island Aviation School of the First Aero Corps of the United States Army, had been used a few days before by the Lubin company in ill strating a sandstorm on the desert. The scene was set on the aviation field and the aeroplane was held fast while the motor was run at full speed, thus stirring up a real sand-storm over the entire scenery of the company.

The Dudley Motion Picture Company is now at work at its studio in National City, and has been busy with some of Peter B. Kyne's stories, the first filmed being "The Land Just Over Yonder." The other day Manager Leonard Coop was at work on a play involving a labor problem, and for one of the scenes he needed a large number of old, dirty overalls. In order to get these he went among a gang of laborers and offered to give them new pairs for old, and it was sometime before he could make them believe he was not insane.

Carlos Lescale is putting on at the Gaiety theatre ten thousand feet of film depicting scenes in Mexico in the past few months.

On Sunday, the 31st inst., La Jolla, a pleasure resort and suburb of this city, will observe Lubin Day, with the members of the Lubin company at Coronado as the guests of honor. A special train will be used.

Vitagraph Employees Dance All Night in 2nd Ball

Annual Event, Held to Raise Money for Sick Benefit and Hospital Fund, Brings Out 1,000 at McLaughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay

MOST recent of the Vitagraph Company of America's pleasant social affairs was the second Annual Benefit Ball of the Vitagraph employees, held at McLaughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn, New York, Wednesday evening, October 27.

To quote from the introduction of the souvenir program, "The Vitagraph employees have created for themselves a sick benefit and hospital fund which is largely dependent on this annual affair,"—"we sincerely thank you for your kind aid and hope that the second annual benefit ball will linger in your happiest memories."

That is the reason for the ball and there, too, is its anticipated effect on some ten hundred persons who made merry in the large Casino. Dancing was as usual the main event, if not the only event of the evening outside of a few songs rendered by the Vitagraph quartette, comprised of Donald McBride, Edward Dunn, Frank Brule and John Mason.

THE LATEST PORTRAIT OF MARY MILES MINTER (Metro)

The songs were greeted enthusiastically, but strange to tell, the four songbirds absolutely refused to give an encore. So that was the last of the singing until later in the evening Hughie Mack took it upon himself to burst into limpid song.

Of cups there were none, but this did nothing to lessen the ardor of the dancers. Even Sam Trigger was seen tripping the light fantastic, while Thomas Howard, the aggressive secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York, honored and was honored by many partners.

Lasky Obtains Rights to All Works of Mark Twain

Negotiations with Harper Brothers and President of Mark Twain Company Terminated Successfully by Goldfish—Prepare to Send Company Down Mississippi for Locations

ANNOUNCEMENT that all the works of the late Samuel Langhorne Clemens (Mark Twain) had been obtained for motion pictures has been made by Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Mr. Goldfish said that Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Lasky company, would personally supervise the picturization of these great pieces of American literature.

"Extraordinary as have been the efforts of the Lasky Feature Play Company in the past to produce photoplays of the very highest and most artistic type," said Mr. Goldfish in speaking of the Mark Twain pictures, "I wish to state without qualification that the Lasky company will stop at nothing to make the Twain picturizations worthy of their subjects.

"For several years motion picture manufacturers have vied with each other in flattering bids and offers for the Mark Twain stories. That the Lasky company now is in a position to announce that it holds exclusive rights to these great works is a matter in which we all take special pride."

Negotiations for these works had been carried on between Mr. Goldfish and representatives of the Mark Twain Company, a corporation which is handling the works of the late humorist, and Harper & Brothers, the publishers, for some months. Mr. E. E. Loomis, a vice-president of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, is president of the Mark Twain Company.

The picturization rights include not only the United States, where the pictures will be shown in theatres which play the Paramount program, but will include the world rights as well.

Among the best-known stories by Mark Twain which readily lend themselves to expert picturization form are "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven," "Following the Equator," "Innocents Abroad," "Pudd'nhead Wilson," "Roughin' It," "Tom Sawyer Abroad," "Tom Sawyer, Detective," "The Jumping Frog" and scores of shorter and well-known stories which will form the basis of excellent photoplay scenarios.

The scenes of "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn" are laid on and along the Mississippi River, and it is stated by the Lasky company that a big company of players, photographers and staff will go right to the ground for the making of these pictures. This will give the opportunity to translate to the film America as the late Mark Twain knew it and wrote about it. Scenes on the river, the old-style river boat and the return to life of the old-time river pilot will be features of these picturizations.

Uncle Sam Calls Aid of Films to Show Work in West

Department of Interior, as Part of Reclamation Service, Takes 40,000 Feet of Scenery for Public to See Extent of Beauty in Our National Parks

AS part of the extensive reclamation work at present being carried on by the United States Department of the Interior, approximately forty thousand feet of film have been taken, showing the remarkable scenic beauty of the large national parks lying within the confines of the United States.

The six largest of the parks in the west, including Yellowstone and the Rocky Mountain reserve, are comparatively unknown to the greater part of the population of the country. Stephen T. Mather, assistant to Secretary Lane of the Interior Department, has realized this deplorable lack of topographical knowledge on the part of the majority of the populace, and consequently has made it possible for the picture to be taken.

Under the active direction of Herford T. Cowling, chief photographer of the U. S. Reclamation Service, the pictures have been procured and assembled. The reels show almost unknown scenery of the United States. All the parks offer unusual opportunities for the compilation of a scenic of unlimited educational value. Mr. Cowling believes that the pictures will meet with widespread interest as he has visited points of heretofore unpictured interest to the average person throughout the country.

Mr. Cowling was recently in New York negotiating with the heads of several prominent film distributing concerns to ascertain which would be the most suitable medium for the distribution of the pictures.

As yet no definite announcement has been made, either by Mr. Cowling or by any of the companies with which he has been in conference, but in a short time it is to be expected that a large distributing organization will close contracts with the government, whereby they will receive the rights to handle the pictures.

In this way it is Mr. Mather's intention to stimulate the interest of the American public in the realization of the grandeur of the scenery contained in their own country. It is hoped that, influenced by the pictures, travelers will desire to see America first instead of neglecting this country for Europe.

As American scenics are lamentably scarce, there is small doubt that great success will meet with Mr. Mather's plan. Mr. Cowling, a photographer of prominence, believes that the films will make attractive fillers for a picture program, as they are equally as beautiful, well photo- European scenic.

"German Side of the War" Makes Record Run

Chicago "Tribune" Subject, Playing to Daily Attendance of 8,555, with Weekly Receipts Amounting to $14,972, at Forty-fourth Street Theatre, Promises Harvest for Exhibitors

THE success of the "German Side of the War," the Chicago Tribune pictures, offered by the Public Service Film Company, 1482 Broadway, New York, has resulted in numerous applications for booking throughout the country.

These pictures ran to record-breaking business at the Forty-fourth street theatre, New York City, and caused favorable comment among patrons of the theatre. As a result of their reception the company thought it advisable to book them in the Manhattan Opera House, to accommodate the large crowds anxious to view these unusual subjects.

Engagements followed at other metropolitan theatres, playing to capacity. The demand for further showing became so persistent that the Shuberts booked the pictures for a return engagement at the Forty-fourth street house.

The pictures, regardless of the apparently biased title, make a strong appeal to all picture-goers who like action and thrill. The films bring to the spectator in the most vivid manner the German battlefields.

The run in the Forty-fourth street theatre, New York, made its record with a daily attendance of 8,555, while the receipts for the week amounted to a total of $14,972.

With these figures as a criterion, exhibitors anywhere may feel sure of booking the "German Side of the War" with chances of its being one of the biggest moneymakers coming to their theatres in a long time.

For time and terms in the states of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, apply to the Public Service Film Company, 1482 Broadway, New York.

BRYANT WASHBURN SPEAKS TO NINE DIFFERENT AUDIENCES IN ILLINOIS

Bryant Washburn, Essanay leading man, was the guest of honor at M. H. Rubens' Princess theatre in Joliet, Ill., recently and entertained 5,000 persons who packed the theatre to see the photoplay here in real life.

Mr. Washburn spoke to nine different audiences and a huge portrait of Mr. Washburn was placed in front of the Princess theatre, attracting hundreds of passersby.

Paramount Ready-to-Serve Publicity for Dailies

Advertising Department Concocts Five Column Layout Stories, Seasoned to All News Tastes and, Like Canned Soup, Meant for Immediate Use by Editors Everywhere

SUPPLEMENTING the publicity issued in connection with its advertising campaign, the Paramount Pictures Corporation has succeeded in building up a news service of its own without employing the services of a news agency. It furnishes special stories of news value to the many papers with which it is in close touch. "Paramount Press" is a clip sheet, which deals with the news of all the companies in the Paramount organization, and gives to photoplay editors material written as they themselves would want it sent to them.

There are, of course, many occasions on which a story is too long for publication in this syndicate service, but of such distinct value that it must be got to the newspapers at the earliest possible moment.

An example of the kind of special material which this company is sending out is "My Experiences as a Red Cross Nurse in War Swept Belgium," by Edna Goodrich. A five column layout of three photographs, one of the American hospital at Neuilly, another of the Red Cross dogs in action, and in the center one of Edna Goodrich, long known as one of the most beautiful women on the American stage, as the Allied soldiers in Belgium trenches saw her, forms the illustration.

At the outbreak of the war Miss Goodrich volunteered for service as a Red Cross nurse, and after a year in the base hospitals at the front, she returned to this country. In her article she tells her reasons for her return to appear in Paramount pictures, produced by the Lasky Feature Play Company. It is an interesting and well written story. Such papers as the Dayton Herald, Seattle Post, Denver Times, Milwaukee Leader, Detroit Free Press, Pittsburgh Post, Philadelphia Ledger, Baltimore American, Omaha World-Herald, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Chicago Daily News and the Dallas Times-Herald, are numbered among those in the large syndicate which have requested it.

The chief value of the article is that it is not, strictly speaking, publicity, but a real newspaper feature. It is written in the paper style, and presented in a way that will appeal to the editor. It does not pound the names "Paramount" or "Lasky" in such a way as to insure its landing in the waste-paper basket. In a carefully worded and logical editor's note, it is explained who Miss Goodrich is, and in a few words the interest is whetted as to what she has to say and her identity, as a famous actress about to make her photoplay debut.

It is this sort of thing that will do a great deal of good toward making friends for motion pictures in the newspaper offices and toward aiding the exhibitor in getting really valuable publicity.

JULIUS STEGER ADDED TO METRO LIST OF STARS

Julius Steger, the stage star, who recently appeared in the photoplay versions of "The Fifth Commandment" and "The Master of the House," is the latest addition to the long list of stars under the Metro banner.

Mr. Steger has signed a contract with the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., to appear exclusively on the Metro program. His first appearance will be in the stellar role in "The Blindness of Love," a comedy drama by Ruth Comfort Mitchell. It will be ready for release on the Metro program in December.

Mr. Steger was born in Vienna, and came to New York when a youth. He first attracted attention on the stage as the leading support of Marie Tempest. Since he has created the leading roles in numerous musical productions on Broadway. His last appearance in light opera was in Victor Herbert's "It Happened in Nordland," with Lew Fields. Soon afterward he appeared in vaudeville as a serious actor, presenting "The Fifth Commandment."

Franklin Is Latest to Select Quaker City for Films

First Release, Ready in Two Weeks, Will Feature May Ward, Known as Dresden Doll of Vaudeville, Directed by Joseph Adelmann, Who Also Wrote the Scenario

Philadelphia, Nov. 1

THE latest producing company to choose the Quaker City as the scene of its activities is the Franklin Film Manufacturing Company. Although just organized, this company is already busily at work on its first picture.

Heading the company as president is F. L. Bernstein, formerly with the Continental Photo Play Producing Corporation. The Franklin is financed by well-known Philadelphians, and is reported to be capitalized at $200,000.

The studios of the Liberty plant at 20 East Herman street, Germantown, have been leased by the new organization, which also has its offices at present in the same building.

The first release of the Franklin company will be ready in about two weeks. This is an original scenario from the pen of the theatrical writer and director, Joseph Adelmann.

Mr. Adelmann is the director for this picture, which promises many novel effects. The exterior scenes have been taken at the farm of the Liberty and work will start next week at the studio on the interiors. May Ward, long known as the Dresden Doll of vaudeville and who made her screen debut in a "Continental Girl," will be the lead in this picture, which its author has called "The Wild Rose."

The story deals with the adventures of a little country girl who leaves the solitude of the farm for the boarding school and later for the big city where many exciting things happen to her before the denoument is reached.

"Misleading Lady's" Demure Appeal for Popularity

January Will Find Essanay's Version of Stage Success, Free From All Guile, Making Effort to Gain Friends for V-L-S-E by Artless Display of Dramatic Charms

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces for January release on the V-L-S-E program, one of the most successful plays of the speaking stage in recent years, "The Misleading Lady," by Charles Goddard.

Henry B. Walthall will take the leading role which was portrayed on the stage by Lewis Stone. Edna Mayo will take the leading feminine role, playing opposite Mr. Walthall.

This play is replete with thrilling incidents, such as the kidnapping of a society girl by the wealthy Western mine owner, after she had led him to propose as a bet at a house party, making him the butt of the joke. Their experiences in the rough north country where he has abducted her, and where she finally learns to love him, are intense in interest.

Essanay also will release a special five act feature in December, "A Daughter of the City," taken from the play by H. S. Sheldon. This is a thrilling story of mystery and romance with John Junior, the well-known stage star and Marguerite Clayton in the leading roles. The play is directed by E. H. Calvert, who also plays a prominent part.

The regular V-L-S-E December release is "The Alster Case," written by Rufus Gillmore, author of "The Opal Pin" and numerous other detective novels.

MUTUAL MODEL GOES ON TOUR IN VAUDEVILLE

Betty Brown, who displays the fashionable gowns shown in the Mutual Weekly, achieved such success on the screen that she has been engaged for a fashion show, which has just gone on tour in vaudeville. This will not interfere with her contract to wear the latest creations before the Mutual camera.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

THE annual meeting of the Screen Club was held Saturday night, October 30. Club matters and impending changes in membership were discussed at length.

King Baggot, chairman of the ball committee, made the keynote speech of the evening. He also announced that the annual ball will be held Saturday evening, November 20, in the gold room of the Hotel Astor. It is no exaggeration to say that all indications are that this will be the most successful ball in the history of the Screen Club.

The reports of the various committees were read and heartily approved. They showed the Screen Club to be in a flourishing condition. The official installation of the new officers took place. They are:

President, William Quirk; first vice-president, Harry Meyers; second vice-president, Adam Kessel; third vice-president, Robert Edeson; recording secretary, Harry Ennis; corresponding secretary, Robert E. Welsh; treasurer, John N. Race; board of governors, C. A. Willat, Hopp Hadley, George De Carlton and Arthur Leslie. The members of the board of governors which hold over from last year are King Baggot, Frank Powell, Jule Burnstein and Jake Gerhardt.

Tribute was paid each of the outgoing officers in the way of a rising vote of thanks for each one.

All hail Geraldine Farrar's "Carmen." Sunday she took New York by storm as thoroughly as she did Boston some weeks ago.

Reports from Philadelphia say that Tony Kelly, scenario writer extraordinary, has a new automobile, but that it doesn't always work.

(By special wire—just as we go to press.)

The friends of Peter Schmid, better known as the "Terrible Teuton" or the "Celery Sheriff," are very much grieved to learn that he was defeated in his home town of Grantwood, N. J., by a vote of 9 to 3. Peter would have received another vote, but the thirteenth voter of the town had rheumatism and could not get to the polls.

Frank Kugler, cameraman par excellence, is going in for himself. With a company headed by E. K. Lincoln he is heading for the Berkshires to make a picture. His outline of the story shows that it will be a remarkably gripping production.

The day is coming when the intelligent cameraman will be a far bigger feature than he is now in the production end. Mr. Kugler knows the camera thoroughly. In addition he knows dramatic value and motion picture technique. He is blazing the trail for others.

David Miles, one of the real pioneers, died suddenly last Friday. "Dave," as everyone knew him, started as an actor many years ago. For several years he had been a producer, and headed his own company till he sold out recently. He was one of the best loved and respected men in the industry. At its annual meeting on Saturday the Screen Club passed a memorial resolution.

Mary Anderson is shedding her glory over Western Vitagraph. The lucky West! But even so, Mother and Beatrice are still in the equally lucky East. Incidentally, they furnished two charming reasons why we so enjoyed the Vitagraph ball.

Tom Howard was also very much in evidence, garnering stars for the Cinema ball in the Bronx.

Lynde Denig was recently up-state stumping against censorship. Lynde is reticent as to what took place in a certain theatre situated somewhere on the Fishkill plains. Evidently the effect was so weakening that he was obliged to miss Monday morning's World Film feature.

Helen Cady, a dancer of Milwaukee, and Edwin F. Loue, Jr., were married recently while Mr. Loue was arranging the business end of a visit of Essanay players from Milwaukee to Chicago to make an anti-tuberculosis picture.

Nat Rothstein, the Universal advertising man, is going to build a bungalow in Asbury Park, and be a bungaloafer. He will dope out his ads while commuting. He got the inspiration on his recent trip to Los Angeles, where bungalows multiply as freely as fords.

H. H. Van Loan, the boy press agent, has been appointed manager of the Universal publicity department. Henry is a busy and able little worker. Just to show the lengths to which he will go it will be recalled that he got married on shipboard during the fleet review last summer.

Henry pushed the publicity campaigns for the Universal Beauty contest, the Pavlowa pictures, the opening of Universal City, the "Graft" serial and the Bernhardt pictures. He is now writing a series of six articles called "Handlin' the Beauts," based on his trip to the coast as chaperone of the winners of the Universal beauty contest. When this is done he will start a "Who is the handsomest man in America?" stunt. Line forms on the left.

The Strand Roof Garden committee will have as their guests of honor Friday afternoon, November 5, the little boys and girls of the moving pictures. Among the guests will be Blanche Sweet, Lasky; Betty Peterson, Kalem; Harriet Mantel, Universal; Richard Ross, Fox; Arthur Oppenheim, Famous Players; Dorothy Camden, Solax; Audrey Berry, Vitagraph; Helen and Bobbie Connelly, Vitagraph; Violet de Bicarri, Reliance; Charles Crumpton, Universal; Andy Clark, Edison; Edna May Hamel, Edison; Frank Longacre, Kinemacolor; Dick Gray, Equitable; Marion and Madeline Fairbanks, Thanhouser.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

Edgar Lewis, director, and his band of Lubin players, are back from the Grand Canyon, where they were making scenes for "The Great Divide." The players include House Peters and Warner P. Richmond.

C. O. Baumann, of the New York Motion Corporation, is on the Pacific coast, visiting the Inceville studios.

Phil Klein, one of the factors in the old All Star Company, arrived from England Monday.

Jim Slevin, the man who photographed Pope Pius X, will said for Europe soon to get moving pictures of the new Pope, war pictures and some travelog pictures for a prominent lecturer.

CYRIL MAUDE ANXIOUS TO LEARN HOW PUBLIC RECEIVES HIS STAGE AND SCREEN APPEARANCE

Cyril Maude, whose "Grumpy" is now touring the country's best theatres, has been doing some quick stepping. With half a day to train time, which was to carry him out of New York, he completed his last scene with Director Harley Knoles, of "The Antique Dealer."

Cyril Maude is now trying to figure whether his stage appearance in "Grumpy" or his screen appearance in "The Antique Dealer" will make him the more popular and advance his reputation more.

FOX "CARMEN" PLAYERS APPEAR IN PERSON AT NEWARK THEATRE

A capacity house greeted the Monday night opening of the William Fox feature, "Carmen," starring Theda Bara, at the Paramount Theatre, Newark, N. J.

Miss Bara appeared in person at the theatre Monday night and was warmly received. She made a brief speech of thanks.

ELSIE MACLEOD

Raoul A. Walsh, director of the Fox "Carmen," was also present.

Elsie McLeod, who played Michaela, appeared at one of the evening performances later in the week. She was welcomed with cordiality. Miss MacLeod, who has attracted attention in ingenue roles, spoke briefly of some of the experiences of her successful photoplay career.

Other principals of the "Carmen" cast were present each evening during the week's showing of the film.

H. COOPER CLIFF IN FORTHCOMING FOX PRODUCTION

H. Cooper Cliffe, a well-known dramatic actor, has joined the William Fox forces and will be seen in a forthcoming Fox production under the direction of Frederick A. Thomson. Mr. Cliffe will be remembered as "Nobody" in the Broadway stage presentation of "Every Woman," in which role he received commendation from New York critics.

He began his career in grand opera, but gave that up to play juvenile roles with Henry Irving at the Lyceum Theatre, London. He supported Irving for three years and later was Ellen Terry's leading man for two seasons. Mr. Cliffe was seen in important roles at the old Drury Lane for three years, afterwards playing Shylock, Richard the III, Cardinal Wolsey, Benedick, Dante and other roles.

NEW BEDFORD THEATRE MANAGER GIVES A CLAMBAKE

On Sunday, October 25, at New Bedford, Mass., Walter Preston, manager of the New Bedford theatre, gave a clambake to a number of his personal and business friends.

As a slight evidence of their appreciation they presented Mr. Preston with a 14-karat gold headed cane appropriately inscribed.

Among those present, besides his fellow-townsmen, were Glover Ware, of Beverly, Mass.; Harry Farron, of Boston; John McCullough, fifth grandson of the celebrated tragedian; Fred Marsdon, of Boston; Will Smith and F. W. Swett, of Nicholas Power Company, and F. W. Atwater, of the Precision Machine Company; George Balsdon, of V-L-S-E Boston branch, and Sam Spedon, of the Vitagraph Company.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL WITH MOROSCO FOR FILMING OF BEST SELLER

Closely following Oliver Morosco's announcements effecting his engagement for motion pictures of Anna Held and Constance Collier, that producer has added Florence Rockwell, a favorite of the drama, to his list.

The name of Florence Rockwell is familiarly known to patrons of the drama all over the country and her possibilities as a screen actress can readily be appreciated by the many thousands who have seen her. Under the management of various big producers in the theatrical field, Miss Rockwell has won just praise from critics and public alike.

Miss Rockwell is already at work at the Morosco studios in Los Angeles where she is starring in a film adaptation of "He Fell in Love With His Wife," which scored as one of this country's best sellers.

On account of a hitch at the eleventh hour and in order to get the scenario in readiness for Miss Rockwell, Mr. Morosco was compelled to prepare this himself in New York City and wire the entire script to the studios in Los Angeles, where the star and the entire company were waiting to start work. This telegram is said to be the longest ever sent over the Western Union wires and incurred an expense of nearly $400.

VINNIE BURNS CHANGES NAME; IT'S JUNE DAYE NOW

With the release of the Lubin four part drama, "Heartaches," during the week of November 29, there will appear in the character of Kate Merry the winsome little country miss, a new name in photo-plays, and, although photo-play fans will recognize in the features of this actress Vinnie

JUNE DAYE

Burns, they, too, will be forcefully impressed with the new name which Miss Burns has adopted.

Recently there was released a Lubin picture, "The Desert Honeymoon," in which Miss Burns appeared in the leading role. Since its day of release there has been a constant stream of letters in congratulation to her. Among these letters came one from a young girl admirer of Philadelphia, who requested an interview. Miss Burns agreed. The writer of the letter came with her committee of fifty young Philadelphia girls, and with an apt speech they presented to their idol a magnificent bunch of fifty American Beauty roses, bearing a card which read: "To Our Favorite, June Daye."

Her visitors told her that it was the name which they and their friends had selected.

Impressed with the symphony of the two names, Miss Burns agreed, and now she wants the rest of her friends of the country to know that, beginning with her appearance as Kate Merry in "Heartaches," released some time during the week of November 29, she will be known as June Daye.

PARKER ARRANGES FOR RELEASES THROUGH KRITERION

Metro Seeks, With Success, Press Help in Canada

Herbert Lubin Begins Missionary Campaign for Consistent Newspaper Publicity, Practically Undreamed of Before, Now Bearing Fruit in the Lead Taken by the Most Influential Paper in the Dominion, the Montreal Gazette, Which Devotes a Page to Film News

HERBERT LUBIN, managing director of Metro Pictures, Limited, the Canadian distributors of the Metro program, who has figured actively in Canadian film affairs, has brought this brand of features into the market across the border by live methods. Already he has organized a publicity campaign of nation-wide character, and has persuaded practically every influential newspaper in the larger cities that the motion picture possesses advertising and circulation possibilities hitherto undreamed of by them. As a result these newspapers have inaugurated motion picture departments in their pages.

Mr. Lubin was in town at the Hotel Knickerbocker early this week, and was enthusiastic over the results which his missionary work have already obtained.

"As you probably know," he said, "things have been pretty dull in Canada in the film business since the war began. Conditions were very bad even before. Single and at the most two-day runs were the rule for even the best features. This was the case even in the finest houses in Toronto and Montreal, to say nothing of other sections. Film rentals were low—ridiculously so. The result was that exhibitors were getting the poorest kind of service.

"Such a thing as consistent newspaper publicity was practically unknown. It was in direct opposition to every established precedent of the newspapers and the motion picture trade. Many of the biggest newspapers—those with the largest following—didn't even have a motion picture department.

Chance for Missionary Work

"It struck me as soon as I had studied the field that here was an opportunity for some real missionary work, which would be good for Metro as well as every other producer in the industry.

"The demand for good pictures must come direct from the public and the only way to create it effectively and consistently is through the medium of the press. Of course, the problem was to convince the newspaper editors and managers that giving space to motion picture news and events of interest would be profitable to them.

"This was one of the first things I set about doing, and with Edwin Bower Hesser, head of the Canadian Metro's publicity staff, I obtained a success that was distinctly gratifying. The Montreal Gazette, for instance, which is without doubt the most influential paper in eastern Canada, had never printed a line about pictures until we made it plain to the management that there lay big possibilities for circulation and advertising advantages in so doing. Now it devotes a whole page to films.

"Then I told my plan to the management of the Imperial theatre, Montreal, and the Strand theatre, Toronto. They saw its possibilities quickly and made yearly contracts for Metro service, agreeing to increase their scale of prices and change their previous policy of one-day runs, with an occasional two-day special, to a consistent showing of three days for each Metro release.

"The Imperial, for instance, just doubled its prices and the public came stronger than ever. Publicity of the persistent kind did it. When Valli Valli appeared in person, and "The Woman Pays," in which she was starred was shown, the first night broke all records for attendance held by any theatre, of any kind for any production, either stage or picture, ever made in Montreal.

Persistent Publicity Necessary

"When I set out to convince the Canadian exhibitors that persistent publicity was the solution of most of their troubles, they laughed at me at first. They told me I was crazy. It took a great deal of persuasion to make plain to them that the money spent to obtain publicity was certain to bring commensurate returns. But in every case, instead of plunging headlong on the sure road to ruin, which some of them seemed to believe I was leading them into, they have made more money than they ever believed possible under present conditions.

"The best proof of what I'm telling you is the fact that Metro is costing about three times as much as any other film the Canadian exhibitor has ever bought. They are paying it because it is bringing them big results. In many theatres admissions have doubled in number as well as price since they began to book Metro pictures.

"Nevertheless the price is not arbitrary, but is fixed according to the size of a town and local conditions, after careful investigation.

"In practically every instance, of course, the theatre's charge for admission is advanced on the nights when Metro is featured.

"But the exhibitor is backed up in a way he never was before, in respect to publicity. The newspapers, the billboards and a $5,000 in gold prize contest we are now conducting, for popular opinions on Metro, and a scenario to be produced in Canada are all big factors in bringing regular business to the Metro exhibitor's door.

"That tells the whole story. We are making the exhibitor help himself. He has to show attractive, clean paper, because that is the only kind we supply. He can't help keeping his theatre before the public because we do it thoroughly for him."

"Black Crook" Was First Meant for Straight Tragedy

Old-Time Musical Comedy, Basis of a Kalem, Was Changed from Original Form by Frantic Manager with Ballet Under Contract and Insisting Upon Salary, Work or No Work

WHEN "The Black Crook" is released by the Kalem company in the near future the complete story of this famous extravaganza will be told for the first time.

This is on the authority of E. P. Sullivan, who has been entrusted with the title role in the picture version following over five hundred performances in this part on the stage.

"The Black Crook" was the first musical comedy, declared Mr. Sullivan recently at the Kalem studio while waiting for a scene to be taken. He added that musical comedy really was the result of an accident.

"Few people are aware of the fact that 'The Black Crook' was written to be a tragedy," continued the actor, "but, nevertheless that is a fact. When the rehearsals for the play were taking place it was decided to change it to a musical production but this decision came as the result of an accident.

"The manager who was arranging to produce the play also had under his management at the time a Russian ballet. The public didn't take kindly to the ballet in their vehicle and as the manager had no other play available he decided that there was nothing to do but to add their singing and dancing to 'The Black Crook.' He had an iron clad contract and so had to use the ballet.

The addition of the ballet made the original version of the piece entirely too long so it was slashed here and there with the result that the complete story has never been told.

"In the picture, however, Director Bob Vignola has carried out the complete story so those who witnessed the stage version will now have an opportunity of seeing just what the original 'Black Crook' was like. Of course a ballet and chorus have become so identified with the story that it would seem incomplete without them so they have been retained, but this certainly is the most complete story of the play that has been presented."

Widespread interest has been manifested in the production since it was first announced several weeks ago and it actually has started a series of reminscences by people in all sections of the country regarding the various productions they have witnessed.

A number of inquiries have been received at the Kalem offices asking when the picture will be released. This has not been definitely decided, however, at the present time.

PAUL GILMORE IN THOMAS SUBJECT FOR RAVER FILM

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, has secured the services of Paul Gilmore, who is to interpret the ministerial character of Reverend Clifton Bradford in the forthcoming initial Augustus Thomas offering by the Raver Film Corporation, "The Other Girl."

PAUL GILMORE

Broadway saw Gilmore during the runs of "At Yale," "Captain Debonnaire," "The Boys of Company B," "Mistress Nell," in which he appeared in support of Henrietta Crosman and in a revival of "The Three Musketeers." In all these productions he toured throughout the United States.

The South and Southwest know him best, for in this territory he toured at the head of his own companies in such successes as "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," "King Charles," "The Tyranny of Tears," "The Call of the North," "The Havoc," and the aforesaid "At Yale," "Boys of Company B" and "Captain Debonnaire."

"PENNINGTON" OPENS WURLITZER THEATRE, NEW YORK

The Wurlitzer theatre, 120 West Forty-first street, one of the most novel institutions in New York City, was formally opened on Thursday, October 28, when the five-part feature, "Pennington's Choice," the Quality-Metro production in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred, was shown to the New York critics and a party of guests invited by Metro officials.

The theatre occupies the entire ground floor of the Wurlitzer building which was recently completed. It is conveniently located, just a few steps off Broadway in West Forty-first street.

The theatre was primarily constructed to demonstrate the Wurlitzer organ and other musical instruments, but it will be rented to film companies who desire to give private presentations of their motion pictures. The interior decoration of the theatre is in Egyptian. There are one hundred and fifty comfortable chairs attractively arranged with ample space on either side. The place is carpeted and rich purple velvet hangings give the whole a pleasing effect. The walls and pillars are covered with gold leaf and artistically decorated with a hand-painted design. There are two large motion picture theatre organs arranged along one wall, and every known modern appliance and equipment is found in the place.

Ivan Abramson, the president of the Ivan Film Productions, is also author and director of "The Concealed Truth." He is the only producer in the market today that writes his own dramatic stories, directs and produces same. His last five reel feature, "A Mother's Confession," has proven a strong box office attraction. The feature will be released November 10.

COMPLETE VILLAGE FOR "TEMPERANCE TOWN"

A complete village is in course of construction at the Chicago studio yard of the Selig company for Hoyt's "A Temperance Town," which is in course of production with Otis Harlan as the star.

The town is typically American and is completed even to the general store. Grace Darmond and James Bradbury, the veteran comedian, who recently joined the Selig forces, will be prominent in Mr. Harlan's support.

W. N. SELIG PHOTOED UNAWARES FOR PICTURE PLAY

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, will appear in one of the Selig picture plays for probably the first time in his life.

Mr. Selig was sitting on a circus seat at the Selig zoo, talking to a friend. A circus picture was in the course of making. The placed filled up unnoticed by Mr. Selig, the director rushed matters, and the proprietor of the Selig zoo found himself watching the ring performances totally unaware that he was being photographed.

JOHN DALY MURPHY WITH GAUMONT FOR COMEDY

Gaumont has secured John Daly Murphy for a Casino Star Comedy, "A Tangle in Hearts." This will be released November 14 on the Mutual Program. Murphy is favorably known everywhere in America for his work in such productions as "The Girl from Rector's," "The Man from Cook's," and so on.

The first appearance on the stage of this comedian was in support of Madame Bernhardt, when the "divine Sarah" was making one of her annual American farewell tours. The company was memorable for its supernumeraries during this Chicago run, since Mr. Murphy had among his fellow "supers" James Forbes, now known to fame as the author of "The Chorus Lady" and "The Show Shop," and Miss Zelda Sears, equally as well known on Broadway as Mr. Murphy.

JOHN DALY MURPHY

In recent years Mr. Murphy's engagements have included runs with Leo Ditrichstein in "Before and After," with Valeska Suratt in vaudeville, in "The Red Rose," "The Laughing Husband" and "An International Marriage."

KAUFMAN BEGINS PRODUCTION ON "HEARTACHES"

Director Joseph Kaufman has completed work on the four-reel original photoplay by Daniel Carson Goodman, "Heartaches," in which June Daye, the Lubin star, is appearing, and has begun producing an original four-reel play by Anthony P. Kelly, "The Rift in the Lute," in which June Daye will also be featured, with Craufurd Kent, the new Lubin player playing opposite, and Inez Buck, formerly of "The Misleading Lady" company.

TRAVERS, ESSANAY, IS SERIOUSLY INJURED IN MAKING SCENE

Richard C. Travers, an Essanay leading man, was seriously injured in taking a scene in the three-act Essanay photoplay, "The Undertow." Mr. Travers plays the part of a hobo.

The company went to Niles Center, a small Illinois town to get the rural atmosphere required by the play. In one of the scenes Mr. Travers had to "flip" a freight train. The train had gathered considerable speed when Mr. Travers attempted to leap on the first car back of the engine. The engineer was interested, and was looking out of the window. His cap blew off and struck Travers in the face, momentarily blinding him. He made a lightning turn and escaped, although the wheel tore an eight-inch gash in his left arm.

He also suffered a severe injury to the knee cap, and broke several bones of his left hand. It will be some weeks before he is able to be around again.

V-L-S-E Cuts Salary Melon for Faithful Employees

Checks Were Distributed Representing Twenty Per Cent. of Net Profits of Company for Period of Thirteen Weeks from July 12 to October 12

MONDAY was melon-cutting day at the home office of The Big Four. On this day there were distributed the checks, representing twenty per cent. of the net profits of the company for a period of thirteen weeks from July 12 to October 9, among all the employees who had been with the organization duing that time, from the youngest office boy to General Manager Walter W. Irwin.

The directors of the V-L-S-E made the office force as well as the sales force eligible, but credited the sales force, because of the creative character of their work, with two shares per dollar of salary of the fund, and the office force with one.

The unit value of each share was fixed by dividing the total number of shares necessary to include all participants of the fund, into the total amount of the disbursement—the result being enough in many cases to purchase the recipient a very desirable automobile.

It is significant of the spirit of co-operation which apparently prompted the division, however, that the directors made the following statement:

"The Board begs leave to enter your lives to the extent of making a personal suggestion, which is this: that each one continue to 'cut his cloth' only to the extent of his salary; and that those who do not possess a savings bank account will establish one with their share of the fund; and with scrupulous care, add to that account the whole of each succeeding distribution, so that this organization may be the means of creating for many a life capital, the possession of which will be of inestimable satisfaction, and may be of unusual benefit in an unfortunate hour."

This distribution is to be a permanent affair, the division being made every thirteen weeks, or four times a year. It means in reality, a most substantial increase in salary, but the donors are anxious to make it clear that it is not to be considered so, but solely as a token of appreciation of the efforts of the organization, and will in no way affect future advances.

In connection with the whole spirit of co-operation which events have proved is the guiding force of the V-L-S-E, and which is responsible for this division of profits, General Manager Walter W. Irwin makes this interesting suggestion to the staff:

"And now how can we primarily increase our effcrts and efficiency? The answer is, by taking in another partner—the exhibitor. Be fair and honest with him at all times; study all of the conditions of his business and then advise and aid him, so that he may dispose of our product, not only at the best possible price, but to the greatest number of people.

"In other words, work for him, and thereby for his success.

"When our partnership is composed of three—the manufacturers, the sales organization and the exhibitors—then, and not until then, will we possess the strength of Gibraltar.

"A salesman's duty is only half performed when he has sold our goods to the exhibitor; the other half, equally as important, is to see to it that the exhibitor resells to his substantial advantage.

"In other words, a salesman in our force is not only held responsible for the volume of business he does, and the prices he obtains, but for the degree of success attained by each exhibitor in his territory."

The V-L-S-E now has a staff of more than to hundred employees, with offices in nineteen cities.

It is beginning the second half of its first year this month.

Vitagraph's List for Second Week in November

It Includes a Chapin Comedy (Really Funny) and "For the Honor of the Crew," Pulling a Good Stroke for Popularity by Its Live Boat-Race Setting

THE second week's Vitagraph program, now announced, opens Monday, November 8, and includes a list of subjects, authors, producers and players, representative of the best the motion picture field affords.

The first release will be a comedy from the pen of Frederic Chapin, author of "C. O. D." and other laughing successes, entitled "No Tickee, No Washee," and pictures the trials of Mike Callahan who has but one collar, and his endeavor to recover it from Wing Lee, without the necessary half of his laundry ticket.

W. P. S. Earle took a page from his own college life and weaving it into an interesting picture story produced it for the screen under the title of "For the Honor of the Crew." Selecting a cast of prominent Vitagraph players, headed by James Morrison, he journeyed to Poughkeepsie, New York, where the scenes of his story are laid and registered it on the film.

"Hats Is Hats," a railroad story in which the much maligned baggage man figures conspicuously, is the third of the week's releases and was produced by Wally Van. It was written by Ellis Parker Butler and enacted by Hughie Mack, Edwina Robbins and Donald MacBride.

William Addison Lathrop, who has a number of screen successes to his credit, wrote the scenario for the Thursday release and named his story, "Sis."

Arline Pretty plays Sis, with consumate skill and artistry, being ably assisted in the enactment of the story by Thomas Mills, Garry McGarry, Jay Dwiggins, Edwina Robbins and Florence Natol.

"Sidney Drew Day," Friday, November 12, will be signalized by a typical Drew comedy, "Romantic Reggie," in which Mr. and Mrs. Drew are both happily cast. It was written by Templer Saxe and produced by Mr. Drew. It tells the adventures of an exceedingly romantic young man with an unknown lady, who hands him a card on which is written "You are my soul mate. Meet me midst the hills of Kuperskill."

A dramatic story of the West, produced by the Western Vitagraph Company at Los Angeles, Cal., under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon, entitled "The Woman's Share," closes the week's releases. It is dramatically enacted by George Holt, Anne Schaefer and George Kunkel.

JAMES CRUZE AND EDNA GOODRICH IN A TENSE MOMENT FROM "ARMSTRONG'S WIFE" (Lasky)

176,000 NEW READERS FOR METRO MAGAZINE IN A WEEK

Metro Pictures Magazine, which was issued to the public in behalf of Metro plays and players, is breaking magazine circulation records, showing the current week more than 176,000 additions have been made to the circulation list, and a campaign of national distribution is in full stride.

The newest number of the magazine contains a cover design bearing a portrait of Ethel Barrymore. The contents include stories by and about Miss Barrymore, Mme. Petrova, Francis X. Bushman, Mme. Blache, the noted woman director; Emmy Wehlen, and articles by Edfrid A. Bingham, Townsend Black, Thomas J. Geraghty, George Scarborough and others. The magazine is profusely illustrated and appeals only to the general public.

rival, going to the apartment of La Belle Rose, engages in a fight with the husband, and in the melee La Belle Rose is fatally wounded. Then the husband goes back to his wife, but she declines to forgive him, and sends him forth "to win back his self respect—and perhaps his wife," as a subtitle tells us.

This climax is a novel one, and will, no doubt, set many picture goers wondering.

The final scenes—those between the husband (Henry King) and the wife (Mabel Van Buren)—are by far the best acted in the picture. Lillian Lorraine, as La Belle Rose, often appears pretty, particularly when she is garbed in the "Perfume" gown of her own designing, but Miss Lorraine, unfortunately, does not possess a countenance capable of rendering impressively the deeper emotions. The cast also includes Lewis Cody, William Lampe and Mollie McConnell.

"A WESTERN GOVERNOR'S HUMANITY"

(Lubin—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE picture contains numerous views of rugged country in the Southwest, its sandy sagebrush plains and woodless crags, photographed in an atmosphere that makes every detail clear and distinct. Several realistic battles between bandits and a sheriff's posse amid this wilderness scenery are presented with a vigor that speaks well for the ability of the director.

The interest is sustained in one of the fights by an unusual series of flash-backs. First one sees the bandits watching from their stronghold, a huge cave on the mountainside, for the gradual approach of the sheriff and his deputies, winding in and out behind boulders as high as their horses. A sudden shift of scene takes the spectator to the men representing the law, all alert for a telling shot in the enemy's ranks on the formidable hillside above.

A feature of the picture is the presence of Governor Hunt, of Arizona, who played the role of a governor, who, influenced by the pleadings of a little child, pardons her brother, under the cloud of murder, though innocent.

The sheriff in a county on the Southwest border of Arizona is unable to cope with a band of cattle thieves, no matter how secret he tries to keep his plans. There is a leak in his own office, but he fails to trace its source.

THE HORSE THIEVES HOLD OFF THE SHERIFF'S POSSE

In one of his trips to the mountains, however, he manages to take the band unawares in a deserted house. In capturing the leader, who always wore a white hood covering his head and shoulders, and never allowed his followers to see his face, the sheriff, pulling off the mask, discovers that the chief of the cattle rustlers is his own son.

With the spirit of the Roman Brutus, who suppressed all paternal feeling when confronted by the seriousness of his son's crime, the sheriff turned his own son over to the authorities, on the charge of murder.

The son is not only finally pardoned as a result of his sister's pleadings, but a dying member of the cattle band who had been jealous of the leader, confesses to the killing of a deputy sheriff and falsely accusing the son of the sheriff of the crime.

"FIFTY-FIFTY"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

WHEN Clement Easton, the director of this picture, looked over the script, he must have worn a worried expression. The plot requires the male lead first to antagonize the sympathy of the audience, then to make it laugh, and finally to win its approval toward his love-making. Harry Dunkinson undertook this difficult combination of villain, comedian and hero, and he puts it over superlatively well.

Lillian Drew has hitherto confined her efforts to straight drama, but she blossoms out as a comedienne with a quizzical, delicate kind of humor that is captivating. Edmond F. Cobb and Vida Ramon enter equally well into the spirit of the play.

To prove that he is master of his home, Mr. Blake invites a friend to his house, in whose presence he humiliates his wife. Mrs. Blake plans revenge, and by a clever scheme her husband is made to think he has married another woman while intoxicated. Through his lawyer he pays this supposed wife a large sum of money. The neglected Mrs. Blake gets this "hush money," and revels in racing cars and imported gowns. Blake is worried until he finally discovers that he, and not some other man, is contributing these luxuries. In his relief he promises to conduct the famliy finances on a fifty-fifty basis.

The story was written by Joseph Anthony Roach.

"THE ROGUE SYNDICATE"

(Kalem—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE second of the "Ventures of Marguerite" series is better in many respects than the first. There is the excitement of crook-baiting, with touches which will appeal strongly to the sympathies, and dainty little Marguerite Courtot is provided with a part which should increase her popularity with picture fans enormously.

Marguerite finds a widow whose property has been taken from her by a company of fraudulent investment brokers. With the cooperation of her guardian, Marguerite gets a position as stenographer for the firm, and locates papers which will convict them. The head of the crowd orders her to report at his home for special work, and she uses the opportunity to get hold of the papers. The crook catches her, and aided by his partner, who rushes in, is about to throttle her, when the guardian, who has surrounded the house with a few husky men, appears. One of the crooks levels a pistol at him, but Marguerite switches off the lights, and the shot hits his partner. Confronted with the evidence against them, the frauds reluctantly return the widow's money.

Richard Purdon, E. F. Roseman and Phil Hardy support Miss Courtot in the cast.

"THE SENTIMENTAL LADY"

(Kleine-Edison Service—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THERE is a real character in this screen story by Owen Davis—one we have all seen in real life—a woman of sentiment, of impulse.

Around her whims the plot is built, and built so neatly that it will interest a large number of picture goers.

Irene Fenwick gives a spirited interpretation of the title role. She is generally in a playful mood, but once or twice the storm clouds gather and then Miss Fenwick shows cleverly the darker side of temperament. Men who see this picture will be interested because Miss Fenwick will remind them of certain things they themselves have often encountered in the other sex; women will be sympathetic toward Miss Fenwick's role, for they will be looking into a mirror.

In other words, this picture plays skillfully upon a trait in human nature. Which is absolutely vital to a successful picture of any description.

The plot concerns an attempt by a conniving old man and his son to ensnare "The Sentimental Lady" in a business deal that would have brought financial disaster. A young lawyer scents the plot, and thwarts its success by taking the girl to an island, and preventing her marriage to the junior schemer. Ultimately, of course, the lady falls in love with the young attorney.

The cast is pleasing, and, for the most part, convincing. Jack Devereaux, as the young attorney, has good presence, but does not always display the aggressiveness called for by his role. Frank

SHE TELLS HER UNCLE ABOUT THE YOUNG ATTORNEY

Belcher, as the girl's uncle, is one of those screen actors who understand the art of being perfectly natural. The other players—John Davidson, Thomas Magrath, Richie Ling, Anna Reader, Lila Barclay, Della Connor and Ben L. Taggart—are capable.

Wood and water scenes abound in the production. Walter Edwin was the director.

"THE TURN OF THE ROAD"

(Vitagraph—V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS is a story of modern life as it might easily be, and sometimes is, which has a lesson for several branches of the film industry. To the exhibitor, whom it now chiefly concerns, it appears as a picture which will appeal to almost any public—it is the life which one side knows, another side imagines, and still another side has heard of. Although the local minister will be unable to place his finger on any particular spot and say it is improper, there will be thousands of his parishioners who will enjoy the entertainment keenly, simply because they feel they should not be there, and by all means it is no place for their less-sophisticated neighbors; and the less-sophisticated neighbors are sure to hear of this, and consequently sure to see the picture, which they will find thoroughly clean and even tame in the hackneyed nature of its plot, which is nothing more than the bare bones of the well-known eternal triangle.

To the director it is a lesson in how much can be done with a thin story by the use of capable actors and a lot of brain work. The greatest dramatic values and the best of the heart interest are built up and projected out to the spectator by those diaphanous methods which are never put on paper.

To the young free-lance writer it will be a despair, for he will realize that had he written such a story he would still have it on his hands.

A young wife's school-days chum comes to visit her, and the husband becomes infatuated with the newcomer. The wife is occupied with her young son, and the husband and friend are thrown together continually. They decide to elope, and when they do so their automobile is wrecked and the girl badly injured. The wife forgivingly receives her back into her home, and during her long illness the husband realizes that he loves his wife the best after all. That is the story; it is elaborated with a number of incidents, such as a theatre and supper party, a fire and surgical operation, but the whole is very simple.

It is the finished work of director and actors that make the picture good.

Joseph Kilgour claims first honors, as the husband, but Naomi Childers, as the wife, and Virginia Pearson, as the friend, give excellent portrayals. Robert Gaillard, Edwina Robbins, Mabel Kelly and Bobby Connelly complete the cast.

The direction is that of Tefft Johnson, and the author is Isabel Johnston.

"THIS IS THE LIFE"

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THE Buck Parvin pictures have been "sure-fire" partly because they have given the intimate details of picture making to innumerable curious fans. The third of this novel series presents an aggravated case of the well-nigh universal mania to act for the films. The many thousands of picture patrons who are innoculated with this disease will find melancholy amusement in seeing the experiences of someone else afflicted with the malady.

The same good cast of the earlier releases, from Buck himself down to the tobacco-chewing property man, appears in this picture. Art Acord relinquishes the principal part to Adele Farrington, but his genial personality still pervades every foot of film. William Bertram directed the production.

The wife of a successful manufacturer tires of her luxurious life and longs for the excitement of a stage career. Against the wishes of her husband, she applies for a job at the Titan studios. The director has already had an interview with her husband on the subject, and the pair have conspired to cure the stage-struck woman for all time. To effect this plan, the poor woman is made to take part in chases, fights and fires, and is forced to do all manner of strenuous feats. Thoroughly exhausted, and absolutely disgusted, the aspiring matron decides to forget her dreams of being a leading woman anywhere but in her own home. Charles Newton, John Gough, Mother Ashton, Lawrence Peyton, Charles James, Ashton Dearhold, Dixie Stratton, Hardy Gibson and Joe Massey are also in the cast.

THE STORY OF THE LASKY "CARMEN," SUMMARIZED IN GLIMPSES OF THE FACE OF GERALDINE FARRAR UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF THE GREATER EMOTIONS THAT DOMINATE THE PICTURE

"CARMEN"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

"CARMEN" is a tempting opportunity for any actress and any producer, and to say that Geraldine Farrar and the Lasky Feature Play Company have proved themselves equal to their opportunities in this five-reel version of the great story is, we believe, only forecasting the verdict of most of the members of most of the audiences who will witness it.

"Most" is used advisedly. There are those who know the story of "Carmen" and don't like it. There are those who don't know the story, and won't like it when they do. There are still others who have pretended to approve of "Carmen" because they had been told it was a masterpiece of fiction and a great opera, who will now be emboldened for the first time to judge it with their own eyes and mind, instead of another's.

But when the returns are all in, the majority of men and women who love a good story, powerfully, vividly, naturally told—whether in fiction, on the stage, or to the accompaniment of music—will find abundant satisfaction and delight in Farrar's delineation of the wild, self-willed, adventure-loving gypsy, Carmen.

And a majority is all that a picture or a political candidate can hope for from the public.

"Carmen" is not merely the story of a group of human beings grappling with events and circumstances. It is not merely the story of a woman. It is a distinct type of woman, embodied in a dramatic narrative, and except as accessories to her life, or as playthings of her will, the persons associated with her in the story are almost completely insignificant.

In such a one-character story, the burden of interpreting and illuminating the entire tale devolves upon a single person—the Carmen of the cast. If she fails, all is lost, for no other character, no other feature of the drama is important enough to save it. And success under such conditions is no easy thing to attain. Never for a moment is she relieved from the full, searching gaze of her audience. Never once is she permitted to retire to the background and gather herself together again. One false note, one blunder, and the whole intricate, delicate fabric of illusion she has been carefully building before and about the audience crashes to pieces.

This is the test to which Farrar submits herself, and the test from which she emerges triumphant. She is not a great prima donna appearing in her most successful role. She IS Carmen. She lives the part. Every gesture is one of Carmen's own; every play of the feature is, you feel, as Carmen would have looked; every action, every decision is made in the exact mood you are sure governed this woman who would walk through fire and not be harmed, who loved love, but not her lovers, whose one ambition was absolute power over men, not for their sake, but for its own.

The abandon of Farrar's Carmen, the overflowing life, energy and power of her characterization exhilarates, while it irresistibly charms. It requires but a few minutes of her conquering vitality to convince the onlooker that she could impose her will, upon any man, under any condition and at any price. All that the facts

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

WITH ALL the elements that make for the success of a picture this production is fully endowed. Star, supporting cast and director have met upon an extraordinarily high plane of excellence, and the result is a boon to the exhibitor.

Picturegoers will be delighted with the full play given Theda Bara's personality, for never has her strange charm been seen to better advantage than in her interpretation of "Carmen." Significant as her work is, the director also deserves very high praise. His sets are extensive, his management of a large number of extras flawless, and his introduction of incidental touches just about perfect. He has striven to make the production sensational, and he has succeeded.

In attaining the sensational, the conventional conception of "Carmen" had, of course, to be left behind. The story, therefore, is in spots a little incoherent, but its total effect—and that is what audiences judge pictures by—is gained by a succession of thrills around which the plot itself is wound.

The Carmen of Theda Bara is a full-blooded, vibrant, wayward Spanish gypsy, with just a touch, only a touch, of the vampire. When she captures Don Jose, it is by the exercise of physical charms, of course, but physical charms thrown into relief against a background of mystery. Carmen in Miss Bara's interpretation, is no mere flirt. She is a woman who makes her charms effective by the use of a strong will.

Toward Don Jose and Escamillo alike she is imperious, never hesitant, never at a loss—even in death. If Theda Bara had made Carmen a vampire, she would have been fascinating, but not convincing. This needs to be said because the vampire role has so long been associated with her. Her Carmen has all the vampire's fierceness when aroused, but a depth of will power and of mystery that a vampire could never have.

On his side, Director Raoul A. Walsh has also done what is probably the best work of his career. His sets of Seville street scenes, fiestas, interiors of hovels, the cigarette factory, the Cordova baths, and the gypsy camp—to mention a few of them—are entirely satisfying. A large number of extras are handled without a slip. In having Don Jose fall to his death on horseback from a cliff, Walsh has departed from the conventional to supply a thrilling scene. And thrilling it is—horse and rider actually plunge eighty-three feet down a sheer precipice. There is no fake about it. The adventurous young man who performed this feat was lucky to escape with nothing but a broken leg and a few bruises.

The fight between Carmen and Carlotta in the cigarette factory is all that it has been advertised to be. Fay Tunis, the young girl brought from the New York Spanish quarter to engage in this combat with Miss Bara, must have been surprised at the fierceness of the struggle. Anyhow, no spectator will say that it has been surpassed for realism of its kind.

These are the necessary externals of which Director Walsh made sure. What makes Walsh's work most distinguished, however, is his injection of little touches of relief into a picture that and foundations of the story require you to believe of Carmen, you accept as possible and true, because Farrar is what she is as the personifier of the gypsy maid.

This, of itself, is enough to guarantee the complete submission of an audience to the picture, and its complete satisfaction with it at the denouement. And when one has seen her sustain such a level of acting, faultlessly, surely, spontaneously, for an hour and a quarter, one realizes that the only problem left for the producer was to select the rest of his company, and choose his settings so that they merely formed the proper harmonious background for the unfolding of the personality of Carmen.

This the Lasky people succeeded, on the whole, in doing. Nothing was, at any time, permitted to overshadow or interfere with or detract from the uninterrupted telling of the story. Carefully worked out as was the fight in the cigarette factory and outside, elaborately detailed as the duel in the tavern was, there was never once the feeling that these incidents had been allowed to become anything but incidents—among the most important in the story, it is true, but incidents, nevertheless. So, too, with the bull-fight.

These two facts—the variety, the vitality, the vividness of Farrar's portrayal, and the preservation of the story's integrity throughout by Cecil De Mille—are the secrets of the strength of Lasky's "Carmen." We expected good settings. They were there. We expected adequate support for Farrar. It was there. But we did not know whether we dared to expect such acting as Farrar gave us, or such respect for the story's rights as we found. But because they were there also, "Carmen" is more than a good picture. It is a great one.

Wallace Reid as Don Jose, Horace Carpenter as the smuggler leader, Pedro de Cordoba as Escamillo, and the remainder of the company contribute all that is necessary to complete to the gratifying effect of the picture. That they could not be more responsible for its success is not their fault, but Prosper Merimee's.

PITTSBURGH IRON MILLS AND COAL MINES SERVE AS BACKGROUND FOR "LORDS OF HIGH DECISION" SCENES

Pittsburgh, Pa., November 2.

A DOZEN members of the Imp Company, working under the direction of Jack Harvey, were in the Pittsburgh district last week, taking scenes for a forthcoming Broadway Universal Feature. The scenes were laid about iron mills and coal mines and an explosion scene was enacted at Moon Run last Friday which will prove a revelation in realism.

The picture for which the scenes were made will be called "The Lords of High Decision" from the story by Meredith Nicholson. The leading man is Cyril Scott and Miss Skirmon takes the feminine lead. About 3,500 feet of film was taken.

"CARMEN"

is necessarily profoundly tragic. One of these shows Don Jose casting occasional glances at a litter of pigs engaged in taking nourishment from their maternal ancestor. When Don Jose and Michaela are love making in the courtyard, a flash shows two doves employed at the same interesting game. And, at another point in the action, when anxiety over the result of Don Jose's folly begins to be strained, Walsh flashes Carmen, reclining at ease, stroking a kitten.

These effects, gained by a masterly use of the "cut back," serve in every case to heighten the interest of the audience as well as to interpret the scene by showing its counterpart—an achievement of motion picture art hitherto associated, as to its perfection, with the name of D. W. Griffith alone.

Without knowing exactly why, the spectator accepts these touches as so naturally conceived that the production would not be complete without them.

The supporting cast is uniformly the best we have yet seen in a Fox production. Next to Miss Bara, the honors are about evenly divided between the Don Jose of Einar Linden and the Michaela of Elsie Macleod. Linden has genuine ability in tragic parts. In the scenes with Carmen he is particularly impressive. Miss Macleod, whose face is both sweet and thoughtful, makes Michaela so lovable that one wonders how Don Jose could ever have been lured away from her. Carl Harbaugh (Escamillo, the picador) has splendid bearing, and gives a spirited interpretation of the role. Other principals, all of whom are properly cast and perform capably—are J. A. Marcus (the chief of the smugglers) and E. de Varny (Capt. Morales). Among the extras are many genuine Spanish types.

The bull-fight scenes are brief, but effective.

(Balboa-Pathe—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

ARTISTICALLY colored prints add to the attractiveness of this story of rural, city and gypsy life. The story, apparently, was created to give Jackie Saunders one of the hoyden parts in which she delights, and has little strength or originality to carry it. The settings, however, are amid woodland glades, flower gardens and ivy clad mansions, and these lend themselves excellently to the pencil of the colorist.

Jackie Saunders has a part which fits her well. She is a picturesque figure as a ragged flower seller at a fashionable hotel, and she handles well the changes from gay to grave when she finds herself adopted by a wealthy couple, and forced into a round of detested social activity. She escapes from this and joins a gypsy band, where she finds life to her liking until the son of the chief attempts to force his attentions on her. Her sweetheart, and adoptive parents are notified, and arrive at a deserted shack where her pursuer has dragged her, in time to rescue her.

AMONG THE GYPSIES

There is much of charm spread throughout the picture. In many cases other factors have been sacrificed to picturesque effect, but nothing is allowed to restrict the flow of the story.

"INSPIRATION"

(Thanhouser—Mutual Masterpicture—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE chief object of this picture seems to have been to bring to life the noted model whose figure decorates the grounds of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and several other pretentious groups of statuary in this country. As shown for review, the picture presents life in a sculptor's studio just as it has been hinted at in numerous books which are not to be found in school libraries. In this case there is no hinting, and it will not be necessary to call on the imagination for any details. The artist's model who poses as Phryne posed, is treated merely as a professional in the practice of her profession, and there is no attempt to make anything or any person in the studio appear as other than factors in the working out of artistic ideas, and as puppets subordinate to that art, but there is an immense public which will never be able to grasp this.

We hear that there is to be much cutting of the film before it is offered for release. This may obviate much of the difficulty which now confronts the producer and leave a picture which will go forth with a wide appeal. The exhibitor who carefully weighs and analyzes his patronage should then find it a good attraction.

Miss Audrey Munson is the model. The story, which in itself, is trivial, is built around her and her unique record as a model for noted sculpture. Many of the most famous pieces for which she has posed are introduced by means of dissolves, and there is one educational feature—an entire reel, in fact—which shows the process of making a life cast in plaster of a full length figure. She is called upon to do a little regular acting, and her work measures well up to that of the cast. Thomas Curran appears as the sculptor and George Marlo and Bert Delaney as his friends.

"THE COME-BACK OF PERCY"

(Selig—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THE name of this picture might be appropriately paraphrased into "The Come-Back of Bloom Center," for it has the natural, unaffected spontaneity of the first release in this series, without the ponderous slap-stick work of the second Chronicle. The story is slightly padded in spots, but it supplies a series of situations that are genuinely humorous. The cast fortunately seems to have abandoned a too athletic interpretation of their parts, and are willing to score their points histrionically rather than calisthenically. If the remaining Chronicles measure up to this one, Bloom Center should become a comedy classic.

One day a fashionably dressed stranger arrives in Bloom Center, and makes inquiries concerning the whereabouts of certain inhabitants. As he meets the various people about whom he has inquired, he steps up and floors them with a lusty uppercut. After punishing a score or more of the inhabitants, he explains his strange conduct. Years before, he was a little boy living in Bloom Center, and the other boys picked on him.

When he moved away with his parents, he vowed that some day he would return and revenge himself on his tormentors. Smiling at the villagers, he produces a card reading, "Percy Pinkham, Light-Weight Champion Pugilist of the World."

Marshal Neilan wrote and produced the story. It is played by William Scott, William Hutchinson, Lee Morris, John Lancaster, Ralph McComas and Sidney Smith.

BESSIE BARRISCALE AND FRANK MILLS, IN THIS TRIANGLE PLAY, GIVE POWERFUL PORTRAYALS IN A DRAMA FILLED WITH MANY TENSE SITUATIONS

FIFTH KNICKERBOCKER TRIANGLE PROGRAM

("Saved by Wireless"—Keystone—Two Parts. "The Golden Claw"—Kay-Bee—Five Parts. "The Best of Enemies"—Keystone—Two Parts. "Double Trouble"—Fine Arts—Five Parts.)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THOUGH comedy be the dominating note of this latest Triangle show, the program is, as usual, well balanced, due to the extreme strength of the Ince feature, a superbly enacted drama. A strong vein of humor running through the Griffith picture quite eclipses its fewer dramatic points, while Sennett's pair of thrilling and unique comedies run their usual hilarious courses.

"Saved by Wireless," a Sennett burlesque, directed by Walter Wright, uncovers a quantity of hair-raising stunts, amplified by marvelous trick photographic work. If you can think of the best chase you ever saw staged in a slapstick comedy, and then imagine one twice as startling, you may be possessed with half an idea of the ridiculously thrilling feats performed in this number. Chester Conklin and Mack Swain do battle on a rope appended to an aeroplane, Conklin scampers all over the wabbling craft to recover his hat, a motorcycle cop sails through the air and crashes through the top of an automobile, cars skid dangerously on wet pavements, and a yacht is blown up.

The burlesque character of the story and the popularity and recognized ability of Conklin and Swain in a picture of this sort, unite with the thrilling events to throw an audience into a continued state of hilarity. The support furnished by Andrew Anderson, Walter Klintberg, Harry McCoy, Ora Carew and Nick Cogley is praiseworthy chiefly because of its daring. "Saved by Wireless" is an excellent opening number, for it puts one in immediate good humor.

"The Golden Claw," by C. Gardner Sullivan, produced by Thomas H. Ince, is a remarkable example of the power of talented character portrayal. Bessie Barriscale as the girl who marries for money, sincerely believing that wealth is the only essential to happiness, gives her whole self to the part. Mr. Ince has strengthened her revealing expressions by the frequent and commendable use of closeups, while the part gives Miss Barriscale many opportunities for expressions of varying character. Frank Mills, as the husband driven by his wife until he develops into an inhuman money making machine, also gives a realistic and effective performance. His change from the young man to the heartless, grinding machine is a master bit of subtle expression. He also succeeds in making his battle against suicidal thoughts as powerful as if it were not pictured in nine screen stories out of ten.

The picture closes with the man at last the lucky victim of business failure, for his wife has awakened to the fact that riches do not always bring love and very often bring sorrow. J. Barney Sherry, Truly Shattuck and Wedgwood Nowell furnish the support in this fine production, which, without belittling the accompanying pictures, may well be termed the piece de resistance of the bill.

With "The Best of Enemies," Joe Weber and Lew Felds are introduced a la Keystone. The two popular comedians retain many of their stage tricks, yet the picture and its director, Frank Griffen, have thoroughly Sennettized the team. Added to the laughable antics of Weber and Fields, the two reels are blessed with the remarkable and exasperating beauty of Mae Busch, the dainty Keystone comedienne. Chester Conklin and Mack Swain are again responsible for much of the humor.

The trial scene in particular is handled with an indicative high sense of its comedy value. The audience fairly roared all through this number although we believe some of those present objected to the prolonged burlesque of the hanging scene. It makes light of death, hence the objection, even though Keystone comedians make nothing of death when they participate in a wild chase. But the scenes in which preparations for the hanging were going on, were pictured actualities, even though the action was entirely burlesqued and some will be likely to take exception to them.

D. W. Griffith's production of "Double Trouble," adapted from Herbert Quick's novel and made under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne, is chiefly comic, and much of its humor is conveyed by the subtitles. Here again as in "The Lamb," these titles are mindful of George Ade and consequently very humorous. No strong dramatic situations arise, partly because of the character of the titles, but the picture is quite novel in development and interesting.

Douglas Fairbanks is starred as a man of dual personality. He becomes at alternate times through a medium of a psychic, a swaggering politician and rounder or a young man possessed of an aggravating timidity. Though his two different characterizations are in definite contrast to one another, he is inclined to overdo both personalities. He is slightly too much of the swaggerer and his method of denoting the backward character, by the constant and nervous fingering of his mouth and chin is sometimes tiresome.

The action itself is humorous, resulting from the absolute ignorance of each self towards the other. As one of the personalities, he is continually being confronted with deeds that he committed while governed by his other self. Happily enough the close of the story calls for a merger of the two personalities, so Fairbanks creates a natural and pleasing impression in the end.

Margery Wilson as his fiancee, shows a fine appreciation of her part, while others are Olga Grey, Richard Cummings and Gladys Brockwell. Inasmuch as "Double Trouble" is on the whole finely produced and, with the Knickerbocker theatre audience as a criterion, responsible for no small amount of laughter, the exaggerated zeal displayed by Fairbanks in order to create an effective contrast, may be passed over with no more than slight regret.

It is pleasing to note that all four pictures presented in the fifth bill are supported by very good photography. Also the settings are always appropriate, some of those in the longer picture being quite remarkable.

Considering the show in its entirety, it is extremely good. The hilarious comedy offered in Sennett's brace of burlesques, the wit in "Double Trouble" and above all the fine strength and impressive acting in "The Golden Claw," blend into a most enjoyable three hours' entertainment.

Dear Mr. Johnston: The "News" reaches me two days before any other trade paper, which is a great help in advance advertising. The "News" appeals to me because it is "news," and because I would rather have the reviews from it than most publicity that is gotten up by the manufacturers.

I am an exhibitor with three houses here, and am using all the biggest features produced and two regular programs, and it is necessary that my time be used in the most profitable way. Therefore, as the "News" contains nearly all the information necessary for certain reference and concisely classified for handy reference, it is most natural that I should find it invaluable.

I can express only admiration for the "News" as a whole, and appreciation for the help it is to me. The editorials are exceptionally fine and I have given most of the late ones to the editors of the daily papers here, so that they might better understand what is and what ought to be done for the betterment of this wonderful business.

"THE END OF THE ROAD"

(American-Mutual Masterpiece—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

BY this time Harold Lockwood should have a host of friends among the patrons of motion pictures. Great actor he is not, as yet, but he has magnetic freshness of personality, and a winning smile, and he does what his director tells him to. He is a good type for a picture "hero" and we have no doubt he is being watched for on many a screen. In this subject he is cast for the leading part with May Allison, and he has plenty to do. In the third reel he wins one of the most spectacular hand-to-hand fights ever screened, and comes out of it almost as badly perforated as his opponent. It is not one of these fights from which the hero emerges unscathed, but realism is carried to such an extent that when the debaters are separated, they and the dining-room in which the affair is staged, look like sunrise on the forts of Przemysl.

There is another thrilling scene in a moonshiner's still. The building is an old mill perched on the edge of a mountain torrent, with a rickety footbridge connecting it with the level shore across the stream. The principals are caught in the mill during a cloudburst, the dam gives way, and as they flee across the bridge, the torrent sweeps mill and bridge down to ruin. There are several narrow escapes and a thrilling rescue.

The plot concerns moonshiners and counterfeiters, and a charge falsely made by a mountain girl against the young hero who is staying at the nearby hotel. Her brother vows to avenge her, and attempts the young man's life several times, but when the girl confesses, the two become friends, the moonshiners are rounded up, and all live happily. Helene Rosson, William Stowell, William Erfe, Lizette Thorne, Harry von Meter, Hal Clements, Beatrice Van, Nan Christie and William Carroll are also in the cast.

"A BUTTERFLY ON THE WHEEL"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture undoubtedly meets the popular conception and demand as to the proper presentation of a drama based on the eternal triangle. It is a production that the vast majority of the motion picture public will welcome with open arms, for it contains a favorite theme, developed with a complete understanding of its dramatic possibilities.

Maurice Tourneur directed it and to that fact may be attached the cause of the picture's strong tone. Holbrook Blinn and Vivian Martin have the featured parts. Mr. Blinn, as the neglectful husband, is as usual the polished, the understanding actor, caring for the role in a most capable manner. The part of the butterfly wife is, we believe, the first emotional character that Miss Martin has tackled.

While not particularly well adapted to the part, Miss Martin is sincere in her rendition of it and succeeds in bringing out its sympathetic traits.

The five reels introduce some impressive spectacular effects. The fancy dress ball is very well staged, while the crowded opera house thrown into panic when fire breaks out presents a series of exciting moments. Again in the divorce court a deft arrangement of full scenes, flashes and close-ups, creates a strong air of suspense.

Of the rest of the cast, John Hines in a comedy part, and George Ralph and June Elvidge do very creditable work. The story results from the hard working husband's neglect of his pretty wife, rather a weak willed young lady. She is innocently compromised before her husband by the well known best "friend" and consequently suffers nerve racking divorce proceedings which are interrupted when the husband discovers her innocence.

"THE WOMAN OF THE SEA"

(Kalem-General—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

ALTHOUGH built upon a highly improbable premise, the element of mystery has been skillfully emphasized in this subject in such manner as to sustain the interest to the last.

The plot revolves around a young woman found unconscious, lashed to a raft just off shore. A young nobleman discovers her, carries her to his home and cares for her, despite the protests of his snobbish aunt, who designs that he shall marry her daughter. The newcomer is brought back to life, but her memory is a blank; yet, notwithstanding this, the nobleman marries her. One would imagine that the first thought which would occur to the well-poised mind would be that possibly there was another husband, or some other incumbrance back in the hidden past which would seriously interfere with such a headlong marriage, and this is just what develops. The young wife recovers her memory, and it is a memory of another husband, who now is a foreign spy, laying plans to get "the papers" in the possession of the new husband.

Jackie Saunders is the woman of the sea. She does her work well and convincingly. Considerable attention has been paid to the appropriateness of settings and costumes, and the portrayal of high European official society is true to what the average motion picture spectator knows it to be. Jack Livingston plays the part of Sir Arthur Chelton, the willing marryer, without any great dash of energy. Mollie McConnell, Robert Grey, Frank Erlanger and Fred Whitman are also in the cast.

TWO UNIVERSAL BROADWAY FEATURES OFFERED TO EXHIBITORS FOR NOVEMBER

THE COURT SCENE IN "THE FRAME-UP" (November 8) STAPLES' UNTIMELY DEATH FROM "COLORADO" (November 15) THE ELECTION CELEBRATION IN "THE FRAME-UP"

"THE FRAME-UP"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

GEORGE FAWCETT, starring in a political drama, just about equals the height of satisfaction in this variety of production. The sterling character actor whose every move suggests a forceful and dominating personality, and whose wide range of expression knows no limited restriction, is an ideal type for Luke Simms, the honest mayor, in "The Frame-up."

Happily enough, Luke Simms gives Fawcett's impressive personality many and great opportunities in which to play. Luke Simms was created by Otis Turner, who produced, as well as wrote, "The Frame-up." The part has an appealing touch, particularly when the trusting mayor easily falls into the trap that Sears, the political boss, has set for him, and with Fawcett's clear and powerful characterization the role is irresistibly magnetic. Commanding force and quaint humor make Luke Simms a thoroughly human and admirable character.

Otis Turner's scenario contains a gripping story, in many respects melodramatic. Corrupt politics, headed by an overly corrupt boss, continually do battle with the honest mayor. The mayor has his way finally, but he is obliged to struggle for it, and even after his political ideals have satisfactorily attained recognition, his social standing is severely shaken. With the author as director, the highest possibilities of the story have been vividly realized.

Harry Carter, heading the supporting cast as the boss, renders most polished work. Albert MacQuarrie, Oliver Fuller Golden, Maude George, Doc Crane, and Lule Warrenton in other principal parts furnish sincere and effective support.

The settings are in every respect appropriate, while from a photographic standpoint the picture presents an evenly good aspect. In fact everything contained in the picture contributes to its ultimate success.

"COLORADO"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"COLORADO" is a Western melodrama, with plenty of swift action, plenty of intrigue and plenty of thrills. It merits a warm reception for these reasons and because of its derivation and its treatment received at the hands of the adaptor, director and cast. The play is by Augustus Thomas. It enjoyed a most successful career on the stage. Harvey Gates has deftly managed to suitably prepare the play for screen use.

With Hobart Bosworth playing the part of the professor who comes to the West with his sister and invalid wife, to be tricked and buncoed by a land grabber and his agent, the picture is assured of a most popular and deserving star. The support of Anna Lehr, Albert MacQuarrie, Jack Nelson, Louise Baxter, Mr. Bradbury and others is appropriate, while the little character sketch by old Doc Crane as the pessimistic prospector is genuine in its subdued humor.

The story is laid in the Colorado mining country, and suspense there is aplenty; for, in addition to the effective construction of the melodrama, the locale is of the sort that creates suspense of itself. One is always expecting a cave-in or a premature blast or something of the sort when the characters are seen hovering about a mine; and in "Colorado" one's expectations are gloriously fulfilled when the mine is flooded and various of the principals and supernumeraries are in danger of drowning.

The scenery offered in "Colorado" is gorgeous. Mountainous, sparsely populated country has been selected as backgrounds for the major part of the action that takes place outdoors. The photography is extremely good. If an exhibitor wants intense melodrama, "Colorado" is certain of meeting his requirements.

"SHOULD A WIFE FORGIVE?"

BECAUSE of its unusual ending, and because of the elaborate style in which it was produced, a good many people will be interested in this offering.

Through excellent photography, the Messrs. Horkheimer, who are responsible for the production, bring to view a variety of pleasing scenes: drawing rooms, semi-tropical gardens, a cafe with a cabaret in progress, and glimpses of an audience witnessing a play. In fact, the sets throughout are unusually good.

So far as the story is concerned, we have, for four reels and a half, only another version of the eternal triangle: a husband, falling in love with La Belle Rose, a dancer whom he meets by accident, uses his wife's money to back a play in which the third member of the triangle stars. When the wife discovers what is proceeding, she breaks with her husband. The play fails. A

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN AND BEVERLY BAYNE IN A GROUP OF FASCINATING MOMENTS FROM THE LATEST METRO FEATURE, "PENNINGTON'S CHOICE"

"PENNINGTON'S CHOICE"

(Quality-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

WHATEVER faults it may have from the standpoint of the artist, the theatregoer, or the newspaper critic, this picture brings with it a horn full of good news for the exhibitor: it is a highly salable article. The name of Francis X. Bushman is a magic one among hundreds of thousands of picture goers and this multitude will find plenty of Francis X. in this offering.

Pennington had a choice between leaving the great North Woods, or staying and fighting the powerful bullies who sought to drive him out; he chose to stay, and he got enough fighting to keep seven cameramen busy, and consequently as society man, woodsman, horseman, boxer and all around athlete, several thousand feet of Bushman was revealed when the films were developed.

Pennington's overland journey to the depths of the woods, to find his fiancee's father, and prove himself to be a man in the parent's eyes, gave an opportunity for many charming bits of photography, all of which were improved to the fullest, and the mild touch of nature forms a gentle relief to the full fury of Bushman in his best ringside form. He hurls six-foot men up and down hill, and whirls his oppressors around his head with an ease which will bring salvos of cheers from the enthusiasts. J. J. Jeffries is introduced as Bushman's trainer in a woodland camp, who puts him in shape to polish off his adversaries, and "make good" in the eyes of the girl and her father. Then it develops that the bullies were in reality the girl's brothers, conspirators in a gigantic plot to put the young suitor to the acid test. He comes out of it in true heroic style, and after wiring enough money to Montreal to save the old man's claim from a band of land grabbers, he and the girl settle down to fully forty feet of red-fire tableau, indicating that they lived happily, etc.

Aside from the fact that the action is slow in getting under way, it is well constructed, and logical. Beverly Bayne, as the girl and the girl's mythical "twin sister," is capable and charming, especially as a water nymph who does some really artistic diving from lofty jutting crags which surround an attractive bit of water. Wellington Playter, H. O'Dell, William Farris, Helen Dunbar, Lester Cuneo, Morris Cytron and J. J. Jeffries complete the cast. The picture was produced by O. A. C. Lund from a story by J. A. Culley.

"THE TRUTH ABOUT HELEN"

(Edison-General—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

IF the public, the exhibitor, the director and the producer insisted on striking originality in every offering, we would never have known "The Truth About Helen." But such originality isn't necessary, or possible, and a good old-fashioned drama, built along the most conventional lines, such as this is, should find a warm reception among many sections of the picture-going crowd.

Politics is the theme, but it is politics "played down" to the level of the average audience; in other words, politics as it is played in the books. There is no attempt to go into the subtleties of the system, and the "boss" distributes his nominations to suit himself, as a matter of course, in the open. The hero, seeking the nomination, finds his former sweetheart in a compromising position at the very road house where he was to meet the politicians. Instead of joining the conference, he punishes the man who has put the girl in the position in which he finds her, and assumes the compromise with her. This results in the loss of the nomination.

Later the girl, misunderstood on all sides, goes to visit the family of a senator in Washington. There her former pursuer finds her, and attempts to use the road house incident in his work as agent for a crowd of lobbyists. The hero is passing the house when the villain, who has entered through a window to steal some papers, throws himself at the girl, and is in time to rescue her. In the scuffle, the intruder is shot. The facts all come to light when the girl tells the whole history in order to clear the hero from the attacks of a political rival.

The incidents are well contrived, and, as a whole, the picture is well staged and acted. Augustus Phillips is a good villain, and Grace Williams is demure and capable as Helen. Harry Linson, Robert Conness, Carlton King, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Robert Brower, and Herbert Prior are also in the cast.

"DORA THORNE"

(Biograph—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

AN elaborate and appropriate setting has been given to this story, one of the most popular of Bertha M. Clay's novels. The story is a typical Clay story of the conflict between the classes in England, with love lying as the victim, on the altar between them—and usually a needless victim; but someone must be ground to pieces when two such forces clash, and Bertha M. Clay always makes Cupid the goat.

Millicent Evans as Dora, the daughter of the lodge-keeper, is well cast, as is also William Russel, who makes an excellent Ronald, the future Lord Earle. Both appeal to the sympathies, and are of types which will appeal to the followers of the Clay school of fiction, of which there are enough to insure the success of any such picture as this.

Then there are Betty Gray and Marie Newton as the twin daughters of Ronald and Dora, and beautiful daughters enough to grace any nobility. The splendor, magnificence and family pride which are essential parts of the novel are well preserved and depicted in such manner that a few well-regulated sobs will be squeezed from almost any crowd of theatre patrons.

Lionel Barrymore, Thomas Jefferson, Isabel Rea, Charles H. Mailes, A. C. Marston, Alan Hale and William Jefferson complete a large and unusually capable cast.

"THE DEVIL'S DARLING"

(Rialto-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A CONSCIENTIOUS effort has been made to point a great moral by the producer of this picture. An apt use has been made of allegory, but the effect is somewhat marred by crude and careless mechanical effects. One of the camera's greatest possibilities for dramatic expression lies in the use of well-contrived dissolves, but in order to get the true effectiveness from these, they must be produced with the greatest care and mechanical art. When a figure of a blooming young woman dissolves at a touch into a shrivelled and grinning hag, the best of the effect is lost when the new figure registers some six inches to the right or left of the one which has just disappeared. Proper care will make the registry exact.

This does not mar the whole picture, by any means, and enough work has been expended on other parts of the subject to balance the whole. Elaborate settings and costumes have been provided to give the effect of a life of ease and luxury, bought at great moral expense, and an atmosphere which contains a lot of that mystery which appeals to the average audience, has been created.

The plot concerns a young shop girl (Francine Larrimore) whose soul another woman attempts to deliver to Satan, in accordance with an agreement by which the other woman is allowed to retain her youth. Through outside interference the young girl's soul is rescued, and deprived of his prey, Satan snatches back the extended youth which he had granted to the woman.

There is plenty of action, well distributed, and the characterizations are convincing. All in all it should prove a satisfactory offering.

"THE MASQUERADERS"

(Famous Players—Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THIS drama by Henry Arthur Jones, already long famous on the speaking stage, is here picturized with most of its original dramatic power retained, plus a gain in the telling of the story by the presentation of numerous scenes that of course could not be shown in the stage version.

The sets were planned with unusual care, and show a depth rarely found in society plays. The interior of the Stagg Inn, whither the crowd of society people goes after Field Day, and where a kiss is auctioned in spirited fashion, is extensive, and not one detail is overlooked. Two other interiors—a large banquet hall and a drawing room—are just as effective in their way.

It is in the latter place that the famous scene is enacted wherein Sir Brice Skene, a dissipated and unprincipled nobleman, gambles away his wife and child, laying them as stakes against the bank account of David Remon, who wins on the third cut of the cards. This incident is contrived skillfully, and created real suspense in the minds of the audience at the Broadway last Sunday.

The excellence of the story makes up any deficiencies that appear in the work of the players. Hazel Dawn, as Dulcie Larondie, a gentlewoman who becomes a barmaid, marries Sir Brice when she should have married Remon, and repents when Sir Brice proves himself a scoundrel, is throughout pleasing. There is no doubt about Miss Dawn's beauty, but in the more tense situations she does not give her emotions reign enough. Elliott Dexter, as Remon, is also a little too impassive. In his characterization of Sir Brice, Frank Losee is convincing. Norman Tharp, Ida Darling, Evelyn Farris, Nina Lindsey, Charles Bryant, and Russell Bassett complete a cast that is satisfying, even though it does not quite realize the highest possibilities of the plot.

Summed up, "The Masqueraders" will please because of its story, its settings, and the acceptable, but not brilliant, work of its players.

"THE LAUREL OF TEARS"

(Biograph—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS is a good melodrama of modern business. The crises and climaxes are naturally exaggerated, but they are so handled as to produce excellent dramatic effects and produce a tense picture. The principal characters are well drawn, and the familiar hero and heroine will appeal strongly to the sympathies, while the villain, this time a promoter of mining schemes is of the good old type, fit only for stratagems, spoils and curses.

Esther, a public stenographer, aspires to be a novelist, but finds the path thorny. She has occasion to befriend Dora, a young stenographer who has fled from her employer because he attempted to force his attentions on her. Comes then the hero, a mining engineer, for whom Esther draws up a report of a mining property. The man who is to use the report is the employer from whom Dora fled. He wants a satisfactory report at all costs, and decides to forge one over the engineer's name. Fortunately he brings the work to Esther, who sees at once that something is wrong, and notifies the hero. The plot is foiled, but the crooked promoter vows vengeance on Esther. Later Dora falls again into his clutches, and Esther goes to her rescue. She saves the girl by burning the house where she is being held, but sees the young engineer, with whom she has fallen in love, turn to Dora. From her experience, however, she writes the novel which brings fame, and the "laurel of tears." Vera Sisson, Madge Kirby, G. Raymond Nye, Jose Ruben and Charles H. Mailes compose a competent cast.

HARTMAN PUSHES SALES PLAN OF AMERICAN STANDARD MOTION PICTURE MACHINE COMPANY

WILLIAM C. HARTMAN, who associated himself the early part of the year with M. D. Kopple, president of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company, states that the development of his sales plan has been making rapid progress.

WILLIAM C. HARTMAN

Distribution arrangements have been made with some of the most progressive representatives in the supply end of the motion picture industry, located in the larger cities.

Among these are: George Beck, of San Francisco, Cal.; A. D. Flinton, of the Kansas City Machine and Supply Company, Kansas City, Mo.; E. E. Fulton, of the E. E. Fulton Company, of Chicago, Ill.; the Omaha Film Exchange, Omaha, Neb.; the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; the Calehuff Supply Company, of Philadelphia, Pa.; David P. Cowan, of Boston, Mass. The New York territory is handled from the home office.

All of these distributors have purchased and installed machines for demonstrating purposes and are actively pushing the product of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company. Although the building-up of the sales organization of this company is not fully developed, nevertheless it is being built up rapidly.

Mr. Hartman also says that he has invented a new take-up device which will be of help to operators, known as "Takupade." This will be described later in these columns.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

The following pictures are released the week of Nov. 1.

"The Unexpected Reward." (Liberty.)—An average western, in which a prospector captures a bandit, without knowing who he is. The suspense is evenly maintained throughout, although the finale can easily be guessed. The photography is merely fair, but the scenes are very good.

"In and Out." (Banner. Two reels.)—There is little that is humorous in this number. It shows a girl, desirous of acting before the camera being cured by the exorbitant (to her mind) demands of the director. The cast is only fairly accomplished, while the story contains only a small number of laughs. The photography is below average.

"And He Came Straight Home." (Atlas.)—More humor could have been gotten out of this story. It appears fragmentary in its present state and the cast is not any too competent. It concerns the weird story concocted by bibulous hubby on his return to his wife.

"Hilary of the Hills." (Santa Barbara. Two reels.)—Hilary is the daughter of a miner. She falls in love with the mine superintendent. She sees him in company with a dance hall girl and is jealous. But she rescues him and his father from burglaring strikers and then discovers that the dance hall girl is his sister. Save for weakness in photography this picture is very acceptable. Hilary is played by an accomplished actress, while the rest of the cast renders consistent work.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Laurel of Tears." (Biograph. Three reels. Wed., Nov. 10.)—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"The God Within." (Biograph. Fri., Nov. 12.)—A Griffith reissue in which Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet are featured. A woman of the camp implores her lover to marry her, but he refuses and goes away, leaving her the scorn of the camp. Her baby is born the same day as that of a trapper's wife, but the latter, the "Angel" of the camp dies in bringing her little one to life. The deserted girl's baby is born dead and she is taken into the home of the trapper to nurse his child. Then the missing lover returns to make amends, but in the meantime, the trapper has learned to love the girl, and she is confronted with the necessity of choosing between the two men. She eventually selects the trapper. Lionel Barrymore, Claire McDowell and Charles H. Mailes are also in the cast.

"Cartoons on a Yacht." (Edison. Wed., Nov. 10.)—Another of the delightful series of Raoul Barre's animated cartoons. This time "The Grouch Chaser" serves to entertain a company on the deck of a yacht until an uncouth character is discovered as a stowaway. He is brought to the deck, fed, put to work, and finally started ashore, when he reveals himself as an actor demonstrating his ability.

"A Broth of a Boy." (Edison. Sat., Nov. 13.)—A boy of the tenements attracts the attention of a wealthy man, who keeps an eye on him and his mother. The boy finds a purse containing the money which a poor girl has obtained from her uncle to pay off the mortgage on their home, and uses part of the money on his sick mother. Policemen see him with the pocketful of money, and arrest him, but all is explained when the girl reports the loss to her uncle.

"Fifty-Fifty." (Essanay. Three reels. Mon., Nov. 1.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Despair." (Essanay. Three reels. Tues., Nov. 2.)—While this story is improbable at times, and has a tragic ending, it is yet likely to meet with more than usual favor. Edna Mayo, the central figure, assumes a rather usual part, but creates a memorable interpretation of it.

Lois Tanner is brought up among crooks, and, naturally enough, joins in their criminal exploits. While robbing the house of Spurier, a newspaper owner, Lois is caught in the act, but Spurier is so impressed by her beauty that he gives her a position on his reporting staff. One day Lois sees Spurier, whom she has learned to love, coming out of a church with his bride. In her agony of grief, she is about to commit suicide, but is prevented by a crook who loves her. She returns to her old life, and is again robbing Spurier's house when she is mortally wounded by a revolver shot, and dies in the arms of the man she loves.

Edna Mayo has in her support Bryant Washburn, Anna Walthall, Mary McAllister, and William H. Burns. The story was written and directed by J. Charles Haydon.

"Twice Into the Light." (Essanay. Three reels. Mon., Nov. 8.)—Will be reviewed next week.

"Wine, Woman, and Song." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 9.)—The title is familiar, and so is the story of this drama. G. M. Anderson has temporarily deserted his well known "Broncho Billy" type of acting to play the role of a sophisticated spendthrift. He proves himself to be more of a finished actor than the limited scope of his usual parts has indicated.

Jack Dobbs inherits a fortune and sets out to prove the truth of the adage concerning "A fool and his money." So successful is he in squandering his property that in a few months' time it is necessary for him to forge a check to keep up the pace. He is convicted of forgery, and after serving fifteen years, comes out a broken, worthless wreck.

Supporting G. M. Anderson are Lee Willard, Lloyd Bacon, and Harry Todd.

"The Fable of the Handsome Jethro, Who Was Simply Cut Out to Be a Merchant." (Essanay. Wed., Nov. 10.)—This George Ade fable, presented by an adequate cast, could have been very funny. Unfortunately most of the players were quite oblivious of Ade's subtler comedy. The picture contrasts the unsuccessful career of a business school Squab with the prosperity of his untutored brother who stayed on the farm. The moral is: "Drink deep, or cut out the Pierian Spring altogether."

Albert Martin takes the part of Jethro, Charles J. Stine is his father, and Royal Douglass is the brother. The picture was directed by Richard F. Baker.

"Cupid's Bath." (Essanay. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—A mildly diverting comedy, containing little that is new, but well-acted. Percy Ogler, a self-avowed lady-killer, is flattered and then ridiculed by Mrs. Bird and her friends. To get revenge, he steals the clothes of his tormentors when they are in swimming. A chase ensues, and the masher is finally jailed.

Those in the cast are Carl Stockdale, Bonnie Leonard, Marjorie Reiger, Lee Hill, and Leo White.

"The Indian's Narrow Escape." (Essanay. Fri., Nov. 12.)—A fairly interesting drama whose chief interest lies in the acting of two delightful little girls. An Indian half-breed (G. M. Anderson) is discharged by his employer when he is discovered fondling the ranchman's little daughters. Shortly after, the babies climb into a buggy, and when the horse runs away, their lives are imperilled. After a long chase the half-breed overtakes the runaway team and saves the children. The Indian is accused of kidnapping the girls, and is about to be strung up by the indignant cowboys, but the infants explain his innocence. Beside G. M. Anderson, there are in the cast Lee Willard, Eva Heazlett, and Ida and Ella McKenzie.

"The Second Son." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Nov. 13.)—Not yet shown for review.

"The Woman of the Sea." (Kalem. Three reels. Mon., Nov. 8.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Hoodoo's Busy Day." (Kalem. Tues., Nov. 9.)—A painter's scaffold is introduced to provide action and humor in this comedy. Bud is stationed at the windlass, and when Spike steals a pocketbook and flees underneath the scaffold, Bud is just lowering it. Painter, Spike, pursuing policeman and the woman who owns the pocketbook are mixed up in a free for all, until Bud attacks the windlass and hoists the painter out of the fray. Then, realizing who the fugitive is, he drops the scaffold back, and runs for safety himself. Bud Duncan, Charles Inslee, Owen Evans and Ethel Teare are in the cast.

"The Dream Seekers." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 10.) This is the last picture in which the late William H. West appeared. He was working in the final scenes when death overtook him suddenly, last September, and the picture was completed by a substitute. The story centers in an opium den, of which an aged musician is a frequenter. The proprietor gets his beloved violin from him in lieu of money, and in his attempts to regain it the musician attracts the attention of a young detective, who visits the place with him, and later when the old man and his daughter have gone there to get the violin and have been attacked by Ling Foy, the detective heads a raid which rescues them. Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson, Thomas Lingham and True Boardman are in the cast.

"When War Threatened." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—This country makes a secret treaty with a foreign power and the agents of a third endeavor to obtain possession of the document. One of the tricks consists of sending the daughter of the conspiring ambassador to a secretary of the state department, who is in love with her, to find where the paper is kept and devise means for getting it into the hands of the embassy. By pretending to admire herself in a hand mirror while her back is turned to the secretary, on his knees before the safe door, she learns the combination.

Although the conspirators succeed in getting the important instrument, they are foiled by the efforts of a girl engaged to an American secret service man. Neva Gerber is sweet and winsome in the role of his sweetheart.

"A Western Governor's Humanity." (Lubin. Three reels. Wed., Nov. 3.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Sacred Bracelet." (Lubin. Mon., Nov. 1.)—Captain Gault gives his fiancee a bracelet, and Pedro, a good-for-nothing native Filipino, steal it from the girl as she is out for a stroll on the outskirts of the army post.

Pedro is brought before an officers' court for trial, where he explains his motive for stealing the bracelet. Sometime before he had taken it from a sacred image on the altar of a monastery, and sold it to an officer, leaving for another army post. A priest threatened the native with excommunication unless the bracelet was returned. The native begins a hunt for its recovery, and at last sees it on the wrist of the girl. On learning the native's motive for the second theft, the court not only allows the native to go free but the accusing officer gives him the bracelet for return to the monastery.

"Up Against It." (Lubin. Tues., Nov. 2.)—Comedian Don and "his helper" George Egan, play the role of two indigent roomers suddenly confronted by an indignant landlady, who insists upon the arrears of three weeks' room rent or the room vacated by them with their baggage left behind.

At their wits' end to get money they decided to start a barber shop, if able to steal away with their belongings. Don dresses up in women's clothes and acts as a manicure, while his partner shaves the stubby chins of the villagers.

All the men want to have their nails cut and polished by the "manicure" and the partners are making considerable money until the wives of the customers get jealous and drive Don out of town.

There is no subtitle in the picture explaining in what part of the country it is possible to start a barber shop with less capital than the equivalent of three weeks' room rent, but the comedians evidently knew, for they went there—in the picture.

"The Cellar Spy." (Lubin. Sat., Nov. 6.)—A Billie Reeves comedy full of many spontaneous laughs. Billy, in the capacity of a suspicious husband, installs a dictograph and a "home periscope" to enable him to hear and see from the cellar all that goes on between his wife and others in the drawing room while poor hubby is away.

The wife, the object of unjust suspicions, learns by accident of her spouse's plan and decides to teach him a lesson. She discovers a water pail and a box of sandwiches placed by Billie in the cellar for use during the week he is supposed to be away from home on business.

The water and the food are salted until it is unfit for use, and Billie is locked in the cellar by a trick. Wifie's women friends are called upon to help punish him by dressing up in men's clothes and making love to her in range of the periscope.

"The Urchin." (Lubin. Fri., Nov. 5.)—Tommy lives in a garret with his grandfather, who owns a violin of unusually fine tone. The old man teaches Tommy to play as well as himself, but before his hopes in seeing the boy become a great violinist are realized death puts its cold hand on the old man. The wonderful instrument is stolen from Tommy by a tramp, who sells it to a pawnbroker. A music master in a wealthy family is struck by the appearance of the violin as he passes the window. He goes in and tries it. Struck by its extraordinary tone he buys it for his pupil, the daughter of the household.

Tommy, run down by an automobile, is taken to the same house, and during his convalescence recognizes in the sounds from the drawing room during a music lesson his own instrument. Tommy is played by Brooks McCloskey wieh a cleverness, promising considerable ability in the years to come.

"The False Hair." (Mina. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—The actions of Russ Johnson are the funniest things in this picture which makes an average comedy. Constance Johnson has the other lead. The photography throughout is very good, the story being fair enough to create a few laughs of itself.

"The Come-Back of Percy." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 8.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Chef at Circle G." (Selig. Tues., Nov. 9.)—This Western comedy is not revolutionary, but the action never lags, and Tom Mix is his usual amusing self. Rose Blake, the daughter of a ranch foreman, is in love with Tom, the cook, but her father frowns at the affair. Tom is discharged, and the cowboys have to prepare their own meals. The ensuing dissatisfaction, and Tom's exploits in capturing a bandit convince Rose's father that he might do worse than have a culinary son-in-law. Hazel Page, Sid Jordan, and Pat Chrisman are in the support of Tom Mix, who also directed the picture.

"The White Light of Publicity." (Selig. Sat., Nov. 13.)—This neat little story is pleasantly interpreted by a competent cast. Violet Lonsdale, an actress, is reported to have attempted suicide. Grace Reeves, a newspaper woman, is assigned to the story, and she follows Maury, a wealthy society bachelor, to a summer resort. There Maury confesses to her that he is the man in the case, but that no action of his was responsible for the tragedy. Grace informs him that she is a reporter, and intends to publish the interview. Her relations with Maury are misunderstood at the hotel, and she is asked to leave. When the society man discovers the situation, he compels the hotel clerk to apologize, and this chivalry causes Grace to resign her newspaper job, and to destroy her interview. She confesses to Maury that the suicide story was just a scheme of a press-agent to get publicity for Violet Lonsdale. The acquaintanceship of Grace and Maury has ripened into something very close to love.

Bessie Eyton takes the part of the reporter, supported by Edward J. Piel, Cecil Holland, and Betty Nathan. The drama was produced by Lloyd B. Carleton from the story of Charles B. Davis.

"Between Two Fires." (Vitagraph. Mon., Nov. 1.)—After experiencing rough treatment at the hands of two old maids, Finley Jones decides that bachelor life is the only life for him. William Shea, Flora Finch, Kate Price and Isadore Marcil play the leads in this comedy which is by W. A. Tremayne. It is a fair picture, and no doubt will be received warmly by the admirers of the leads.

"A Family Picnic." (Vitagraph. Wed., Nov. 3.)—A most laughable comedy by Frederic Chapin concerning Jones' troubles while picnicing with his wife and six children. Donald McBride and Kate Price are the leads, while McBride is the chief comedian. The adventures of poor Jones combined with the excellent treatment that the whole picture has received cause it to be exceedingly humorous.

"The Ebony Casket." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—An averagely laughable number made at the western Vitagraph studio. Myrtle Gonzalez, William Duncan and Alfred Vosburg are the principals. The comedy by Elsie Robertson has a strong vein of humor running all the way through it, while the cast is pleasing.

"The Sultan of Zulon." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 2.)—An excellent two reel comedy produced by Wally Van from a story by George Bronson Howard with a notable cast including, Hughie Mack, Donald MacBride and Dorothy Kelly. The story is full of humor and the subtitles are ludicrous in themselves. The cast is very clever. In fact the entire picture will be heartily received by the lovers of good, clean comedy.

"Beautiful Thoughts." (Vitagraph. Fri., Nov. 5.)—This comedy is not quite as good as Sidney Drew can do, although this fact by no means classes the picture as poor. Mrs. Drew, Florence Natol, Alice Lake and Marion Todd have the other important parts and contribute much to the general humor of the production. The story has a novel twist and gives Mr. Drew a considerable number of chances in which to display his inimitable expressions.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Mutual Weekly, No. 43." (Mutual. Thurs., Oct. 28.)—An unusually interesting collection of news events, gathered from widely separated points, is offered in this edition of the weekly. Stirring scenes of the recent troubles in Hayti include views of Port au Prince, pictures of the various leaders, and the signing of the peace proclamation; President Wilson casting his vote for suffrage; President Wilson laying the cornerstone of the memorial amphitheatre at Washington; the great suffrage parade in New York; and other events are pictured.

"Seeing America First." (Gaumont. Split reel. Tues., Nov. 2.)—Boston and its historic environs have been chosen by the Mutual Traveler in this release. There are attractive scenes in and around the Hub, and glimpses of famous old spots throughout New England. "Keeping Up With the Joneses" on the same reel, shows the McGinnisses moving to "sweller quarters" amid unusual difficulties.

"When Avarice Rules." (Centaur. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 4.)—The Bostock animals have been used effectively as leading factors in melodrama. The guardian of a pretty girl, finding his embezzlement of her estate is about to be discovered, hires an animal keeper to kidnap her. She is carried through an enclosure filled with lions to a hut in the center, and there left surrounded by the beasts. Eventually she is discovered and there is a thrilling rescue when the ill-treated wife of the trainer braves the lions and leads the girl to safetv.

"Alice of Hudson Bay." (American. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 8.)—Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood put a good deal of power into this story of the Canadian backwoods. The plot is good, the scenery appropriate, and the acting of the entire cast effective. Alice Gale, the daughter of a Canadian trapper, is engaged to Frank Moss, of the Mounted Police. A man named Martin forces his attentions on Alice, and she is unable to repulse him, for he knows the secret of her father's past. Years before Gale had been accused of a murder, and although innocent, he had fled. Martin finally notifies the police that Gale is wanted for murder, and it is Frank's duty to arrest his intended father-in-law. Alice goes to the jail, and after holding up her fiancee, makes him release her father. In a fight with Martin, Frank throws him over a cliff, and after a spectacular fall, the man lies injured at the bottom. Before dying, he confesses that he committed the murder, and that Gale is innocent.

Charles Newton, George Field, and Lizette Thorne give very capable support. The directing was done by Charles Bartlett.

"Her Adopted Father." (Beauty. Tues., Nov. 9.)—This dainty little drama has an appeal intensely human, and is exceedingly well done throughout. Marion Cosgrove, a young widow, is forced by circumstances to place Sue, her little daughter, in the care of a Mrs, Grimpus. One day, Mrs. Grimpus gets drunk, and when she abuses Sue, the little girl runs away. She comes upon Harte, a dissipated young bachelor, and claims him as her father. Harte, partially intoxiated, takes her home with him, and after a fruitless search for the parents, adopts the child. She transforms the drunkard into an earnest, sober man. Sue's mother is unable to locate her daughter, but finally traces her to Harte's home. After a short acquaintance with Marion, Harte is no longer Sue's adopted father, but her stepfather. Frank Borzage, Rosemary McMackin, Estelle Allen, Lucille Ward, and William Carroll comprise the well-chosen cast. The directing was in the hands of Archer MacMackin.

"The Double Cross." (Cub. Fri., Nov. 12.)—A wealthy young bachelor, notified that his aunt, whom he has never seen, is about to visit him, hires Jerry (George Ovey) to take his place. The aunt proves to be a dashing young woman, and the real nephew, catching a glimpse of her, attempts to resume his own place, but Jerry has replaced the servants with friends of his own, and the youth is thrown out. Only when a blue-coated policeman appears does Jerry weaken, and land in a cell.

"Almost a Widow." (Beauty. Sat., Nov. 14.)—The really clever players in this comedy did their best to make something out of nothing, but the weak plot hampered them greatly. The locale is a bathing beach, and the action shuttles between the attempt of a woman, titanically proportioned, to charm an unresponsive youth, and the love making of an amorous couple. Frank Borzage and Neva Gerber give their usual finished performance, supported by Lucille Ward, William Carroll, and Beatrice Van. Director John Dillon was in charge.

"This Is the Life." (Mustang. (Three reels. Sat., Nov. 13.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Man to Man." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 12.)—The plot of this release has served makers of Western pictures long and well—but presented in a new guise, and acted in an original fashion, the spectator forgets the antiquity of the theme.

Bill, the cowboy, and Pearl, the Eastern heiress, become fast friends, and their constant association ripens into love. Bill realizes the wide social gulf that separates them, and allows Pearl to go back East without speaking of his love. Later, learning the identity of the man who caused his chum's suicide by his swindling methods, Bill goes East to get revenge. He is about to kill the swindler, when he sees a picture of Pearl on the man's desk. At that moment Pearl enters the room, and Bill is told that she is engaged to the crook. But when she discovers the man's real character, she breaks the engagement, and later Bill and she find happiness on a Western ranch. Jack Richardson is Bill, and Anna Little plays the part of Pearl. Jimsey Maye takes the other important role. The director was Donald McDonald.

"To Rent Unfurnished." (American. Fri., Nov. 12.)—While not extraordinary in any way, this is yet an interesting picture. Kate has had a misunderstanding with her lover, Billy Tilton, and decides to rent a bungalow in the mountains, where she may think over the matter in solitude. Through an accident, Billy rents the same bungalow. When Kate hears Billy prowling around outside, she believes him to be a burglar. When he enters the house, she falls into his arms in sheer relief, and the opportune arrival of a minister permits them to take over the lease with a single signature. Vivian Rich and Walter Spencer play the young couple, supported by Harry Edmonson and Bessie Banks. Reeves Eason was the capable director.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"Pathé Weekly, No. 87." (Pathé.)—Winston Churchill speaks at London, urging munitions makers to renewed efforts; monument unveiled in commemoration of the Battle of White Plains; four baby lions born in New York menagerie; 6,000 troops parade through London streets in aid of recruiting; naval reserves at target practice on Lake Michigan; eye-witness' views of new French artillery at the front; school where 21 children burned to death, at Peabody, Mass.; new U. S. Dreadnought Nevada starts from New York for trials; Pathe fashions in color.

"Neal of the Navy, No. 11." (Panama.)—This chapter is entitled "The Dreadful Pit," and brings the characters to the Santa Maria mission, where Annette (Lillian Lorraine) has gone to obtain from the Fathers the formal grant to her property of Lost Isle. The conspirators arrive ahead of her and are persuading the monks to give them the grant, when Annette approaches. Ponto attacks her and attempts to throw her into a jaguar pit, but is thrown in himself and killed. Hernandez, the arch conspirator, attempts to steal the grant, and a fight ensues, in which Neal (William Courtleigh, Jr.) is in time to join with a squad of bluejackets. Hernandez flees, and is compelled to leave the paper behind.

"Bughouse Bellhops." (Phunphilms.) — Luke and Moke, with jobs as bellboys, nearly put a good hotel out of business. Through his eagerness for tips, Luke is batted around from guest to guest, and Moke is also having trouble, when a newly arrived couple attract their whole attention. The newcomers look "easy" until it develops that the man is a professional bouncer.

"Human Movements Analyzed." (Globe. Split reel.)—An unique and valuable study in motion, the first of several to be shown on the Pathé program. The actions of a man, running, walking, jumping, etc., are shown at normal speed, then six times slower than normal. There are many surprises in the development of everyday muscular processes. On the same reel "Children of the Netherlands," in color.

"Adventures of a Madcap." (Balboa. Four reels.) Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." (Pathé. Two reels.)—No. 6 of this series is entitled "A Trap for Trapp," and illustrates how an over-shrewd automobile dealer is made to pay $50,000 into the Wallingford treasury. Wallingford and Daw get Trapp's consent to the use of part of his store, and his name in an investment syndicate. Their advertising brings barrels of replies, each one containing a ten-dollar bill, and through the instrumentality of Onion Jones, Trapp is led on to buy out the new business for $50,000. Just as he takes over ownership and the promoters have left with the check, the police and postal authorities descend upon the establishment and seize it as a fraud. Max Figman, Burr McIntosh and Lolita Robertson are in the principal roles.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Universal Animated Weekly, No. 191." (Wed., Nov. 3.)—The fifty-ninth annual conclave of the Knight Templers in Chicago; the recently raided bomb arsenal in Weehawken, N. J., furnishes several interesting scenes; a view of the new U. S. S. "Nevada" departing from New York City; some remarkable war scenes from the French front; bits of the war game recently enacted around Boston, Mass.; Rosemary Theby and Violet Mercereau display a few fashions, while Hy Mayer's cartoons are as interesting as ever.

"The Frameup." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Nov. 8.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Those Little Kids and Cupid." (Nestor. Mon., Nov. 8.)—A clever little comedy, in which sister's suitor is plunged into all manner of troubles due to the mischievous pranks of young imps. Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry are the leads.

MEMBERS OF THE RIALTO STAR FEATURE COMPANY GROUPED ON THE LINER "MOHAWK" JUST BEFORE SAILING FOR JACKSONVILLE, FLA., WHERE THEY WILL WINTER FOR GAUMONT. IN THE FOREGROUND IS WILLIAM F. HADDOCK, GAUMONT DIRECTOR

"On the Level." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 9.)—Here is the prodigal son who turns out to be very much better than his petted brother. His scenes with the actress, posing as a slavey for the experience, are quite clever. In its entirety this is a very good, refined comedy, of the sort that will be welcomed by any gathering of people. Herbert Rawlinson is entirely successful as the abused son, getting a lot of real comedy from his part. Jean Taylor does good work as the actress.

"The Parson of Pine Mountain." (Rex. Tues., Nov. 9.)—Merely an average picture, with Ben Wilson, Joe Girard and Dorothy Phillips in the important roles. The minister causes the favored suitor of the girl he loves, to reform.

"Getting His Goat." (Imp. Tues., Nov. 9.)—This comedy is discconnected as to the continuity of action, but nevertheless it highly pleases. It has some good situations, while William Garwood and Violet Mersereau in the leading parts do very good work.

"Silk Hose and High Pressure." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 10.)—This comedy, featuring Billie Ritchie, Alice Howell, Louise Orth and Henry Bergman, was reviewed in a previous issue under another date, which has been changed. It is a very funny picture, quite respectable, and containing several slapstick innovations.

"Hearts That Are Human." (Big U. Three reels. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—This is a melodrama made by an outside company. The cast is quite competent and the direction noticeable for its attention to detail and human interest touches. It depicts the rapid rise of a girl with a talented voice to a position of great popularity.

"Actors from the Jungle." (Powers. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—This interesting subject was compiled by Paul Bourgeois, chief animal trainer at Universal City. It shows practically all the inmates of the studio jungle, together with interesting happenings in their day's work. Undoubtedly a reel that everyone will enjoy.

"Honor Thy Husband." (Powers. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 12.)—In which a gentleman farmer tames his butterfly wife by feigning poverty. Harvey Gates wrote the scenario, which has been produced in an attractive style by Lynn Reynolds, with Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn playing the leads. The photography and scenes are very good, while the pleasant nature of the story makes the two reels thoroughly enjoyable.

"Promissory Notes." (Victor. Fri., Nov. 12.)—A strong drama with the eternal triangle as its basis, written and produced by Jacques Jaccard and labeled "Little Stories of Real Life, No. 1." With a simple and familiar plot, Jaccard has deftly managed to make a very fine picture. Its climax is surprising and well introduced. No familiar faces appear.

"Father's Lucky Escape." (Nestor. Fri., Nov. 12.)—A familiar but popular plot, enacted with a good appreciation of its comic possibilities by a cast including Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry, causes this comedy to appear very enjoyable.

"What the River Foretold." (Bison. Three reels. Sat., Nov. 13.)—One of Joe Franz's Western dramas, from a story by Peter B. Kyne. Franz's knowledge of the relative values of thrilling action and homely realism serve him in good stead in these three entertaining reels, for he has mingled the two properties in a skilful way. The picture has a most interesting story, based on an Indian legend, while the photography, scenes and incidental touches are truly excellent. Sherman Bainbridge, Edythe Sterling and Jack Holt have the important parts.

"The Masked Substitute." (Laemmle. Two reels. Sun., Nov. 14.)—This drama has originality and convincing action. It is filled with a number of pretty scenes, and the varying character of the costumes worn by the players adds greatly to the scenic beauty of the picture. The two romances which the story possesses are woven together in a pleasing style and during the time they run their course they will maintain the interest. William Dowlan, Gloria Fonda and William Quinn have the principal parts.

"Liquid Dynamite." (Rex. Sun., Nov. 14.)—Excellent scenes and photography enhance this simple romance that has a real laugh for its end. It is very light but most pleasing. Cleo Madison and Tom Chatterton are the principals.

"His Twentieth Century Susie." (Joker. Sat., Nov. 6.)—The village sport sees a picture of Susie who is coming to town, but he discovers Susie's pretty picture was taken about fifty years since, and so he receives a terriffic shock. William Franey and Gale Henry in this comedy by Allen Curtis do excellent work. It is one of the best of recent Jokers.

"A Day at Midland Beach." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 30.)—This was made by an outside company. It features a man who is very clever and daring in taking tumbles. The story isn't much but the pranks resorted to by the various characters give it a most funny tone.

An Apology To The Trade

Following the publication of numerous news items concerning the acquisition by this company of the AUGUSTUS THOMAS COLLECTION OF STANDARD TWO DOLLAR PLAYS, propositions have been received by wire and letter from a large number of distributors seeking exclusive territorial rights for long periods.

Realizing a false impression has been created we hasten to assure the trade that, contrary to precedent, the Raver-Thomas productions will not be sold until fully completed and offered for review and criticism by the press.

By this method, both buyer, renter, and exhibitor may determine the importance of a Raver offering without being obliged to make a blind investment, as has been the custom in the past.

Fully appreciating the keen interest shown by the flattering overtures already made, we prefer, however, to abide by our own original policy.

COUNT J. VON BERNSTORFF PRAISES THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE'S WAR PICTURES

Kaiserlich Deutsche Botschaft, German Embassy, Washington, D. C., Sept. 30.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—This afternoon I had the great pleasure of seeing the moving pictures presented by The Chicago Tribune, which give the German side of the war. I remember very well the visit you kindly paid me when you started this undertaking and I wish to congratulate you on its great success. Thousands of people have seen the pictures and enjoyed them, so that you have really done very good work. Very sincerely yours,

J. BERNSTORFF.

PATRIOTISM APPEALS

All good Americans must see this picture to realize the necessity of preparedness. If you have pro-German sympathies, you want to see what Germany is doing. If your sympathies are with the Allies these pictures show you the terrific war machine the Allies have to fight. There are no other pictures like these in existence. 6,000 feet of startling truth of this terrible war.

Fifty per cent. of the proceeds to the Blinded and Crippled Soldiers Fund.

20,000 TIE UP BROADWAY TO SEE REAL WAR MOVIES

Police Reserves of Four Precincts Busy Opening Traffic Through Record Crowds Headed to Forty-fourth Street Theatre—25,000 Turned Away Is Manager's Report.

So huge a crowd was drawn to the Forty-fourth Street Theatre yesterday and last night that Capt. Ormsby of the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station had to call the reserves of three precincts to his aid to hold the throngs in order and keep Broadway from being swept off its feet.

The attraction at the theatre had been announced in full-page advertisements in The World and other morning newspapers—that moving pictures of the actual German battlefields would be shown. The time was fixed between 11 o'clock in the morning and 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

that some waited fully five hours for their chance to get into the theatre.

The house seats 1,400 persons, and C. W. Willets, manager for F. Ziegfeld jr., producer of the pictures, announced at 11 last night that 12,000 persons had seen the war "movies" since 10 in the morning and fully 25,000 persons had been turned away.

"We expected the pictures to draw crowds, naturally," he said, "but we had no idea of anything like this."

He further announced at midnight that he would keep the theatre open until from 2 to 3 o'clock in the morning in order that the thousands still waiting might have a chance to see them.

33—Suppose an extra rheostat equal to a 35 volt drop at 50 amperes which is the current flowing on 110 volts through a rheostat as in Fig. 20, is not at hand, and it is necessary to connect both sections of the rheostat in series with an arc on 220 volts, as illustrated in Fig. 25, what will be the increase in amperes over 50?

Ans.—We know from the foregoing that we are shy 35 volts in resistance drop; if the line is 220, subtract from this 35 which leaves 185 volts which could be the line voltage with two arcs operating at 60 to 65 volts with 50 amperes flowing. We now discover by simple arithmetic that if 50 amperes are forced through a given circuit with a potential of 185 volts, then through the same circuit a potential of 220 volts will force slightly under 60 amperes through the circuit.

In other words, if you should take the ordinary 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostat, put it in water and connect it in series with an arc maintained at 60 to 65 volts on a 220 volt line, you will have a current flow of about 60 amperes. This might be considered satisfactory for an emergency.

34—What would be the effect on the rheostat when operating it as illustrated in Figs. 23, 24 and 25, as compared with the conditions when operating as illustrated in Figs. 20, 21 and 22?

Ans.—It must be appreciated and understood that by using the connections as illustrated in Figs. 23, 24 and 25 the rheostat has to do practically double the work: therefore, it will have to dissipate double the energy in the form of heat.

This condition will increase the temperature of the water which, if already at the boiling point, will evaporate faster and will require more frequent renewal or displacement.

This is about the only effect the increased load on the rheostat will have.

The trouble of renewing the water which is evaporated, due to boiling in a rheostat of this kind, is not very troublesome, but if running water should be at hand, you can understand that such a scheme as this will work very nicely because all you have to do is to let the hose play fresh, cool water into the container and the warm water will rise to the surface and spill over the edge of the bucket or container, thus keeping the rheostat nice and cool without any injury or danger whatsoever.

BRYSON TAKES 90-DAY LEAVE OF ABSENCE

AFTER arranging with Carl Laemmle, as president of the Laemmle Film Service, of Minneapolis, for a ninety-day leave of absence, to take a much-needed rest. J. V. Bryson expects shortly to leave that city for California, where in all probability Mrs. Bryson and he will spend the winter. Mr. Bryson's leave of absence took effect October 29.

His plans upon his return from the coast are undecided. He expects, however, to give some of his time to the advancement of the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company, which has received the northwestern distributing agency for Powers and Simplex machines. The company will also carry a complete line of supplies.

J. V. Bryson is one of the best-known and most popular film men in the Northwest, and the good wishes of the trade go with him in whatever work he undertakes.

IDAHO COMPANY, FORMED TO OPERATE THREE BOISE THEATRES

THE Idaho Amusement Company was recently incorporated in Boise. Its officers are: Ernest Noble, president; Theo Johnson, secretary and treasurer, and Dave Farquhar, vice-president. Mr. Johnson is manager of the company and personally looks after the operation of the three theatres, the Isis, the Strand and the Comic.

The total capacity of the three houses is 1,700, and in the past month there were several occasions when the theatres were all filled. At the Comic, the Pathé service is used; at the Isis, the Paramount service exclusively; and at the Strand, the Metro and Triangle

Notes on the Theory and Nature of Light

By H. W. ANDEM

Converging and Diverging Lenses Are Here Discussed with Their Own Sub-Divisions—the Human Eye and Its Lens Construction—The Eye a Projection Machine, with the Retina Playing the Part of the Screen—What Is Necessary for a Perfect Image and Why the Image on the Retina Is Always Inverted

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the fifth installment of the series on Light, by Mr. Andem, and contains information of value to every operator. The articles are based on the lectures of the English scientist, Professor Tyndall, who was probably the greatest authority on the subject in Europe during his life. The views of the English investigator in natural science are accepted today without practically any modification by later scientists.

LENSES divide themselves into two classes, one of which renders parallel rays convergent, the other of which renders such rays divergent. Each class is divided further into three kinds of lenses, which are named as follows:

Converging lenses.—First, double convex, with both surfaces convex. Second, plano-convex, with one side plane and the other convex. Third, concavo-convex (meniscus), with a concave and a convex surface, the convex surface being the most curved.

Diverging lenses.—First, double concave, with both surfaces concave. Second, plano-concave, with one surface plane and the other concave. Third, convexo-concave, with a convex and a concave surface, the concave surface being the most strongly curved

A straight line drawn through the center of the lens and perpendicular to its two convex surfaces is the principal axis of the lens.

When a luminous beam falls on a convex lens, parallel to its axis, its refracted rays will meet at a point in the axis behind the lens. This point is the principal focus of the lens. The principal focus is the focus of parallel rays.

The rays from a luminous point placed beyond the focus intersect at the opposite side of the lens, an image of the point being formed at the place of intersection. As the point approaches the principal focus its image retreats from it and when the point actually reaches the principal focus, its image is at an infinite distance.

Divergent Rays

If the principal focus be passed and the point come between the focus and the lens, the rays after passing through the lens will be divergent. Producing them backward, they will intersect on that side of the lens on which stands the luminous point. The forcus here is virtual. A body of sensible magnitude placed between the focus and the lens would have a virtual image.

When an object of sensible dimensions is placed anywhere beyond the principal focus, a real image of the object will be formed in the air behind the lens. The image may be either greater or less than the object in size, but the image will always be inverted.

The positions of the image and the object are always convertible.

A spherical lens, from its nature, will not bend all the rays that fall upon it to the same focus. The rays which pass through the lens near its circumference are more refracted than those which pass through the central portions and they intersect earlier. Where perfect definition is required it is therefore usual, though at the expense of illumination, to make use of the central rays only.

This difference between the central and circumference focus of the rays is called the spherical aberration of the lens. A lens so curved as to bring all rays to the same focus is called aplanatic; a spherical lens cannot be made aplanatic.

Parts of Human Eye

The human eye is a compound lens, consisting of three principal parts: the aqueous humor, the crystalline lens, and the vitreous humor.

The aqueous humor is held in front of the eye by the cornea, a transparent horny capsule, resembling a watch-glass in shape. Behind the aqueous humor, and, immediately in front of the crystalline lens, is the iris, which surrounds the pupil. Then follows the lens and the vitreous humor, which last constitutes the main body of the eye.

When the optic nerve enters the eye from behind, it divides into a series of filaments, which are woven together to form the retina, a delicate net-work spread as a screen at the back of the eye. The retina rests upon a black pigment, which reduces to a minimum all internal reflection.

By means of the iris the size of the pupil may be caused to vary within certain limits. When the light is feeble the pupil expands, when it is intense the pupil contracts; thus the quantity of light admitted into the eye is, to some extent, regulated. The pupil also diminishes when the eye is fixed upon a near object, and expands when it is fixed upon a distant one.

The pupil appears black; partly because of the internal black coating, but mainly for another reason. Could we illuminate the retina, and see at the same time the illuminated spot, the pupil would appear bright. But the principle of reversibility, so often spoken of, comes into play here.

The light of the illuminated spot in returning outward retraces its steps, and finally falls upon the source of illumination. Hence, to receive the returning rays, the observer's eye must be placed between the source and the retina.

But in this position it would cut off the illumination. If the light be thrown into the eye by a mirror pierced by a small opening, then the eye of the observer placed behind the mirror, and looking through the small opening, may see the illuminated retina The pupil under these conditions glows like a live coal. This is the principle of the instrument used by eye specialists and termed an ophthalmoscope by which the interior of the eye may be scanned, and its condition in health or disease noted.

Eye a Projection Machine

In the case of albinos, or of white rabbits, the black pigment is absent, and the pupil is seen red by light which passes through the sclerotica or white of the eye-ball. When this light is cut off, the pupil of an albino appears black.

In some animals the black pigment is displaced by a reflecting membrane. It is the light reflected from this membrane which causes a cat's eye to shine in partial darkness. The light in this case is not internal, for when the darkness is total the cat's eyes do not shine.

The eye may be said to be a projecting machine with the retina playing the part of the screen. For perfectly distinct vision it is necessary that the image upon the retina should be perfectly defined; in other words, that the rays from every point of the object looked at should be converged to a point upon the retina; to have the object in perfect focus on the screen.

A strange but a true statement is the fact that the image upon the retina is inverted.

If the letters of a book held at some distance from the eye be looked at through a gauze veil, placed nearer the eye, it will be found that when the letters are seen distinctly, the veil is seen indistinctly; conversely, if the veil be seen distinctly the letters will be seen indistinctly. This demonstrates that the images of objects at different distances from the eye cannot be defined at the same time upon the retina.

Principal Refraction

Were the eye a rigid mass, like a glass lens, incapable of change of form, distinct vision would only be possible at one particular distance. We know, however, that the eye possesses a power of adjustment for different distances. This adjustment is affected, not by pushing the front of the eye backward and forward, as when focusing the objective lens of a projector, but by changing the curvature of the crystalline lens. In other words, by substituting another objective lens of a different focus according to the distance of the screen.

The principal refraction of the rays of light in crossing the eye occurs at the surface of the cornea, where the passage is

Operating Electricity — Questions Answered — Repairing Equipment

Edited by J. H. Hallberg

Who Will Answer All Questions You Send in, No Matter How Simple or How Difficult

LIGHT TROUBLES THOUGH MACHINE IS EQUIPPED WITH GOOD CONDENSERS

H. B. Cavalier, N. D.:—I have been a reader of Hallberg Helps in Motion Picture News and they certainly are a great help to operators.

We are using an Edison Model B machine and just got it overhauled, as it flickered a lot. It is better now, but still flickers more than it should. We are using a two-wing inner shutter. The light is poor. It varies too much, dark and bright all the time in the first show. The second show is better. I have no way of telling ampere used. We have direct current. We get our light from the electric light plant.

We are using the best condensers on the market, the Meniscus bi-convex, and still these condensers throw a light which is blue in the corners, although I have fetched the lamp up pretty close. But one thing I am sure of, and that is that the light is not very good at times, and if I want to put on more current the light jumps.

Now, if you could let me know what the trouble is, through your Hallberg Helps, I would be very much obliged to you.

Ans.—The Edison Model B uses an inside shutter operating between the film and the motion picture lens. The shutters for this type of machine are always of the two-wing type, and if you desire to reduce the amount of flicker, you may decrease the illumination on the screen by increasing the width of the shutter blades. However, a properly adjusted shutter, that is one which is so set that one of the blades, usually the wider one, interrupts the light during the entire period the film is in downward motion, ought to give you a fairly flickerless picture.

On some of the older type machines, the inside shutter has one wide and one narrow blade. If yours is so equipped try to widen the narrow blade only by riveting or by other means; fasten cardboard or thin metal to both edges of the narrow blade so as to make the width of the anrrow blade more nearly or like the wider one.

Your lighting trouble is evidently due to the use of inferior quality or too small carbons. I understand you are supplied with direct current from the electric light plant. Perhaps the voltage on the line is lower than it ought to be at certain times, but from your description I am rather of the opinion that either your carbons are of inferior quality or they are too small or in other ways unsuitable to the particular conditions you have to meet, or your rheostat may be defective or overloaded.

It would not matter how good the condensers are that you put in as long as your light at the crater of the upper carbon is not maintained brilliant and steady. You cannot expect a perfect field of light on the screen with an unsteady or imperfect crater or source of light. However, when you have a good light, there should be no reason why you should not be able to focus the light from the arc on the aperture in such a way that you will secure a flat and uniform field of light on the screen.

If, as you describe, you cannot put the arc forward enough or pull it back far enough to overcome either the crown corners or the ghost in the center, I would suggest that you make a few tests with the carbons temporarily set in such a way that you will have the arc as far forward or as far back as you want it for the test.

Another matter, which you may have overlooked is the position of the lamp house which carries the arc and the condensers relative to the aperture plate.

My experience with the Meniscus bi-convex condenser combination is that in most instances the foci of these combinations has been higher than for the usual plano-convex condenser combinations; therefore, it would seem that the arc would have to be farther away from the condensing lenses than under ordinary conditions.

But, without knowing the length of your throw and the size of the picture and the focus of the condenser combination which you are now using, I cannot give you definite advise as to the position of the lamp house, relative to the aperture plate on the mechanism.

I have an idea that when you make a few experiments along this line, and perhaps change the size of carbons, and maybe the style, that you will secure much better results. However, I shall be glad to answer further questions, but I must have more detailed information.

CURRENT TO IGNITE GAS CHARGE IN GASOLINE ENGINES WHEN STARTED ON DRY BATTERIES

Colonel Yochem, Pepin, Wis.:—In October I received an inquiry from this gentleman for information as to the possibility of using the current from a direct-current generator to ignite the gas charge in a gasoline engine after it had once been started on dry batteries.

In the issue of October 16 of Hallberg Helps, the question and my answer, in which, however, certain questions were answered, appeared. I herewith print another letter giving more information

"Your answer in Motion Picture News of October 16 at hand. Have a 60-bolt direct-current generator, compound wound; 4 horsepower standard 6-inch batteries."

Ans.—After due consideration of your problem, I have come to the conclusion that it would not be practical to use the power from your 60-bolt direct-current generator for the jump spark ignition.

The only way in which this could be accomplished would be for you to purchase a storage battery of the three-cell type, giving about 6 volts, to be used in place of the dry batteries. A battery of approximately 50-ampere-hour capacity would be about the right size.

If your electric generator is constructed on the principle of constant current regulation, such, for instance, as is employed in generators made exclusively for motion picture projector arcs, or for the charging of storage batteries, where as a general rule no rheostat is required between the arc and the generator, then you could charge your battery directly from the generator which would automatically reduce its voltage from 60 to about 7 or 8 volts, which is the required potential for charging a 6-volt battery.

If, on the other hand, your generator is of the constant potential type, using a rheostat between the arc and the generator, then the charging of the battery would have to be done through a rheostat which might have a capacity for 10 amperes or so, which would be about the right charging rate for a 50-ampere battery. You understand, there would be considerable waste in charging this way, because the rheostat would consume the difference between 60 volts and 8 volts, which is about 52 volts, and at 10 amperes this would mean 520 watts.

Looking at the proposition from all points of view, I would say that unless you put in a storage battery, to be charged by a special small generator made for the purpose, which may be driven from the pulley of the gasoline engine, I would suggest that you stay on your dry batteries as the cheaper and safer proposition

While on the subject, I may say that the reason for not using the 60-volt current for the spark coil, is that the spark coil requires only about 6 volts. Therefore, you would have to have a resistance in series which would consume about 54 volts, and the delicate make-and-break devices for a jump spark coil would not be able to break this high voltage current without undue sparking with consequent overheating and destruction of the make-and-break contacts.

MAJOR INVENTS LENS FOR PROJECTOR ARCS

During the past week I have had the pleasure of making tests on a new one-piece condenser. The results are a great improvement and I predict that before long all modern machines and all up-to-date operators will use only one-piece condensers. The illumination on the screen during the test was remarkably uniform and of a very agreeable soft kind. There was absolute absence of the usual light and dark spots, and one thing which I noticed in particular was that the lamp house may be moved back and forth or the lamp house may be brought close or further away from the condenser without affecting the results on the screen more than a very small percentage as compared with the ordinary condenser combination.

This invention I consider of greatest importance at this time, because it is long ago since improvements were made in the lens system for projectors. The inventor and patentee of this new one-piece condenser is Milton Major, and in co-operation with Mr. Major is the glass expert, C. E. Morine, who has produced a non-breakable glass for the purpose.

The following points are given in favor of the one-piece condenser:

First.—It eliminates the waste of light by having light rays traveling through only one piece of glass, ground to a peculiar shape to give the same results as the method now in use with two or more condensers.

Second.—It eliminates the waste of light on account of the number of surfaces which the rays of light come in contact with, and have to pass through, which causes a retarding effect or refraction of considerable light, and also the waste of light in the space between two or more condensers in use with the present methods.

Third.—The ordinary two or three piece condenser has two surfaces for each lens exposed, upon which dust or silica from the carbons can be deposited. The retardation or loss of light due to this deposit which is in some instances of a white opaque kind and in other instances is almost black, can be estimated to be in some instances as much as 50 per cent. where the operator does not clean the condensing lenses every day.

It is not generally known, but it nevertheless remains a fact, that particles of dust and silcia not only retard the light, but, due to reflection, interferes and distorts the light. On this account especially when we consider that some of the machines have the condensers mounted within the lamp house where the dust deposit is much greater than if the condensers were set in a dust-proof case this one-piece condenser is of great value and benefit.

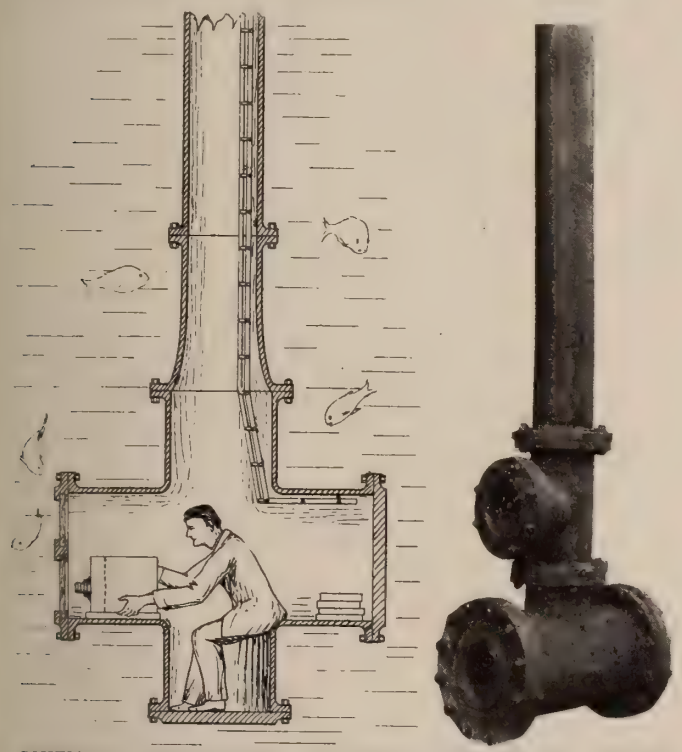
The inventor states that he will produce the same effect as with the Miniscus bi-convex combination in a one-piece condenser within a short time. This will further improve the results which I think are already very satisfactory.

Fourth.—On account of the peculiar tint in the glass this new one-piece condenser throws off sun rays which do not strain the eyes of the audience while looking at the picture.

Fifth.—Another feature is that the arc does not have to be so close to the condenser in order to produce the proper field of light, thereby eliminating considerable blistering on the surface of the condenser, which is caused by the sputtering of the arc, which is usually found after usage of condensers as used at present.

The new one-piece condenser is not ready for the market as yet, but will be very soon. The sales policy and the price at which it will be sold will be announced in the pages of MOTION PICTURE NEWS within a short time.

BAIRD MACHINE INSTALLED IN ISIS THEATRE. DENVER, WITH $5,000 ORGAN



S. L. BAXTER, owner and manager of the Isis theatre, Denver, Colo., has just installed a Baird motion picture machine. This, in connection with the $50,000 full orchestra organ, recently installed, will make it one of the most modern theatres in the West.

JENKINS' UNDERSEA CAMERA WILL TAKE PICTURES OF MARINE LIFE ANYWHERE

MOTION pictures under water have a scintillating, semi-mystic appearance of striking fascination for most of us. Not only the beauty of these pictures attract but the strangeness of the surroundings have a compelling interest.

The machine shown in the accompanying cut was designed for the easy production of pictures under water. The device is one of two types recently patented by C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington, D. C. The particular one shown contains the camera and the inverted periscope, whereas the other one, illustrated by the line sketch, is intended to contain the operator as well as the camera.

Such a machine, of either type, sunk in the clear water of a sheltered bay, of which there are hundreds on the west and southern coasts of the United States and contiguous islands, would constitute a playground equipment for the production of a great variety of wonderfully interesting pictures.

SCHEMATIC CROSS-SECTION AND PHOTOGRAPH OF THE JENKINS "UNDER WATER CAMERA"

The machine illustrated is made up of two chambers, each with a heavy plate glass window. The lower chamber contains the camera, which looks out through its window, and is electrically driven by suitable leads up the vertical shaft of the machine to the operator's hand where an electric switch controls the camera, starting and stopping it at the will of the operator.

The operator looking down through the long tubular body of the machine into an inverted reflecting perioscope behind the upper of the two windows is able to observe the action being photographed, and by that means keeps the camera on the object or objects of the picture.

The device may be lowered from the side of a vessel and used at any depth desired; or the larger type, which furnishes a work-chamber for both the operator and his camera, can be arranged as a fixed installation in some sheltered spot along the seacoast in such a position as to cover the white, pebbly, underwater floor, which latter is used in exactly the same way that the studio floor of a land installation is used.

A director gifted with an imaginative mind will fit this undersea studio with furniture, fixtures and surroundings, and people it with clever artists for the making of pictures of compelling attractiveness to the motion picture fan.

We understand that it is Mr. Jenkins' intention to arrange for the exclusive use of this machine by some one of the large producers, and it would seem that such an arrangement would give the producer an advantage over his fellows not lightly to be dismissed.

from air to a much denser medium. The refraction at the cornea alone would cause the rays to intersect at a point nearly half an inch behind the retina. The convergence is increased by the crystalline lens, which brings the point of intersection forward to the retina itself.

A line drawn through the center of the whole eye to the retina is called the axis of the eye. The length of axis, even in youth, is sometimes too short; in other words, the retina is sometimes too near the cornea; so that the refracting part of the organ is unable to converge the rays from a luminous point so as to bring them to a point upon the retina.

In old age there is a flattening of the refracting surface of the eye causing the rays not to be able to be brought to a point on the retina, in both these cases the image would be formed behind the retina, instead of upon it, and hence, the vision is indistinct.

This defect of vision is remedied by holding the object at a distance from the eye, so as to aid in bringing the convergence of the refracted rays nearer to the retina. In this case the lens for correcting the vision would be of the convex-surface shape.

The eye is also sometimes too long in its axis. The rays entering the pupil are converged so as to intersect before reaching the retina. This defect is remedied either by holding the object very close to the eye, so as to augment the divergence of its rays, thus throwing back the point of intersection; or, by placing in front of the eye a concave lens, which produces the necessary divergence.

Distance for Horizontal and Vertical Objects

The eye is not adjusted at the same time for equally distant horizontal and vertical objects. The distance for distinct vision is greater for horizontal lines than for vertical ones. Draw with ink two lines at right angles to each other, the one vertical the other horizontal: see one of them distinctly black and sharp; the other appears indistinct, as if drawn in lighter ink. Adjust the eye for this latter line, the former will then appear indistinct, as if it was drawn in lighter ink.

The spot where the optic nerve enters the eye, and from which it ramifies to form the net-work of the retina, is insensible to the action of light. An object whose image falls upon that spot is not seen. The image of a clock-face, of a human head, of the moon, may be caused to fall upon this "blind-spot," and, when this is the case, the object is not visible.

To illustrate this point, proceed thus: Lay two white discs on black paper; or, two black ones on white paper, with an interval of about 3 inches between them. Bring the right eye at a height of 10 or 11 inches exactly over the left-hand disc, so that the line adjourning the two eyes shall be parallel to the line adjoining the two discs.

Preserving these proportions as to size and distance, objects of far greater dimensions than the small disc may have their images thrown upon the blind-spot, and be obliterated.

EROS AMUSEMENT COMPANY INSTALS FEASTER MACHINES IN ITS HOUSES

BYRON CHANDLER, president of the Feaster Film Feed Company, is at present in Chicago for the purpose of closing the Middle Western territory agency for its non-rewind machine.

The Eros Amusement Company, having used the Feaster non-rewind system in the New Amsterdam theatre, 229 Eighth avenue, New York, with absolutely satisfactory results for the past three months, has now ordered the installation of the machine in the Morningside and Regent theatres, and the new Forty-fourth street theatre is to be equipped as soon as it is completed.

It is persistently rumored that two of the strongest financial combinations in the moving picture trade are making strenuous efforts to effect an affiliation with Byron Chandler, Inc., United States distributors of the Feaster non-rewind machines. The Feaster device eliminates rewinding of film in the projection booth and has created intense interest wherever it has been shown.

DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN OPERATORS AND OMAHA THEATRE GIVE PUBLIC WRONG IMPRESSION OF PICTURES

TROUBLE between the operators' union and the motion picture exhibitors of Omaha has reached a critical stage, with daily squabbles in police court and the wrong sort of an appeal to public interest.

In front of the Princess, Fourteenth and Douglas streets, in the heart of the city, during the last two weeks, men have taken shifts marching up and down the sidewalk in front of the theatre, wearing banners, inscribed with the words "Do not patronize this theatre. Unfair to organized labor."

And all because the managers have in their employ an operator who at one time had trouble with a union elsewhere, is prejudiced against the unions, and is too good an operator for the management to release.

The pickets at times have buttonholed passersby, talking to them about the injustice being done by the theatre management. When they first began their march they were arrested. Since then, off and on, they have been taken to court.

The law gives them the privilege, they claim, of walking the sidewalk. But it does not permit them to buttonhole people.

In a recent parade a big float, representing the motion picture operators' union of the city, bore the advice not to patronize certain theatres because they were unfair to organized labor. The Central Labor Union never meets but that the operators have a story of trouble to tell.

What the ultimate outcome is, no one knows. But everyone knows the public, through it all, is getting the wrong impression of the motion picture business.

16,000 SCHOOL CHILDREN, TEACHERS AND PARENTS SEE PICTURES PROJECTED BY A MOTIOGRAPH, 1916 MODEL

M. H. LIVINGSTON of Peoria, Illinois, in a letter to O. F. Spahr, vice-president and general manager of the Enterprise Optical Company of Chicago, makes the following statement:

"Recently in Peoria, Illinois, 16,000 school children, teachers and parents were shown certain motion pictures under the auspices of the National Safety-first Society. It was necessary to run four complete shows in order to handle this vast assemblage. In order that absolute safety should be assured, a complete investigation of various machines was made, the choice being finally sifted down to a Motiograph, 1916 model.

"This machine was then set up in the middle of the balcony with a throw of one hundred and thirty-five feet from the stage.

"Mr. Brownell, who conducted the entertainment personally, endorses this model Motiograph for its wonderful efficiency and absolute satisfaction which it gave. It was also endorsed by the local business men and by the Peoria Railway Company officials."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has in its various issues presented articles on the subjects of the lobby as a whole; the architectural treatment of the lobby; the placing of the booth; brass railings; display; the floor covering, and so forth. An article on this subject must of necessity be somewhat in the nature of repetition and will therefore also be brief, being rather suggestive than detailed.

There is no greater adjunct to a successful picture house than a large lobby wherein a crowd of people might wait for friends or for the turn of the show. If the lobby is large, the public is not adverse to waiting. They rather enjoy the use of the place to meet their friends and neighbors. But if it is too small they will not come for the second show, or coming and seeing it crowded they will pass on to your competitor or make for their homes, disappointed patrons.

The emergency exits to side alleys and to rear streets cannot be depended upon for use as the general exit. The people will insist upon returning to the street from whence they came. Therefore the entrance and waiting lobby must not be used as the general exit, but additional one or two-exit lobbies must be provided, at least for use at the turn of the show. It is, however, better to use the same at all times in like manner.

Importance of Lobby Floor

The flooring of the lobby is of vital importance. It must be a sanitary floor, non-slipping, easily washed, and a good resistant to wear.

Vitrified porcelain tile and clay tiles of various kinds have been used to great extent. They are most serviceable and in themselves absolutely non-absorbent, but if the lobby has any grade, they will be found dangerously slippery in wet weather, especially to persons wearing rubber heels.

Marble and terrazzo floors have the same qualities as tile floors, but are not quite as slippery.

There are upon the market a number of floors that are more serviceable.

There is nothing better and none more expensive than tiles made of rubber. They have a wonderful wearing quality, are made up in various colors and designs, and have all the required qualities.

There are a number of makes of cork floors which are supplied in any shape desired and in any colors. They are even softer in tread than rubber tile and present a nice appearance. They do, however, show the dust quicker.

There are a number of makes of tile floors made of battleship linoleum, of compounds of cork and other material. They are generally much less expensive and have great sanitary and wearing values.

Battleship Linoleum for Lobby

In the lobby where expense is a very serious item, a high quality battleship linoleum may be laid. The material comes in great widths and it can be glued down to the under floor.

Such floors do not present artistic surfaces. They do not lend any interest to the lobby. Such floors might be brightened by a border of the same material laid in pattern.

Brass railings brighten up a lobby, but should be placed with much judgment. They must be kept polished every day, and if a large amount of brass work exists about a house, there will be quite an expense attached to keeping it clean. A brass rail in front or about the ticket booth is ornamental as well as useful. They are necessary to separate the lobby into entrance and exit aisles in case the lobby is used for both purposes. They may be used to separate the entrance from the exit lobbies, if such arrangement is planned.

What can we say to the exhibitor about the placing of ticket booths that is new?

It is an indisputable and established fact that the only advantageous place is right out on the street sidewalk or as near thereto as the law or the exigencies of the plan will permit.

THE STRAND IS THE FIRST THEATRE ON LONG ISLAND TO MAINTAIN A 25-CENT ADMISSION PRICE

THE Strand, Hempstead, N. Y., one of the most up-to-date motion picture houses on Long Island, is one of a chain in the O'Connor-Radin Circuit, comprising the Arcade, Lynbrook, the Lyric, Magnet and the Century, in Mineola.

The theatre measures 100 by 150 feet, is ventilated by the exhaust system, and is thoroughly heated by steam in the winter. It is a six-hundred-seat house and the chairs were supplied by the

EXTERIOR OF STRAND, HEMPSTEAD, L. I., M. RADIN, GENERAL MANAGER

American Seating Company. A Silveroid screen is in use at the theatre, and the length of throw is 100 feet. A Simplex machine has been installed for the projection of the pictures.

A seven-piece string orchestra furnishes the music, and a Steinway piano is part of the musical equipment. The lobby has been made a source of striking publicity with its brass and easel frames. Three shows a day are given by the management, and ten cents for children and fifteen cents for adults are the admission prices afternoon or night.

The theatre uses the Associated and Mutual programs with a selection of features from Paramount, Fox, Equitable and V-L-S-E. Six people are in the employ of the Strand. The theatre is located on the principal business street.

Mr. Radin believes in extensive advertising, making use of three thousand programs distributed at a time through the mail, and taking out space in the local newspapers and the Brooklyn Times.

The theatre is patronized by the elite of the neighborhood. It is nothing to see ninety or a hundred automobiles in front of the Strand on an average night, many families from the exclusive Garden City section driving over for the performances.

Matthias Radin, manager of the Strand, and junior member of the O'Connor-Radin Circuit, was a member of the New York bar, practicing law for about ten years. When he took charge of the house it was known as Karl's theatre, and was not in condition to attract the better patronage of the surrounding country. It had uncomfortable wooden benches and played cheap vaudeville once or twice a week at five and ten cents.

Mr. Radin laid a sidewalk, replaced the benches with cosy chairs from the American Seating Company, installed an orchestra and put on the productions of feature companies, charging as high as twenty-five cents at times.

"The Eternal City," "Hypocrites," "Cabiria" and features of similar importance were exhibited to gain the best clientele. It was in the nature of an experiment, and he became known as the pioneer of Long Island in running Broadway features. But his plan soon proved a success.

Harry Davenport, of the Vitagraph, presented the management with three hundred feet of the American flag, which in conjunction with President Wilson's picture, is shown at each performance, and elicits applause.

At a recent run of Neilsen's "Guarding Old Glory," Manager Radin inaugurated a clever advertising stunt. This consisted of stacking guns in conspicuous places, and having children march at a bugle call of fifty regulars whose camp was located on Hempstead plains. The flag was saluted, the orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and then the picture was presented upon the screen.

Mr. Radin expects to close for the Triangle service, and his theatre has the distinction of being the first on Long Island to charge twenty-five cents admission.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS NOTIFIED OF POSTER-TIME EXTENSION FROM FIRE MARSHAL

EVERY Michigan exhibitor is being sent the following letter from A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Michigan Exhibitors' League:

"We wish to inform you of some of the things accomplished by the league. No doubt many have felt the injustice of the law governing the use of mounted paper, and possibly some have wondered why steps were not taken to have the ruling on this subject modified.

"At a meeting of the league, recently held in Detroit, a commitee was appointed to wait upon the State fire marshal and see what arrangements could be made towards having him change his rulings. Through the efforts of this committee an extension of ninety days was granted for the use of mounted six-sheets and the privilege of using mounted paper on cloth from one sheets up to and including three sheets was secured.

"The subject was then taken up with the film exchanges and more than half of the managers agreed to mount such paper as the fire marshal had consented to allow them to use. Other subjects are being taken up by the league and while it requires both time and money everything is moving along nicely.

"Mr. Exhibitor, we want you with us. We need your help and co-operation. Are you not willing to join us and help us fight your battles? Kindly give this your immediate attention and let us hear from you."

B. L. Converse, of Owosso, is president of the league. Mr. Moeller, secretary, lives at Howell, Mich.

CALIFORNIA

CONSTRUCTION work has been commenced on a brick theatre building on Twenty-fourth street, near Castro, San Francisco, for H. Stewart. The house will have a seating capacity of more than one thousand.

Alterations are being made to the Poppy theatre, Sixteenth street, between Valencia and Mission streets, San Francisco, and when these are completed it will be conducted under a new policy at an increased admission price.

Preparations are being made to open the old Broadway theatre, on Broadway, Oakland, as the Republic theatre, with vaudeville and moving pictures. It will be managed by F. Hesse.

The Rink theatre at Lindsay is now under the management of F. Hyde, who is making a number of improvements in preparation for the winter season.

Contracts have been awarded for the construction of the new theatre at Oakland, for the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, and work is under way.

The Crystal theatre, at Wilmington, has been leased by H. S. Taylor, formerly manager of the Columbia theatre at Long Beach, and George V. Barrett, who opened the house on Monday, October 25.

Miss Dixon, who with her mother owns and conducts the Dixon theatre at Ventura, recently spent several days in Los Angeles making future bookings. Miss Dixon is one of the few women in California to own and operate a motion picture theatre.

CANADA

J. R. Muir, controlling the Dominion theatre here, as well as the Dominion theatre and the Dominion Film Exchange in Vancouver, has taken over the Majestic theatre, Victoria, B. C., and will use second-run features. J. M. Robertson, resident manager of the Dominion, will also have charge of the new house.

Al W. Gillis, manager of the Columbia theatre, Vancouver, B. C., showing vaudeville and moving pictures, is now in charge of the local Pantages theatre, replacing E. D. Graham, who has been transferred to another house on the circuit.

The National Amusement Company, operating ten moving picture theatres in Vancouver, B. C., and neighboring cities, has just taken over the lease of the Princess theatre in Vancouver, B. C. This was one of the early successful houses here, but the attendance lately has dwindled down a considerable extent. W. P. Nichols, general manager of the National company, states that he will immediately inaugurate a feature policy.

The Maple Leaf theatre in Vancouver, B. C., one of the National Amusement Company's houses, which was recently closed for alterations, is again open, vastly improved by the changes which have been made. A second projection machine (a new Simplex) has been installed in the operating room.

W. A. Smythe, manager of the Empress theatre, and Charles E. Couche, of the Rex, Revelstoke, B. C., have combined their interests and are now conducting the houses on a partnership basis. INDIANA

The Crystal theatre at Columbus, which has been repaired and remodeled, will shortly reopen.

The exhibitors of Elwood are planning to open their theatres on Sunday, because an evangelistic campaign has made such serious inroads in their receipts.

Because of a diphtheria epidemic at Carlisle all picture shows and public gatherings were forbidden by the authorities.

Frank Forrest has rented the opera house at Boonville, because his lease on the Hepp building has expired and his new theatre is not completed. The Hepp building is being remodeled and will be opened as a picture show.

It is to be built early next spring by G. W. and W. H. Mart, comprising the firm of Mart & Son, proprietors of the Star moving picture theatre and managers of the Colonial theatre.

The new building is to be located on the lot fronting on the west side of Main street, between Fourth and Fifth avenues, where a frontage of 30 feet has been secured.

J. E. Bryant, head of the Plaza Theatre Company, which owns a number of theatres throughout the state, has announced that his company has closed a deal for a three-story house in Sioux City, on Pierce street, near the business center. The theatre will be in a remodeled building, on which he has secured a ten-year lease. St. Elmo Bateman will help him in managing it. A feature of the new house will be three pipe organs, one on either side of the big screen arch, and the third, an echo organ, on the third floor, in a sort of loft above the audience. Rebuilding will cost about $40,000 and is under way already. It will seat 1,200.

George W. Christy has disposed of his Electric theatre at Maquoketa, a motion picture house, to Messrs. Morrison and Hadley, of North English. The house will be remodeled, during which time it will be closed.

D. Roy Craig has leased the Grand theatre in Dexter, and opened after making alterations.

From Lewiston comes the word that Stephen J. Bogrett, director of the Lewiston theatre, the largest in the state, is meeting with gratifying success. He was succeeded in Bangor by A. P. Bibber, who was formerly in Lewiston.

A moving picture theatre is soon to be erected at City Square, Quincy, by a syndicate. The structure, which is to be known as the Alhambra theatre, will have a seating capacity of 2,000. It is to be built on the site of what is known as "The Central," now owned by Col. Henry L. Kincaide. The present building will be razed. The lot, which is of irregular shape, contains 14,930 square feet, having a frontage on Hancock street.

The Maxine opened last February, under the management of Ed V. McGrath, and has proven a successful venture. At the above meeting it was also voted to at once enlarge the seating capacity by the installation of 250 seats. The total seating capacity will then be 1,200. The Maxine has no balcony.

"Gentlemen:
"On Sept. 2nd we installed two of your No-rewind machines in our theatre, and am writing you to let you know that we are very well pleased with them. They do all you claim for them and more, too. We do not have any more of the old trouble with the film tearing as they eliminate all the tension and give a much steadier picture.

J. J. Shubert, connected with the Shubert and Garrick interests throughout the country, spent a few days in St. Louis recently, looking after his theatrical enterprises. Mr. Shubert is interested in a west end theatre which he may possibly buy.

Another St. Louis theatre is under construction at 12th and Clinton streets. The house will be thoroughly modern, with the latest improvements in equipment and furnishings. The intention is to show only motion pictures, and to open about Christmas.

The Ritz, on Sixth, near Olive street, St. Louis, is nearing completion and advertises to open early in November. The Ritz will be one of the high class down town theatres.

The Lorelei theatre, formerly the big natatorium of the same name on Olive street, near Taylor avenue, St. Louis, opened on October 30, with a program of features. The Lorelei has been converted into a handsome showhouse, with 1,400 seats and wide promenades at the sides that will accommodate a much larger crowd.

The Palace theatre, at 1310 Franklin avenue, St. Louis, was robbed of $1,200 on Sunday night, October 24. Scherrer Brothers, who operate both the Palace and the Mikado, 5999 Easton avenue, and kept the receipts from both houses in the strong-room of the Palace theatre Building. It is supposed that the thief was in the building while the show was going on. The theatre carried $1,000 burglar insurance.

The Empress theatre, of Kansas City, that has been making good with moving pictures, was sold at public auction on October 23, to J. A. Stringer, for $30,250. The sale came after the refusal of Judge Burney, of the circuit court, to entertain a motion to hold up the sale. The motion was filed by attorneys for the United theatres, who declared that if the sale was held up the theatre could be leased to advantage. The theatre had been in the hands of receivers for several months prior to the sale. It is located at 12th and McGee streets, in the heart of the city.

M. Shirley has completed plans for a theatre at Twenty-fourth and Farnam streets, Omaha. It will seat 700. Mr. Shirley's elaborate plans are indicated by the fact he intends to spend at least $200 a week for service, which is unusually large in Omaha. His son, George, was to be the manager, but he and his young wife suffered a tragic death last week from gas asphyxiation.

James Haire has taken over the Rex theatre at Albia. He has also leased the opera house, gaining control of every show house in the town.

Hugh McCaffrey is having a new theatre built at Thirty-third and Leavenworth streets, Omaha, at a cost of $10,000. It will be 42x100 feet in size. Another new house is being constructed at Sixteenth and Locust streets.

NEW YORK

William H. Brelsacher and A. I. Wolf leased for the Kalvit estate the Jones theatre, in Fulton street, Brooklyn, for ten years, at an aggregate rental of $100,000, to Nathan Bernstein. After extensive alterations the theatre will be devoted to vaudeville and moving pictures.

The new B. S. Moss theatre, which is being erected in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, will be known as the Park, and not the Washington, as originally planned. It will be ready for occupancy about December 1 and will present a policy of minor vaudeville and feature pictures. The seating capacity is two thousand.

The Park will be the sixth playhouse controlled by Mr. Moss in Greater New York.

Architect Frank P. Keller has prepared plans and bids have been taken for the erection of another large moving picture playhouse in Main street, Monongahela.

TENNESSEE

A. M. Lusk and Frank Dowler, proprietors of the Alcazar and Picto theatres, Chattanooga, have combined their business interests

The Bijou theatre, Chattanooga, one of Jake Wells' houses, has been sold to John Twinam, a local capitalist, for a small sum, and will be placed under the management of Howell Graham, one of the pioneers of the picture business in that city. Five nights a week will be devoted to Triangle and Fox films, while road shows will occupy the house on the remaining days. A Bartola Grand is being installed and the entire house completely renovated. The admission is twenty-five cents.

The Royal, a 1,200 seat house, is being erected in South Chattanooga on East Main street, to be managed by Bloch and Weiner, two young business men of the south. A Photoplayer is to be installed to supplement the orchestra. Two Powers 6A machines are to be purchased, while the art work is being done by the Decoration Supply Company, of Chicago, Ill. The house is expected to be opened by the first of December.

Max Alper is remodelling a building on East Main street, South Chattanooga, making it suitable for the installation of a motion picture theatre. It will be known as the Strand and will seat 500.

TEXAS

Austin's new Majestic theatre was opened October 11 under the management of F. Gale Wallace. The theatre was erected by Austin capital and cost $10,000. It is built of steel and concrete and is modern in every respect.

The "Six-Day" Moving Picture theatre, which was opened on West Broad street, Texarkana, recently, under the auspices of the Texarkana Pastors' Association, has changed hands, the manager announcing that the new venture was not receiving sufficient patronage to pay expenses.

VIRGINIA

The Trenton theatre, Lynchburg, now offering a picture program, is in charge of James F. Jackson, former manager of the Savoy and Alcazar theatres in Atlanta. J. Bruffey Trent, owner and general manager, has decided to take a rest and turn over the house to Mr. Jackson to operate along such lines as he sees fit. Mr. Jackson is a theatrical man of wide experience, and in Lynchburg he is no stranger, as he managed the Trenton theatre several years ago before he went to Atlanta.

THEATRE BUILDING BOOM UNDER WAY IN MILWAUKEE IN DOWNTOWN DISTRICT AND THE OUTSKIRTS

MILWAUKEE is experiencing a building boom in downtown photoplay houses that has seldom if ever been equalled in the history of the city. One 1,200-seat house, the Merrill, is now rapidly nearing completion, while work will soon be started on another house seating 1,500 in a few weeks.

This is the house to be erected by Otto Meister of the Vaudette theatre. In addition to these, three others are said to be contemplated. One of these, it is understood, is to be located on Grand avenue, directly east of Sixth street, within a few hundred feet of the Strand theatre.

Another is expected to be erected on Grand avenue, near Fourth street, opposite the Alhambra theatre. The third is the long proposed theatre on the Plankinton site, on which work is expected to start in the near future. It is understood that the rental on this last named theatre, which will seat well over two thousand, is set at $55,000 a year for a ten-year lease and that it has been taken over by Chicago capitalists.

The outskirts are experiencing a like activity. Architect C. W. Valentine reports that he is preparing plans for the erection of a theatre to be built on Kinnickinnic avenue, near Howell avenue. The house is to have a seating capacity of eight hundred. The new State theatre being erected by M. Rice, on Twenty-seventh and State street, is rapidly nearing completion.

When finished it will have cost $45,000. The equipment will include a Kimball organ, oil paintings in the lobby. In addition to these, there are the four new houses recently reported in the News. All in all, it looks as though the coming winter is going to be a record one in photoplay circles.

KENTUCKY COMPANY ADDS ANOTHER THEATRE TO ITS STRING

THE Broadway Amusement Company, of Louisville, Ky., has added another house to its long chain of motion picture theatres in taking a lease of the Capital theatre at Frankfort, Ky.

The theatre is owned by the city of Frankfort, and a lease for three years with the privilege of renewal for two years has been signed by Mayor Ruppert for the city, and Fred J. Dolle, president of the Louisville company.

The rental will be $2,450 a year, the highest ever obtained for this house.

Improvements which are being made on the theatre are nearing completion and possession will be given the lessees on December 1. It is the intention of the Louisville company to give the people of Frankfort the best that can be obtained in motion pictures. The work of exterior decoration will be begun early in November.

Plans call for an elaborate electrical display. The balcony over the sidewalk will be studded with lights while the lobby will be ablaze at all times. Comfortable new chairs are now being installed and an orchestra will be one of the features of the house under the new management.

One of the upper floors will be reserved exclusively for colored patrons.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

"Go Easy on Your Effects" Is Safe Rule When in Doubt

Combination of Piano and Drums Is Dying a Sure and Much-Deserved Death—Day Has Passed When Exhibitor Thinks it Is Necessary to Have a Drummer Capable of Imitating Everything from Fly Walking Across a Table to a Falling Mountain

IT should be gratifying to the musician to know that the only reason for the ridiculous combination of piano and drums is dying a sure and much deserved death. Not so long ago the exhibitor thought that his entertainment was lacking if he did not have a drummer who would imitate everything from a fly walking across a table to a falling mountain.

The picture theatre audience of today has very rightfully changed this and is not reluctant in their criticism of all effects which disrupt or are discordant with the music being played. This is a triumph for picture theatre music, for the old piano and drum method was never appreciated, and only tolerated for the want of that which in musical contrast would show the old method in its true and ridiculous light, namely, picture music. Picture effects are still possible and very often necessary for a proper musical portrayal of a feature photo-play, but never so important that good music should be sacrificed to make possible these few necessary effects. In other words, while the drum with its many effects stood as number two in former picture theatre music combinations, it is now relegated to 8, 9 and 10 where it rightfully belongs.

Any exhibitor can conclusively satisfy himself as to this fact by a diplomatic canvass of his audience. When effects can be made a part of your musical program and synchronize with the screen action, it is always appreciated.

When the Drums Are Effective

Care should, however, be taken that the effect does not predominate, but becomes part of the music. For instance, in hunting scenes, when horses gallop on screen, horse hoofs can be very effectively used when the music played is a 6/8 number (light and lively) played in tempo with action on screen. For horses trotting, as is usual in western dramas, a 2/4 lively number, or what is known as a Western Intermezzo, when player, makes horse hoof imitations effective. When done in this manner the effect becomes part of the musical composition, assisting the music as well as creating appropriate screen suggestion. Horse hoofs in country scenes should be made on a pad, for city scenes on a block or marble slab. The latter when continued for any length of time becomes disturbing, it being the more noisy of the two.

In such instances it is better omitted entirely, for when you begin a suggestion it should be carried to the end. Chimes or church bells can always be harmoniously made, and with care in your musical selection they are only disturbing when overdone. Continuous effects of too long duration are never good.

Train effects when well done are always appreciated, but should never be made to music other than gallops, hurries or music illustrating excitement. It is not good in waltzes or any slower tempos. When a train effect is made without music it is very effective and much appreciated. To illustrate: You are playing a slow movement and a train effect is suggested on the screen. You stop your number, the train effect is made alone, after which you make your segue into another number. In other words, you make the train effect your point to segue from one number into the other.

When done in this manner, the effect becomes a solo introduction to the succeeding number, which never fails being appreciated. Doorbells, telephone bells and all quiet effects never disturb the music. Noisy effects of all kinds are bad, unless the music is lively and noisy and the screen action very exciting and tumultuous.

Be Sure Effects Are Correct Imitations

Always be sure that your effects are correct imitations; otherwise it matters little how or when you use them, they will be ridiculed and instead of assisting the picture you in reality burlesque it. No matter how important an effect may be, it is better omitted than imitated imperfectly.

The most important in effect playing is their placing in the picture. There are two unfailing rules that govern this.

The first is to use them when they become a part of your music at any time when suggested on the screen.

The second: Avoid all distinct euphonious effects unless they are positively essential to the picture thought, or when it accentuates the succeeding action on the screen.

To illustrate the second rule, the screen may show a character ringing a doorbell, after which we are shown an interior scene, showing the action interrupted by this doorbell.

In this instance the imitation is essential to both picture thought and the succeeding action. Had the door been immediately opened by a servant the effect, while permissable, would have had no picture value and should have been omitted, saving the effect for better opportunities. Picture effect playing requires a great amount of forethought and should be properly plotted in advance, if it is expected thereby to assist the picture, for it seldom assists the music. Until your advance information gives you correct picture points for their use, it is a safe rule to "Go easy on your effects."

MUSIC FOR "TRILBY"

F. J. M., Augusta, Ga.—I am very sorry but I have no program for "Trilby" such as you ask for, as I have only seen a very short part of the picture. There are music suggestions for the picture "Trilby" furnished by the World Film Company.

Never having used them I cannot tell you how good they are; nevertheless, all suggestions should assist to some extent.

PLAYING IMPROVES BY USING MUSIC PLOTS

N. J. S., Greenville, Pa.—Not having made a music plot for the feature you mention, I could not send it to you. Glad to hear that you find an improvement when playing from music plots. We are always glad to hear from our readers and are willing to help at all times when possible.

MUSIC ADAPTED FOR TRIANGLE PLAYS IN SAME WAY LIBRETTOS ARE THEMED FOR OPERATIC MUSIC

ARRANGING music for a great five-part film drama such as "The Coward," the Civil War play produced by Thomas H. Ince for the Triangle, is a most difficult task. William Furst, general director for the Triangle music, believes it has been accomplished with a great deal of skill and, in fact, marks a revolution in the accompaniment of screen drama.

The scenes of the play are laid in the South, the source of many beautiful melodies that have found a permanent place in the heart of a nation. Many of these melodies, however, are time worn and if not appropriately introduced would detract from the dramatic value of the story.

Mr. Ince therefore instructed J. E. Nurnberger, the Inceville musical director, to arrange the score that would carry the theme of the story and still retain the rare values to be found in the Southern songs.

Mr. Nurnberger then adopted the plan of thematic music for the several hundred scenes of the piece, exactly as librettos are themed for operatic music. He spent more than two weeks in the projecting room and worked out the themes carefully.

WURLITZER IS AWARDED TWO GRAND PRIZES AND TWO GOLD MEDALS AT PANAMA FAIR

THE Rudolph Wurlitzer Company has just been awarded two Grand Prizes and two gold medals at the Panama-Pacific Exposition for the Wurlitzer piano, Wurlitzer player piano, Wurlitzer unit orchestra and Wurlitzer harp. This is an honor of which the company is proud, since, to them, it shows what has been accomplished by the company since its inception by Rudolph Wurlitzer, Sr., in 1856.

At this time Mr. Wurlitzer descended from a long line of musical instrument manufacturers, founded the business which has grown steadily until now the Wurlitzer warerooms are to be found in twenty-four large cities. The factory, located at North Tonawanda, New York, occupies sixty acres.

It is worthy of note that the "One Price—No Commissions" selling plan is absolutely adhered to throughout the sales organization.

The Wurlitzer unit orchestra, which is the most popular instrument manufactured by this company, among the motion picture theatre owners, is controlled entirely by one man and contains the various elements found in a full symphony orchestra.

LOEW'S NEW KIMBALL ORGANS

Marcus Loew says in advertising his new three manual Kimball orchestral organ at the Globe Theatre, Boston: "Not only the biggest, but the best. It has taken over a year to build, but it was worth waiting for."

If you order a Kimball organ now it won't take so long for delivery as it has in the past.

Loew's Orpheum Theatre, New York, seating 2,500, also has a new three manual Kimball, of which a competent critic said in print: "The instrument is a marvel in theatre organ construction. Built under the most unsatisfactory conditions (i. e., in an awkward position), the musical results obtainable cannot be surpassed. . . . . These organs (Globe and Orpheum) have an improved automatic solo player equipment that is the last word in organ perfection."

The Loew organization is noted for careful and intelligent buying. "A word to the wise . . . . ."

The Distinguished Artiste ..... and Beloved Idol of the American Stage

Henrietta CROSMAN

Known to Millions for her Delightful Characterizations in such Famous Stage Successes as "All of a Sudden Peggy," "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," "Mistress Nell," "Nance Oldfield," and many others.

Now appearing in the Absorbing drama

"The Supreme Test"

"A WORTHY vehicle for a great actress" is the opinion of this fine play expressed by leading film critics at a private showing. The story is that of a wealthy woman interested in the slums, who, through the loss of her fortune is forced to make her home with the poorest of the poor.

It is so good that if released by any feature concern you would be asked a PROHIBITIVE RENTAL PRICE. The picture is worth all any Feature concern might ask, but at their prices YOU could not make a cent of profit.

TO ENABLE YOU TO MAKE MONEY WITH THIS FINE PLAY the Universal has placed it on the regular Universal Program at a REASONABLE PRICE—a price you will be glad to pay, because the picture will draw the crowds and the rental figure will allow you a LIBERAL PROFIT. Write or wire your Exchange immediately for booking, before it is too late. DO IT NOW.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Read what the press says about it:

Evening Mail:

"And now that she has given herself to the screen she seems likely to add all the 'movie' fans to her admirers. For Miss Farrar can act. Act better before the camera in fact than on the stage at the Metropolitan."

New York Tribune:

"It is a pity that Geraldine Farrar can sing, for she is a remarkable movie actress. Undoubtedly Miss Farrar has never acted so well as she does in the screen version of 'Carmen.'"

New York World:

"Miss Farrar makes her part vivid and and red blooded. It is real acting."

New York Times:

"As for Miss Farrar, let it be said that among movie actresses she is one of the best. When, if ever, she appears in another picture, the movie patrons will crowd to see it because they cherish her as one of their own. There is every indication that new millions will soon be calling her 'Our Geraldine.'

"This new movie star 'registers,' as the film folk have it. There is no doubt at all about that. She brings to the richly-colorful performance a degree of vitality that animates all the picture and offers a good illustration of the difference between posing and acting for the camera."

New York Press:

"The Strand Theatre, wherein the film version of 'Carmen' with Geraldine Farrar in the title role, is being shown this week, was the centre of a veritable mob all day yesterday. As a screen actress the beautiful Geraldine leaves little to be desired."

Motion Picture World:

"It goes without saying that such a Carmen as that of Miss Farrar will be enjoyed and admired everywhere. The entrance into the motion picture field of an artist of the renown and talent of Miss Farrar is bound to raise the prestige of the screen; it will benefit the industry generally."

Motion Picture News:

"In 'Carmen' Miss Farrar has estabtablished herself as one of the most remarkable actresses thus far seen in motion pictures."

Every person in your town will want to see this great picture. Released on regular Paramount Program. Arrange at once for bookings.

The Advertising department of the Kriterion is being built with as much care and thought as is being given to every other Kriterion move.

Joseph S. Edelman whose work on World Film advertising was widely noted, will direct the Kriterion policy.

Mr. Edelman has made a reputation for himself by his work for Joseph P. Day, Robert H. Ingersoll, World Film Corp., etc.

He is an expensive man—but his direction insures an advertising backing worthy of any big feature organization and unique in regular program activities.

Quality—in men, material and production is the watchword of the new Kriterion.

The men behind it—business men who have succeeded in unusual measures,—know that nothing lasting can be built, except on a QUALITY basis.

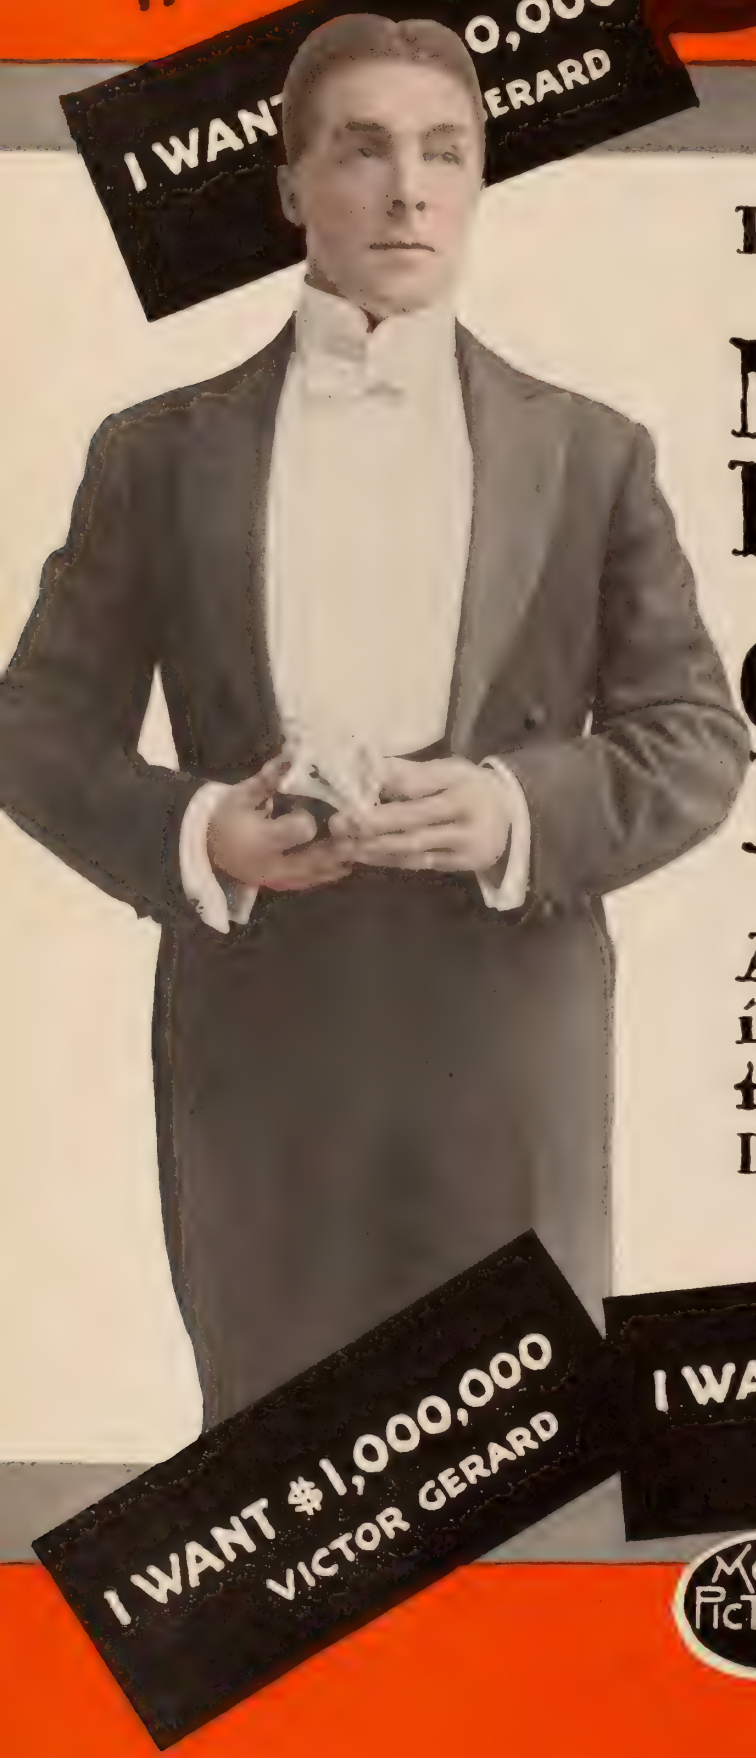
Dear Sir:-

Just a word of acknowledgment of the excellent program your company has provided the Majestic Theatre recently.

Starting with "THE SOUL OF A WOMAN" which we ran an entire week in October, as we do all of our pictures, beg to advise you that this picture broke all attendance records for our house. This week we are presenting ETHEL BARRYMORE in "THE FINAL JUDGMENT", and from present indications this picture will do equally as well if not better than THE SOUL OF A WOMAN.

Our patronage is composed of the very highest class of Detroit's theatre going public and from what we have seen of Metro productions, we believe it is the best and most consistent program for a theatre of this class.



Yours very truly,
Majestic Theatre Company.

Specialization

WE have written before of the close analogy between the producing of pictures and the publishing of periodicals.

The more the art and business of the pictures develop the clearer and closer this analogy becomes.

IT is rather amusing to witness the advent of the new producer in this field. I mean the producer who has no previous and thorough picture experience.

He announces that he is going to make pictures—just pictures. And it is concievable of course, that the one magnet which draws him out of other fields, his own, in particular, is a belief that "there are millions in pictures."

IN the latter connection and to digress for an instant from a serious theme; the following conversation—which actually occurred—is illuminating.

"There's a lot of money in pictures," said a promoter warmly.

"Yes," said his listener, sadly: "There's a lot—of mine."

BUT to return—the tyro producer starts to make—just pictures.

And one is forced to ask—why just pictures? Why not just shoes, or clothing or anything else? But, for better illustration since they are so closely allied—why not just magazines, or newspapers?

The possible profits in magazines or newspapers are probably greater, for crowded as the publishing field is it is not nearly so crowded today as the picture producing field.

"BUT," says the tyro, "I don't know anything about the making of magazines. That's specialized work."

Fine; and so is—or rather so should be—the making of pictures.

Picture production requires—to succeed—the same specialized experience and knowledge, and above all the same highly specialized ability to cater successfully to a public clientele as is always found in the successful publisher of magazines and newspapers.

AND now we come to another point of great consequence. Not only is the parallel field of publishing a highly specialized one—like pictures—but also it is specialized within itself.

Each of the successful newspapers in New York City has a district publishing policy, a very definite aim, and therefore a separate and distinct clientele of readers.

YOU do not find Mr. Ochs of the Times and Mr. Hearst aiming to turn out just newspapers or just the same kind of newspapers. Each of these gentlemen has a very definite policy—to interest a certain type of reader. They had these policies years ago, when each started, in fact. That's why they started publishing—because they had policies.

Today their papers have individuality, unmistakable in form and content. They have separate clienteles, which overlap little if at all. They specialize—making special publications for special readers. And they are successful!

IN the magazine field we have the Atlantic Monthly, the Red Book, the Argosy, the Literary Digest, Good Housekeeping, the Country Gentleman, etc., etc.—each one of which is a special publication, with a special clientele of readers—and each successful!

There are magazines with much larger circulations, non-specialized magazines, nearly all of which are losing money, some very heavily, because they are all aiming at the very same class of readers.

The Saturday Evening Post has acquired over ten million weekly readers. Just so, some picture company will acquire a ten—or more—million circulation each day for its pictures—though only because it has the grasp of public taste that Editor Lorimer has and the organization ability possessed by Publisher Curtis.

BUT we cannot all be Saturday Evening Posts—nor is this huge circulation wholly necessary to success.

Just as some magazines and newspapers with small circulations are greater successes commercially than many with large distribution, just so is it possible for the picture producers to specialize—and succeed.

The main thing is to have a policy, to specialize, to produce some one kind of pictures and those mighty well—better than any one else can. Thus will be acquired an individuality to production, a definite purchasing field, and the ability to fix cost of production according to distribution.

THERE is not an overproduction of pictures today; but rather an overproduction of the same kind of pictures. For certain kinds the market goes begging.

Wherever you find successful production you find a definite policy of production; on the other hand, some concerns are producing such varied quality and character of pictures that the latter are actually competing with and hurting each other.

THIS specialization will come about. It must. Then we shall also have—what we need—namely, specialized picture theatres; distinguished by the character of their bills, just as stage theatres are now, just as magazines and newspapers are now.

But the successful producer then will be the producer who started specializing now. WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

Censorship "On Approval"—To Be Sent Back If Not Found Satisfactory

MOTION picture censors were appointed, ostensibly, to be public protectors and guardians, but they can very easily—and in some notorious instances they have—become public nuisances.

The censor, because he assumes that he stands "in loco parentis" to the theatregoer, is very apt to make the mistake of thinking that he can treat him on all subjects and to any extent he pleases, as a father would a small child.

It is for him to regulate to the smallest detail what the public shall see and what they shall not see, and if there is any protest, the censor puts on a "papa-knows-what-is-best-for-you" attitude, much as though he were dealing with a small urchin who wanted more candy than was good for him.

THIS is not the first time we have said this. It is not the first time, either, that we have reminded the censors that the public is not in an infantile or juvenile stage of development and that the quickest, as well as the surest way of antagonizing them, is to assume they are.

When a newspaper as representative as the Philadelphia Public Ledger, however, thinks it necessary to give the same advice to the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, the advice is worth reprinting.

HERE it is, in the form of a recent editorial:

A MORAL CODE FOR THE MOVIES

"The State motion picture censors have cut out a rather large job for themselves if they expect to hold the movie producers down to a hard and fast set of specifications on the subject of what is moral and what is not moral. For example, in the code of "standards," which they have just prepared, and by which they apparently believe they can comprehend and apprehend everything that is possibly objectionable, they put a ban on "passionate love" scenes, underworld pictures, opium dens, dance halls, flirtations, questionable resorts, deeds of violence, ingenious crime, and so forth, to much length.

"But any attempt to define what is good and what is bad, with such particularity as to fit every combination of circumstances, must be futile, because it is not practicable. Nor does the situation require it. All that is asked of the Board members is that they shall suppress representations or scenes which, in the light of general experience or normal judgment, would be subversive of the proprieties or harmful to the spectator, and no set of definitions is necessary to detect this sort of thing. Common sense will dictate when action is necessary and the film manufacturers should be forced to recognize this fact, rather than given any list of specific standards.

"The more narrowly the censors try to define their code, the more chance there is likely to be to quibble and evade, and in the end there would be only a confusing mass of decisions leading to interminable argument as to whether or not certain films came under them. The whole question of censorship depends on personal opinion; if the censors are level-headed and reasonable, their work will show it, and if, on the other hand, they are finical and prudishly fussy, the public will not be long in noting it and demanding their removal or the Board's abolition, code or no code."

The Stories That Never Reach the Screen

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has already pointed out that good stories are absolutely essential to good pictures. We have gone further than that. We have said the story is the life blood of the picture.

But there is another angle to this all important question of the picture and the story, and it goes to the very heart of motion picture production:

MANY good stories never reach the screen.

It isn't because no good stories are written; it isn't because some of these same stories are not accepted for production.

They are accepted. And after they are accepted what happens?

To put the answer in five words: They are mutilated beyond recognition.

THE producer decides that the scenario won't meet the popular demand. He forthwith assumes that the popular demand is for some kind of slush or drivel, and proceeds to reduce the plot to one of those two sad states.

That is to say, some producers seem to believe that motion picture audiences don't know a good story when they see it; that they can fool the public with stuff utterly pointless, and without a single reason for existence; in other words, that motion picture audiences are possessed of intelligence only a little higher than the idiot's.

THIS is wrong. Nothing is more certain in this world than the possession by every sane human being of an instinct for the dramatic—and unless the story on the screen appeals to that instinct the picturegoer will have none of it.

The sooner the producer recognizes this fact the better for the whole picture industry. When he does realize it, he will stop butchering the good stories accepted by him.

The producer is not the final judge of what is a good story and what is not. He should not imagine for an instant that he is; and he also should not permit personal vanity to get him into that attitude of mind.

Ohio Censors Lose Bullock Fight in Cleveland

Jury Disagrees Over Question Involving Right of the Redoubtable Sam to Put on His Screen League President Herington's Classic Characterization of Censorship Law, and the State Board Shows No Disposition to Carry the Matter Further—Some Bright (?) Censor Cuts in Films Make "Moral Supervisors" Ridiculous

Special to Motion Picture News

Cleveland, Nov. 6

THE Ohio censors lost their fight to put Samuel Bullock, Cleveland motion picture theatre manager, in durance vile for daring to ignore their orders about cutting the phrase, "Censorship was born in iniquity, conceived in sin and is dying in disgrace," which appeared on a slide. The jury disagreed, so Sam will have to get arrested again on a new charge before he can test the censor law in the courts.

Attorney George B. Bullock representing the censors, stated that he will not fight the case unless he receives order to do so from the Columbus board. So far no decision has been made and it is presumed that the censors are willing to let the matter rest as it stands. From present indications, it will be impossible to have any jury convict any Cleveland exhibitor for defying the censors, the popular indoor sport in Cleveland right now.

The general public is lined up against the censors. To illustrate how the motion picture theatre patrons regard the state board, one has to cite only one fact—when the "Approved by the Ohio Board of Censorship" is flashed on the screen, there are smiles and murmurs of derision. This indorsement is treated as a joke.

One of the downtown theatres has an operator who ought to be a sign painter, for his spelling is unconscious humor at times. One slide announcing a coming production made this statement: "Approved by the sensers."

"Sensers, huh?" was the comment from a well dressed man. "Sensers? There ain't no sense to the censors!"

Exhibitors Turn Out for Trial

The Bullock trial was attended by many exhibitors. The crowd was so large that Juvenile Judge Adams was asked to allow the case to be tried in a big room at the old court house. This was granted, and even that large space was not enough for the purpose.

The jury was taken to the Avenue theatre, which is near the court house, to get a view of the film of the West End Business Men's picnic at Puritas Springs. They saw the words of Fred. J. Herrington on the screen.

Two witnesses were put on the stand by the prosecution—Chairman Charles G. Williams, of the Ohio Board of Censorship, and Fern Rayburn, both of Colmbus. Miss Rayburn testified that when she came to Cleveland on a visit she, at the request of Mr. Williams, saw the film.

The picture was not being shown at Bullock's theatre when she called, but when she asked for an exhibition, it was run as an accommodation for her. She then reported the result of her investigation to Mr. Williams. Miss Rayburn denied that she was working for the censors, but did the investigating as a favor for Mr. Williams.

Bullock's attorneys presented these facts as the basis of their case:

That the censors, in ordering Bullock to cut out of his film the remarks of Mr. Herrington, attempted to abridge the constitutional right of expression of opinion.

That the censors are not authorized to bar sub-titles or other parts of films, but must accept or reject the film as a whole.

Law a Legislative Tyrant

That Ohio's censorship law is loose and ambiguous, and that under it the censor board has illegally set up its own standard of morals and made of itself a legislative tyrant.

The censors set up the counter-claim that under the law it is given full power in barring in whole or in part any film objectionable in its judgment.

Attorneys for Bullock cited this clause from a decision of the United States Supreme Court decision:

"We need not pause to dilate upon the freedom of opinion and its expression either by speech, writing or printing. They are too certain to need discussion. Nor can there be any doubt of their breadth nor that their underlying safeguard is 'that opinion is free.'"

This supreme court ruling was handed down last February 23, when the court held that Ohio's censorship board was established on a legal basis. Yet the state censors tried to ignore the opinion of the court, which decided that the board was legal. The censors tried to be bigger than the supreme court, the highest tribunal in the country!

In asserting the contention of the censor board that it holds full authority on films, this clause from the Ohio law was presented:

"Only such films as are, in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors, of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character, shall be passed and approved by the board."

Jury Ready for Acquittal

Chairman Williams was asked to define the different classes of films. According to him a moral film is one that contains nothing immoral. His other answers were in about the same vein—inane. He did not make a good witness and did not impress the jury, which, it was reported, by a majority, was ready to vote for acquittal.

Under the headline, "Why Waste Time Or Money on Censors?" E. Arthur Roberts, motion picture editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has this to say:

"Why waste time and money on the Ohio censors?" writes our exhibitor correspondent, who recently made the suggestion that all exhibitors agree upon a date after which they will submit no more films to the Columbus authorities.

"Isn't it a farce to send films to the censors when their orders are being flagrantly disregarded?" the letter continues.

"Cuts were ordered from the West Side Business Men's picnic film. They were not made.

"Cuts were ordered in the Geraldine Farrar 'Carmen.' The order was disregarded.

"Eliminations probably will be ordered in the Theda Bara 'Carmen,' and they will not be made.

"Other motion picture houses are disregarding the orders of the censors. If the cuts are not made when ordered, why should we be put to the expense and trouble of sending the films to Columbus?

"Why don't our exhibitors show themselves men with a little backbone? Every man in the business ought to be back of Sam Bullock in his courageous fight against interference with the rights of free speech and personal liberty."

Eyes of Country on Cleveland

Knowing that the eyes of the country are upon Cleveland, local exhibitors are beginning to realize that they must present a united front against the censorship evil. It is the beginning of the national campaign that must be faced by all engaged in the motion picture industry. A victory here will set a precedent on censorship questions.

Amusing reading can be gleaned from the list of cutouts ordered by the censors which have been ignored by exhibitors. Now for the big laughs:

Lubin film, "Playing in Hard Luck"—Eliminate the caption, "The only way that hussy can get a man is to pay him $100,000."
"The Better Woman"—Cut short all scenes of fights.
"My Madonna"—Scene of murder cut out.
"Mystery of the Mountains"—Cut out all scenes showing illicit whisky still except one cut to five feet.
"Shoo Fly"—Cut out sub-title about flies in raisins and all scenes of man in water trough.
"The Net of Deceit"—Cut out girl smoking cigarette.
"Should a Wife Forgive?"—Cut out girl smoking cigarette; cut kiss to three feet, and cut sub-title, "I'd kill the man who tried to take you from me."
"Affair of Three Nations"—Cut out scene where man is robbed at roadside; murder, scene of fight and where man is bound.
"The Family Stain"—Cut to five feet scene of third degree; cut to five feet last scene where man holds pistol; cut out suicide and death struggle, and cut out scene where man stabs woman.
"The Long Chance"—Cut out scene where girl and men drink at table in dance hall.
"Man o' the Backwoods"—Cut out scene where woman smokes cigarette.
"Montana Blount"—Cut to three feet where snake bites the man.
"A Black Sheep"—Cut out scene where man cheats at cards by placing same in boot.
"The Magic Skin"—Cut scenes of hell to three feet.
"The Soul of Broadway"—Cut to three feet each all scenes of woman on couch.
"A Movie Nut"—Cut out scene where man lies in woman's lap while she sews his trousers.
"No Babies Allowed"—Cut out all scenes of man drinking from baby's bottle.
"Fatty and the Heiress"—Cut out all scenes of policeman being thrown in trough.
Chaplin Comedy Carnival—Cut out scenes where woman falls upon man, scene where man sticks another man with fork, where Chaplin kicks man in head, where Chaplin sits on man, where Chaplin strikes another on head with a mallet, and where Chaplin pulls man's teeth with large tongs.

It will be noted that the state censors are heeding the request of Public Safety Director Benesch that jokes on policemen be barred from films.

Imagine a Chaplin film cut the way it was ordered.

Edison Lays Cornerstone of U Electrical Studio

Great Inventor Puts in Place Copper Plate Dedicating Building to Production Purposes at the Picture Making City, and Later Sees Himself in "Animated"

UNIVERSAL CITY is an object not only for the millions of people who enjoy seeing moving pictures, but also for many who are actively engaged in the business of making pictures. Some weeks ago Siegmund Lubin, head of the moving picture manufacturing company which bears his name, was entertained at Universal City and was shown all over the plant.

Now it is Thomas A. Edison, who has been attracted to Universal City. Mr.

Laemmle, who expected to be present at the laying of the cornerstone of the great electrical studio which is just being started at Universal City, asked Thomas A. Edison if he would do him the honor of laying this cornerstone, and Mr. Edison gladly accepted.

At 6:30 on Friday night last, before an immense audience which cheered repeatedly, Mr. Edison was handed a large copper plate bearing an inscription which chronicled the date, the building, the fact that Mr. Edison laid the cornerstone, and other important data.

The equipment of this studio which has just been ordered by William Sistrom, purchasing agent of the Universal, who went all the way to Universal City for this purpose, promises to be the most important electrification of a single building which the contractors have ever attempted. Representatives of the Kliegel people, the Cooper-Hewitt people, and several other important manufacturers of electrical apparatus were present, and several of them have been commissioned to furnish electrical supplies for the building.

Kneeling on the ground, Mr. Edison placed the copper plate upon the stone, and it was fastened there while the crowd cheered the great inventor to the echo. The Kliegel lights had been arranged in such a way that excellent moving pictures were taken of this interesting event. These will be shown in the "Universal Animated Weekly."

After the ceremony, Mr. Edison entered the beautiful Universal theatre where all of the films taken at the coast are shown to the heads of departments, and there viewed moving pictures made of himself and his party, which consisted of Mrs. Edison and her sister, at Santa Barbara, at one o'clock the same afternoon by the Universal Animated Weekly cameraman.

"Speedy work" was Mr. Edison's comment after the film had been run.

ROTHAPFEL TO RETURN TO OLD FRIENDS IN MILWAUKEE

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 6.

Milwaukee exhibitors are displaying great interest in the coming of S. L. Rothapfel, who will be in this city November 17, as he is well known locally, having been in charge of the Alhambra theatre in this city for some time. In fact it was at Milwaukee that Rothapfel made his first bid for fame when he opened the Alhambra theatre as a photoplay house.

Lavish arrangements are being made to entertain him, and when he arrives in this city he will be given a rousing welcome.

Picture People to Help Raise Money for Actors' Fund

Samuel Goldfish of Lasky Is Appointed Chairman of Committee Confining Its Activities in Million Dollar Campaign to Enlisting Film Industry in Speaking Stage Charity

A MOST important step in the million dollar campaign for the Actors' Fund of America was consummated when the help of the motion picture interests of the United States was enlisted this week to aid in the movement.

It was announced at the headquarters of the committee in charge of the campaign, presided over by Dr. William C. O'Donnell and Mrs. Florence R. O'Neil, that Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Feature Play Company, had accepted the chairmanship of a special committee restricted to the motion picture industry to assist in raising the million dollars to put the actors' home on a sure foundation and assure the permanency of this very worthy charity.

Mr. Goldfish will organize a general committee on which will be representatives of the leading producing and distributing organizations of the country. This committee will concentrate its energies towards showing the motion picture performers and those closely related to the profession the acute need of responding to the actors' fund.

The headquarters of the committee will be in New York City, but Jesse L. Lasky is expected to supplement the work by organizing the 10,000 motion picture players in and around Los Angeles.

The work of Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Lasky will be the easier for the fact that so many of the legitimate actors and actresses have gone into films this season. Motion pictures have often been accused of having done more to make the actors' home a necessity than any other factor, but they appear to have evened the score by their present voluntary offer to help. It is expected a large sum will be realized for the fund through this method.

There are more than 20,000 motion picture theatres in the United States, according to statistics, and about 88,000,000 persons regularly attend the shows, it has been figured by the experts. The theatres in all parts of the country will be addressed and special headquarters organized in every state to more readily keep in touch with these theatres.

Daniel Frohman is president of the Actors' Fund of America and he personally urged Mr. Goldfish to accept the chairmanship of the motion picture committee of the movement to raise a permanent endowment for the Actors' Fund Home.

Freuler Buys $720,000 Stock of Mutual Company

Its President Acquires Holdings of H. E. Aitken, Former Head of the Corporation, the Majestic and the Reliance, and Plans Inauguration of New Policies

A FINAL step in the realignment of officers in the Mutual Film Corporation is indicated in the announcement made during the week of the purchase of $720,000 of the stock of the corporation by John R. Freuler, president of the concern.

The stock acquired by Mr. Freuler in this deal was that held by H. E. Aitken, former president of the Mutual, and by the Majestic Motion Picture Company and the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation.

This constitutes an important addition to the Freuler holdings in Mutual stock. It is a sequel to the events which culminated in the election of Mr. Freuler to the presidency of the corporation, succeeding Mr. Aitken in June.

Marked changes of policy in the Mutual film service to exhibitors have been instituted by the Freuler administration, with resulting extensions of the business calling for the establishment of seven new branch offices in the United States and renewed activity in Canada.

The Mutual now has a total of sixty-eight branches in the United States and the Dominion of Canada. The field forces of the company have been practically reorganized and the service to the exhibitors all over the country has been placed in direct connection with the home office in New York.

Many of the modifications and readjustments made may be traced to the experience of Mr. Freuler as an exhibitor of motion pictures. He is still an exhibitor, beside holding large interests in the distribution of films. He now controls a number of theatres in important centers.

Mr. Freuler's increased investment in the Mutual is taken by film men to indicate his high degree of confidence in the future of both the Mutual Film Corporation and the picture industry.

West Coast Hears Rothapfel on Film Showmanship

Managers in Los Angeles Get Greater Insight into Requirements for Successful Exhibition of Motion Pictures at Talk by Former Manager of the Strand, New York, Now on Tour Under Mutual Auspices—Representative Assemblage of Downtown, Suburban and Smaller Town Exhibitors at Luncheon

Los Angeles, Nov. 5.

LOS ANGELES exhibitors have been given a new and greater insight into the exhibition of motion pictures, as the result of the address given by the "Belasco of motion pictures," S. L. Rothapfel, former manager of the Strand theatre, New York, following a luncheon given by Manager Johns of the Mutual Film Corporation's Los Angeles exchange, Monday, November 1. The luncheon was attended by a very representative gathering of exhibitors composed of Los Angeles downtown, suburban, and smaller theatre owners.

The address by Mr. Rothapfel continued for more than an hour, and at the conclusion he was asked, and answered many questions. That the exhibitors were interested was shown by the close attention given, and the very frequent interruptions by applause.

His theme was individuality for every theatre, and he made a plea for the open market, which, according to his statements will be the only way of securing the best pictures possible. The exhibitor, Mr. Rothapfel explained, has not advanced with the industry, has not used his brains, and the old attitude of the showman that they are doing a favor to sell one a ticket for admission is all bunk, and must pass out.

He paid a glowing tribute to D. W. Griffith when he said the bane of the industry today is the so-called feature, and that there was more "feature" in one of Griffith's single reel subjects of the days gone by, than there is in nine out of ten of the present day so-called features.

He dealt censorship a blow decrying it as all wrong, and prophesied that it would not live on that account. He outlined what he thought, and what had proven to be in his experience a good program. This consists of a short scenic, a topical reel, a feature and a comedy.

Rothapfel's Prediction

In this connection he prophesied that the industry will return to the one, two and three reel subjects when the industry becomes staple. In the future, Mr. Rothapfel believes, we are to see the five dollar picture and the threatre get on to a normal profit making basis when ingenuity and brains will reap results. Music, according to Mr. Rothapfel, makes a picture, and must be used by the exhibitor to interpret the theme and fill the gaps the director has left, as well as create atmosphere for the subject.

The exhibitors of today are asleep, and when they pay half as much attention to their business as they do to the competitor at the present time, the former manager of the Strand believes the industry will be brought to a near state of excellency.

In concluding his address the speaker told of the plans for the new Rialto theatre, and enumerated the many innovations to be introduced. He urged the exhibitors to advertise in the newspapers, spending all the money they possibly could and a little bit more; pointed out the fact that motion pictures are second in power to the press, and if the two will work together the untold good can be accomplished for the motion picture industry.

Mr. Rothapfel left Los Angeles Tuesday evening for San Francisco where he will speak Wednesday, and from there will go North and then return East. He was accompanied from here by Newton Levi who for the past eight months has been connected with the Mutual Film Corporation's Los Angeles exchange in the capacity of salesman.

Mr. Levi will act as publicity manager for the remainder of Mr. Rothapfel's Mutual tour, going as far East as Pittsburgh. He is a former newspaper man who has made many friends since his connection with the Mutual exchange in Los Angeles. Among those present were:

PEGGY COUDRAY, SWEPT AWAY BY HER PART, FAINTS IN A UNIVERSAL SCENE

In "The Awakening of Patsy," in which Little Peggy Coudray plays the role of Patsy, there are six unusually emotional scenes which she had to do in succession.

About the middle of the last scene Miss Coudray began deviating from the line of action outlined by Director Jaccard.

PEGGY COUDRAY

He noticed it, but also noticed that it was better stuff—had "more kick" to it. So he grinned and said: "Go to it, Peggy, wreck the whole joint." As the scene ended, Miss Coudray threw both arms up in the air, held the pose a minute and crumpled in a heap on the floor.

Jaccard ran to her side and found that it had not all been acting. The girl had fainted. They picked her up and laid her on a bed in the scene and called Dr. Mace from the Universal City hospital. Restoratives were administered and within a few minutes the plucky little actress was ready to resume her work.

Nance O'Neil Will Appear in "A Woman's Past" and Farnum in "Broken Law" for Fox

DOROTHY GREEN

RUTH BLAIR

NANCE O'NEIL

FOLLOWING the production of "The Blindness of Devotion," in which Robert B. Mantell and Genevieve Hamper are starred, William Fox announces, in weekly succession, a series of photoplay productions.

"A Woman's Past" will star Nance O'Neil. It is big in dramatic situations of the utmost intensity, a drastic arraignment of the morals of present-day society, say advance reports. It is directed by Frank Powell from the stage success by Captain John King.

Never in her illustrious career has Miss O'Neil had a better vehicle, assurance is given, for the display of her wonderful talent than that afforded her in the character of Jane Hawley.

William Farnum follows in "The Broken Law," a photoplay of mystery, love and tragedy, written and produced by Oscar C. Apfel.

Another William Fox release will introduce Ralph Kellard, a new star of the silent stage in "Her Mother's Secret." Miss Dorothy Green is in the cast. It is described as a pulsating, heart- accelerating document that runs the gamut of human emotions. It was produced by Frederick Thomson.

Ruth Blair, known as one of "the prettiest girls in pictures," has again returned to motion pictures after an engagement on the legitimate stage under the management of the Selwyn company, and has been especially engaged by the Fox company to play the leading role in "The Fourth Estate," under the direction of Frank Powell. Miss Blair left for Chicago last week for her new engagement. Her new role is a "sympathy" part. It requires deep emotional ability and intense dramatic power as well to play the part of the wife of a poor man, who is downed by the political "boss" system.

Miss Blair is well suited to the part. She is tall and graceful, and has a wonderfully sympathetic face.

Madame Ada Dow Currier, the famous dramatic coach, who discovered and made Julia Marlowe, declares that Miss Blair is possessed of a remarkable emotional ability, and that some day she will make another Julia Marlowe.

Miss Blair is also an artist. She designs all of her own clothes. She is always on the lookout for new color combinations, and whenever she has found something which she thinks would make a beautiful garment, she rushes home to her paint box and sketches, then colors designs for her own clothes. Particulars of release on the picture will be announced in due course.

"Inspiration," Thanhouser Picture, Endorsed Unanimously by National Board

"INSPIRATION," the Mutual Masterpicture which has just been issued from the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle and features Audrey Munson, the famous artist's model, was passed unanimously by the National Board of Censorship when it was shown to that body. Not a single change or cut was ordered, is the statement from the Thanhouser headquarters.

The entire membership of the Board, it is reported, not only approved the picture as it passed before them, but recommended the productions of more films, as this one was conceived by Mr. Thanhouser.

"The film is in no sense a sensational one," said Mr. Thanhouser, in commenting upon the occasion, "and the best proof that I accomplished my purpose is to be found in the prompt recognition by such critics as the National Board, of the serious educational intent of the feature.

"'I wish we could see more such pictures in the same spirit,' said one member after the showing. Another, a woman, congratulated me upon the refined and dignified treatment of the theme."

The story itself is embellished by glimpses of the many works of art for which Audrey Munson has posed.

The Press, Press Representative and the Picture—VI

Editor of Motion Picture Page of Important Middle West Daily Cites Instances of Publicity Opportunities Unnoticed by Exhibitors, Who, If They Took Advantage of Them, Could Increase Their Patronage Several Fold—Decries Lack of Good Press Matter Sent Out by Manufacturers.

BY A MOTION PICTURE PAGE EDITOR

"IF the exhibitors would just show as much sense in this as they do in other things," said the society editor of our newspaper the other day, "they couldn't help but reap the benefits. I'm a woman, but it makes me shudder sometimes to see the opportunities they are missing."

I am the motion picture editor on the principal daily paper in a large, thriving middle western city. I am lucky to have as an associate a society editor who is almost as much of a "movie" fan as I am.

On this particular occasion she was dealing with a question that should, if it is not already, be close to the heart of every exhibitor,—the free utilization of newspaper space.

I am, as I said, the editor of a motion picture page, and I know whereof I speak.

One of our best theatres was showing "Jewel," by Clara Burnham, in which Ella Hall takes the leading role. As everyone knows, this is a pronounced Christian Science play. Just as it happened, our society editor is a Christian Scientist.

"I just happened to drop in and see it, I never knew it was a Christian Science play," she said.

Publicity By Word of Mouth

"Of course, I told just as many of my friends as I could, but that was only a very, very small percentage of the many people who would have given their hats to have seen it. They told me so afterward, when I told them about the picture.

"Why didn't that exhibitor, who really and truly looks as if he is a modern, up-to-date business man, even though his actions don't show it, why on earth didn't he put it in the paper that it was a Christian Science play? He advertises, just look at that ad," pointing to a two-inch advertisement on the page, "and of course we would have run a mention of the play free, just as we do the legitimate houses."

Would we? Well, I'm the moving picture editor of our paper and I ought to know. I would have enjoyed playing that story up. Generally I'm so hard up for local motion picture copy I nearly go crazy, anyway.

Then here's another incident.

George Shedd, even if he isn't from our town, is from our state and there are many of us who know him personally, intimately, and he was the author of "The Incorrigible Dukane," a Famous Players piece with Jack Barrymore in the lead.

When I heard that the dramatization of his work had been on the screen in an Omaha theatre and I had never even heard a whimper of it for my page, much less being cheated out of going to see the picture,—well, I almost collapsed. And if I could have had a good, solid kick at that exhibitor, my, how it would have relieved my feelings!

I would have run Shedd's picture, a biographical sketch of him and of course a long feature story about his work and the picture from it.

Why? Not just because I would liked to have read it, I assure you, but because there were many, many others in my city and in my state who would have liked the opportunity, and because the movie fans of my city are hungering for just some such local stuff on which they can feast, and then pack the theatre to see it.

Daily Wants Film Copy

The tragedy of this is that the exhibitor at whose theatre the picture was shown is a persistent advertiser and our paper would be grateful to publish any reasonable amount of free matter he would offer. Of course he advertised this picture, but he left off Shedd's name!

If it hadn't been for our police reporter last week I would have missed a dandy feature item for my page. In a local theatre where they were showing "The Diamond from the Sky" a patron lost a diamond. The loss was reported to the police. Our police reporter, chatting said:

"Funny thing happened out at one of your theatres. Woman watching a play, something about a diamond and a sky, and lost her diamond from her ring. Costly rock, too," he added.

I wrote the item of course. But if the exhibitor, who was an advertiser in connection with the picture, had brought in the story, it would have shown that he was aware of advertising chances. The woman, anxious to recover the stone, would have given the history of it, perhaps, and no doubt would have been glad to add a picture of herself in connection. Then I could have "played it up" as I desired.

Another Chance Lost

One of our local newspapers recently boosted to the sky a contest to find the prettiest girl in the city, who would attend the world's fair, and also play in a motion picture.

Anyway, it came to Omaha and left. No one knew an Omaha girl, and the prettiest girl in Omaha, at that, was being shown in action on a screen. I suppose the paper that boosted her was the worst disgusted, but if it was worse than me it had to go some. I wasn't angry at the exhibitor, but I pitied him. I afterward told him in the kindest way possible that he would have to wear out several pencils if he attempted to figure all he had lost.

At least three of our motion picture theatres specialize in society people. Fine automobiles, from electric broughams to eight-cylinder touring cars, line up in front of their places every night.

They line up in front of the "legit" houses, too, but a real live press agent from these houses brings in to the society editor each day a list of theatre parties. Do we get any from the motion picture theatres? None except those the poor, little society reporters dig up for themselves,' No wonder our society mistress was raving, and continues to rave.

Of course she reads MOTION PICTURE NEWS every week—many loyal movie fans do—and naturally she saw the editorial in the September 4 issue in which the opportunities of exhibitors were pointed out along the lines of utilizing newspaper space.

"Why, that looks just like our city, doesn't it?" she exclaimed.

Yes, and I'll venture to say it looks just like lots of other cities, both great and small. In country towns, even, the motion picture exhibitor could promote neighborhood parties of all kinds, turn the names into the paper, thus delighting the paper editor, those who attended and filling his own pocketbook.

The lesson applies not only to cities!

Nor does it apply only to exhibitors. It makes me shiver every time I see the name of some new person among the stars or the writers, and their address is not given. "Maybe he or she is from my city, or my state," I gasp, thoughts of my poor, bleak looking motion picture page running through my mind. But all I can do is wonder.

Mail Brings Little to Film Editor

Those letters, dozens of them, from film manufacturers and distributors, are so neat, so nicely typewritten, and so deadly dull or so foolishly silly! They have nice, two-cent stamps on them, but every time I open one of them I know just exactly what I am going to find.

And our theatrical page editor, he actually looks forward to receiving mail designed for his page! Therein he often finds jewels that his readers, fewer than mine, by far! gloat over and tell their friends about.

And there is the exhibitor, a close friend of mine, too, who has had two hundred feet of film taken of his baby girl once every year for the last two years and for-

NEWSPAPERMAN ENDORSES "NEWS" CAMPAIGN

Motion Picture News,
New York.
Gentlemen:

The writer has been an interested reader of your publication for several months.

As one on the newspaper side of the fence, I endorse practically everything you have written regarding the co-operation of newspapers and moving picture exhibitors. You understand the newspaper position well, indeed.

HARRY T. WATTS,
Advertising Manager,

got to tell me about it on her last birthday. I'll never forget or forgive him.

And the exhibitor who was giving away imitation broken coins to advertise a picture and was arrested by a boob policeman and never told me because, he afterwards said, "It might have looked bad!"

And that in the face of the fact that he was released in court after everybody had a good laugh at the policeman!

Do you want some more! I could give them to you by the dozen, but I hate to think about the opportunities exhibitors are missing. It makes me feel bad.

Syracuse, N. Y., Papers Recognize Importance of Motion Pictures as a Source of News

TWO evening papers and one morning sheet carry news events to Syracuse, N. Y., citizens, and the press recognition of the importance of motion pictures has already been established.

One daily in particular broke down several barriers shortly after the campaign started by Motion Picture News. Through the Motion Picture News representative the press was shown the importance of advertising to the exhibitor, and the rest followed in natural sequence.

The Syracuse Herald, a conservative paper, runs nearly a quarter of a page each night under the caption, "Seen on the Screen"—(By the Film Girl).

The column is edited by a young lady of education and refinement who attends the showing of all pictures in the downtown section and gives the public her unbiased criticism of every program. The paper frequently sends her to New York to attend advance showings of the bigger and better pictures, and she in turn comes back and through her columns urges some local exhiibtor to show the feature.

The editor also runs a department on the "Beatrice Fairfax" order in which she answers questions received from the reel fans.

In addition to the "Seen on the Screen" columns, there are of course the regular photoplay readers wherein each manager writes up and submits his own press matter. A new department just added by the Herald is one that should find favor in every large city or town in the country. It is a scheme to care for the small exhibitor who could not ordinarily afford to advertise under the high amusement rate.

In the upper right-hand corner of the classified advertisement section of the paper is a two-column-caption quotation on the screens and under a subdivision of North, East, South and West. The little fellow in each section of the town is therefore able to send his message to the people in his neighborhood for the small sum of twenty-five cents.

On Sundays the exhibitor is allowed big cuts, big write-ups, and the pictures are placed in importance above the spoken drama.

Syracuse has the following number of amusement houses: 45 motion picture theatres, two vaudeville houses, two legitimate houses, one house dark.

Syracuse papers are fully awake to the importance of motion pictures, give space freely and are a unit against local, State or National censorship. W. A. V. Mack.

Fox Company Gingers Up Languid Jamaica Natives

Spirit of Hustling Enterprise Characterizing the Movements of the Visiting "Filmers and Filmettes" in Annette Kellermann Production Awakens People Living in the West Indian Island to a Realization of What Can Be Done by Energetic Playerfolk SPLENDID progress is being made in Jamaica with the picture starring Annette Kellermann, directed by Herbert Brenon for William Fox.

Since the six weeks the William Fox companies, including the one hundred diving Venuses, have been on the island, there has been a complete metamorphosis among the inhabitants from the "manana" (tomorrow) spirit of the tropics. Everyone on the island, from the governor-general to the humblest "coolie," has become fired with the spirit of energy and hustle radiated by Mr. Brenon, his assistant, James McKay, and the technical directors, George Fitch, Joseph T. Turner, and the scenic staff, headed by John D. Bradden and Herbert Messmore.

The activities of the Fox companies practically cover every inch of the wonderful scenery of Jamaica. At Fort Augusta, an ancient and historic fortification, some ten miles by water from Kingston, George Fitch and Joseph A. Turner, under the supervision of Director-General Brenon, have erected ten acres of imposing buildings. These include a huge "slave market," a minaretted palace, mazes of streets, bazaars and shops, revolving stages, upon which 2,500 people will work, battlements, fortifications and coliseums where battles will be waged by hundreds of natives and the "imported" companies.

Mr. Brenon has taken over the entire Osborne Hotel at St. Ann's Bay, sixty-five miles across the island from Kingston, as headquarters for the main company. All day, and every day, cars are flying across the mountains with actors and actresses, representatives of the business offices and auditing departments, with headquarters in Kingston, and massive "props" and segments of especially constructed scenery sent over from the "factories" in Kingston; and government officials for the island (being a British possession, it is of course under strict martial law), maintain a courteous and kindly, though strict, watch upon everything that is done by the William Fox companies.

At St. Ann's Bay and in the vicinity, nearly all of the mermaid scenes have been made in cool, crystalline depths.

It is practically impossible to convey in words all that has been done since—six short weeks ago—the Kellermann "expedition" invaded the island. Palaces have risen over night as if at the touch of a magician's wand, and whole acres have been cleared of raw jungle and work shops and property plants reared themselves practically over night.

A novel bit of motion picture enterprise is the erection of chemical and analytical laboratories under the direction of the kinetic expert, George Schneiderman, who was sent to Jamaica by Mr. Fox to assume direction of the handling and printing of negatives, a delicate operation in a tropical country.

The laboratories and printing shops are built in the rear of the Myrtle Bank Hotel, the company's Kingston headquarters, and an ice plant and chemical storage warehouse adjoin them, the former for use in cooling the developing mixture to the required temperature. Mr. Schneiderman says that the climate of this island is suited to the turning out of the finest class of photography under expert direction.

He is assisted by several men, thoroughly schooled in this delicate art, so that it will be seen that this all-important part of William Fox's project is in capable and energetic hands.

Socially the William Fox companies have captured the island. Dances are given on the warships in the harbor and at the garrison. The army and navy are in keen rivalry over the entertainment of Miss Kellermann and her supporting cast, including Claire Whitney and Violet Horner.

Honors have been showered upon Mr. Brenon and his corps of assistants by the governor-general, Sir John Pringle, and other dignitaries, both civil and official. A great popular keynote has been struck by the action of Mr. Brenon in offering the services of the entire company for the night of November 4, when, under the management of the energetic James R. Sullivan, the husband of Miss Kellermann, an entire variety performance will be given at the Palace theatre, seating 2,500, in aid of the Jamaican War Aeroplane Fund.

This entertainment is under the direct patronage of the governor-general and General Blackden, commander of the army forces now stationed here, and the naval dignitaries. Taking part in it on behalf of the William Fox companies are Miss Kellermann in classic dances, both alone and with a supporting chorus; Claire Whitney; William E. Shay, formerly leading man for Mrs. Leslie Carter and now appearing opposite Miss Kellermann; Hal de Forest in a sketch, "The Middleman"; Grace Weeks and Catherine Gilbert in a singing act; Mlle. Marcelle, the French dramatic artist in an original conception; Walter McCullough and company in a powerful one-act play; and Stephen Gratton, Irene Lee and tiny Catherine and Jane Lee, Betty Allen, Nelson Dean, Mme. Zoura, Theo. Warfield, Charlotte Starbuck, Betty Hamilton, Victor Abrams, and other equally well-known motion picture stars.

The island can hardly wait for the night of "the biggest show ever" to arrive. The entire theatre standing room and orchestra pit is sold out.

Kansas Ready to Shoot First Big Gun in Censor Fight

Association, Representing Exchangemen and Exhibitors, Opens Office and Through Executive Committee Outlines Campaign for Compelling Modification of Unjust Law

Special to Motion Picture News

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 6.

THE Amusement Association of Kansas, the new combination of exchange men and exhibitors, is busy. The campaign for members has started, likewise its activities for a better censorship law in Kansas.

Offices have been opened in the Bryant Building which is in the heart of the downtown district and in close proximity to all the exchanges in the city. From here the business of the association will be carried on.

That the association is going to be a big success and that the exhibitors are for it strong, is evidenced by the number of applications for membership that are being received from all parts of the state. This also shows that the exhibitors are right in line for the betterment of their business and that they are willing to go into any organization that will fight for their rights.

The executive committee of the Association met on Wednesday, October 27, and outlined a campaign for securing members. The effects of this campaign are already felt. The members of this committee are all big men and capable of handling big problems, and they are working out the plan of campaign on the censorship question here.

A letter and other literature exhorting each exhibitor to join the association has been sent to all exhibitors in the state. All the roadmen traveling in the state are working with a vim to win the gold fob that will be presented to the one securing the greatest number of applications within the next sixty days. Along with the fob will go an honorary membership in the association. The roadmen have been supplied with all the literature of the organization.

A telegram from J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America has been received. In it he congratulated those interested upon the organization of the live picture men of the state and said that the national Board wanted to co-operate in any way that it could with the new organization. A copy of this telegram was sent to each exhibitor in the state to let them know that those in the east are also interested.

Since the formation of this new body everyone interested in the business of public amusement in the state of Kansas is talking about it. Likewise ninety per cent. of the newspapers. They are on the side of right and they know that the exhibitors of their state are paying too much to have their films censored.

With the majority of the newspapers of the state, the six hundred screens and the earnestness of the exhibitors and exchange men back of it, the new association is sure to accomplish results, that will mean much to all concerned.

BOARD OF TRADE PROTECTION PROMISED BOSTON EXHIBITORS

Special to Motion Picture News

Boston, Nov. 8.

At a special meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts at the Quincy House, Wednesday night, Jacob W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America assured the Bay State film men of the national board's protection against possible legislation in Massachusetts.

Mr. Binder mentioned the possible passage of a censor law. For three years such a law has been proposed in this state, but it has always been defeated. The league insists that such a law would be an infringement on liberty.

Motion pictures, Mr. Binder said, were the impressions of the author's thought, and as such should be given every freedom. The motion picture industry, the fifth largest in the nation, should not be considered as a criminal industry.

The national board of trade, Mr. Binder explained, was the first nation-wide organization of the sort which aimed to assist state organizations in their fight against censor laws.

About fifty members of the league were present. Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the league, presided. Plans were discussed for the third annual ball, to be held at the Boston Arena December 1. Last year 5,000 people were turned away from the doors.

BALBOA CAR OVERTURNED IN COLLISION

Players, directors and the business manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, narrowly escaped serious injury in an automobile collision on the outskirts of Long Beach, Cal., on their return from a filming expedition at a ranch at Haynes, some distance from the city, last month.

Jack Abrams, assistant director; Florence Horkheimer, sister of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer; Joyce Moore, leading woman of "Beulah"; E. N. Wallock, a director; Norman Manning, business manager; Al Cup, an extra; and the chauffeur; sustained painful injuries when their car turned turtle after colliding with a Ford.

FENWAY, BOSTON, TO SHOW TRIANGLE PICTURES

It is reported on good authority that the owners of the new Fenway theatre on Massachusetts avenue, near Boylston street, in a district covered to some extent by the St. James and Exeter street theatres, have bought the Triangle rights for Boston, and at a price said to be about $3,500.

Whether they will use the first run in the new house, or save it for a downtown house yet to be secured, is not known.

The theatre is fast approaching conclusion and will probably be ready for films by the middle of December.

McDERMOTT JOINS "HAM" COMPANY

Jack McDermott is the newest addition to Kalem's "Ham" comedy forces. Mr. McDermott will assist Director Beaudine in addition to playing the juvenile leads.

Warde Will Help Exporters Keep Down Film Tax

English Film Man Will Undertake to View Subjects with Idea of Eliminating Those Unfit for Exploitation Without Being Subject to Tariff

A NEW link between the American and British film trade was established this week, with the arrival in New York of Reginald Warde, one of the best known film men in England, who will spend the winter studying films here, and bringing the two sides of the Atlantic closer together.

Mr. Warde comes to the United States with three separate and distinct objects. He brings with him the film rights to nearly three hundred of the newer copyrighted novels, which are now in circulation all over the world. These include works by Anthony Hope, and other novelists equally prominent, and Mr. Warde will dispose of these rights to motion picture producers on this side.

In addition to this, he comes prepared to purchase the entire European rights to all American film productions, of any length, from one reel upward, but possibly the most important work he will take up will be the systematic reviewing of American productions, with a view to eliminating those which are totally unsuited for exploitation before the British public, thereby saving the duty which such films would be required to pay under the new British war tax.

It was the pressing need for some method of checking a great waste in this direction that resolved Mr. Warde to visit this country at this time, and his knowledge of film affairs across the water, and of the temper of the British film public, should be of great value to producers and distributors here.

Mr. Warde has long been associated with the London firm of Harma and Company, and in this capacity has been brought into personal contact with distributors and exhibitors throughout the kingdom. At present he is temporarily located at 1010 Columbus avenue, New York City.

Work on Pathé's "Who's Guilty?" Is Under Way

Director Hansel of Arrow Film Secures Permission to Use Estate of Samuel Untermyer at Yonkers, N. Y., Greystone, for the Use of Exteriors in "Dross and Diamonds"

THE production of Pathé's new series "Who's Guilty?" is under full swing at the Arrow Film Corporation studios in Yonkers, N. Y. Howell Hansel, director-in-chief, is having his hands full, for in one week he has screened three big mob scenes in as many different sets.

Emmy Wehlen, who was secured by the Arrow Film Corporation through the courtesy of Metro Pictures Corporation, has had to renew acquaintance with a riding habit and a side saddle all this past week. In England she is known as a daring rider to hounds, but in this country she has had no chance as an equestrienne until she took up her "Who's Guilty?" work.

Mr. Hansel did something new last week when he took a number of scenes in City Judge Beall's court room in Yonkers. The judge not only consented to the use of the court room for these scenes, but also agreed to sit on the bench for Mr. Hansel while they were being taken. All the real court attendants also served as members of the cast for the time being, with the result that a really normal and natural court was screened.

In addition to this "coup," Mr. Hansel secured the use of Samuel Untermyer's Yonkers estate, Greystone, for most of the exterior scenes in "Dross and Diamonds," the first episode of "Who's Guilty?" to be released. Mr. Untermyer willingly consented to have some hundred of men and women over-run his fine lawns for the better part of a week.

SELIG EDENDALE PRODUCTION TRANSFERRED TO ZOO STUDIOS

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 4.

Plans are being made for the closing of the Selig Edendale studio in so far as production is concerned. This is located approximately five miles from the Selig Zoo and studio, and the laboratories of the company are located here.

It is the intention of Selig to continue to use these laboratories for the present, but all producing will be done at the Zoo studio beginning about November 15. This plan was decided upon by President W. N. Selig, and announcement of the intentions were made prior to his departure for the East, Sunday, October 31. In many instances this will no doubt prove far more convenient for the members of the producing staff.

Rowland Views Field With An Exhibitor's Eye

As a Manager Himself, President of Metro Is Qualified to Understand and Provide for the Wants of the Man Confronted by Knotty Problems Every Day in the Management of a Picture House—He Lays Stress Upon Right Kind of Stimulation by Advertising Among Other Things

THREE things are essential to the success of a motion picture theatre under present conditions, according to President Richard A. Rowland of the Metro Pictures Corporation who, as an exhibitor, is qualified to talk to exhibitors.

These three essentials are consistent pictures, a proper price and the right stimulation by advertising in the neighborhoods on which the houses must depend for their patronage. In discussing present conditions Mr, Rowland developed several points which will be news to those who are not owning and running picture theatres.

"The knockout picture, so called," said Mr. Rowland, "is depended upon, under present conditions to pay all the bills and bring in the profits. Many exhibitors today are running their houses at a loss of from ten dollars to fifteen dollars a day for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and depending on Saturday's receipts to pay for all these losses and bring the week's income to the profit point.

"This is an unhealthy condition. It is a condition which cannot be permitted to continue if the exhibitor is to receive the profits to which his business entitles him.

More Investment of Capital Today

"Times have so changed that the motion picture business is almost totally dissimilar to its conduct than in the older days. Only a few years ago an exhibitor could equip a small theatre at an outlay of from $5,000 to $10,000 and get the service for twenty-five dollars. His admission price of five cents netted him a good profit because his expense was small.

"Today an investment of from $75,000 to $150,000 is necessary if the house is to meet the demands of the public. In addition to the interest on the larger investment the service costs far more today because the pictures themselves cost more money to manufacture. The public demands big themes, big stars, lavish settings and handsome entertainment. These cost great sums.

"These costs must be borne by the service charges. Further expense is found in the conduct of the present theatres as against the older and smaller houses. Good music is essential, extra janitor service, extra ushers and other house expenses have increased far out of proportion to the increase in income, because prices of admission have not advanced in keeping with the advance of theatre and picture costs.

"Houses that used to charge five cents now charge ten cents, but this advance is way below the equally advanced price that should be charged. I believe that many exhibitors do not raise their admission price to their proper standard because of lack of courage, or lack of confidence in their entertainments.

"In one of the theatres with which I have had personally to deal, we raised our price to twenty cents, and with a consistent service of pictures we have done an even greater business in point of numbers than we did when the price was ten cents.

Uniform Evening Entertainment

"In my opinion the necessities are these. First, consistent pictures that will guarantee to the audience a complete evening's entertainment. Second, the charging of a proper admission price, and third, the continued stimulation of business by advertising in the neighborhood from which the theatre draws its patronage.

"The patrons of a theatre should be absolutely assured that at their playhouse they will be entertained by good pictures no matter when they choose to go. In this the regular patron, the most profitable of the theatre's assets, becomes affixed in his habits and he will go to such a theatre to the exclusion of other houses.

"It is impossible for any manufacturer or any group of manufacturers to put out an unbroken series of knockout pictures. The best that the exhibitor can reasonably expect or demand is consistent pictures of a uniform high standard of excellence, pictures that are bound to be entertaining even if they do not set the world afire.

"Of course there are other elements which enter into the successful conduct of the theatre, such as its ventilation, its music, and the proper presentation of a picture. Of these subjects I shall have more to say at a later time, but I wanted to point out what occurred to me as the immediate necessities for the exhibitor to consider.

"As I have said before, Metro has been concentrating on consistent pictures but no feature program can make money for the exhibitor unaided. A very important part of the success of the theatre rests with the theatre management, and, as I have pointed out, if consistent pictures are provided the admission price and the local advertising are the other two essentials."

Miss Clayton in Leads at Eastern Essanay Studio

Star of Broncho Billy Company Now in Chicago at Work Opposite Calvert, in "Daughter of the City," Five-Reel Feature for V-L-S-E in December

MARGUERITE CLAYTON, who is so well known as leading woman with Broncho Billy, G. M. Anderson at Essanay's western studio, Niles, Cal., now is at the Eastern studios at Chicago, where she is taking leading parts.

Miss Clayton, who is twenty-one years old, has been in motion picture work but two and a half years, but rose rapidly from an extra girl to leads. She joined the Essanay company by answering an advertisement for a position. She is a girl of the western plains, having been born and raised in Ogden, Utah, where her father is a civil engineer.

She spent her time on her pony racing over the plains when she was not in school. When she saw the advertisement for an actress she sent her photograph, which led to an interview, and later an engagement. She showed marked histrionic ability from the first, and in the short time she has been playing has leaped to one of the leading actresses in photoplays.

She is a golden haired, blue eyed girl, but photographs remarkably well. Her winning smile has won her a place in the heart of all photoplay enthusiasts.

Her first play with the eastern company is "A Daughter of the City," a five act feature, which is released on the V-L-S-E program in December. Miss Clayton plays the lead, the part of a daughter of the city. E. H. Calvert plays the leading masculine role, that of the wealthy business man, who has become a vulture. The hero role is taken by John Junior.

Miss Clayton is well fitted for her part, that of a young and innocent girl, poor and beautiful, who easily falls into the clutches of the vulture, but whose inherent goodness and horror of evil finally extricates her from the net set for her.

The play itself is a strong morality drama and one that sounds a note of warning to all girls to keep far from the Primrose path. The play is directed by E. H. Calvert.

Two "Carmens" Create Keen Rivalry in Terre Haute

Indiana City Is Scene of Lively Advertising with Automobiles and Bands by Managers of Grand and American for Drawing Crowds to Lasky and Fox Productions

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Terre Haute, Ind., Nov. 5

COMPETITION of the keenest sort was displayed within the last week in Terre Haute when both the Lasky and Fox productions of "Carmen" were shown at local theatres. The Fox "Carmen" with Theda Bara was offered by Manager Charles Smith of the Grand for six days beginning Thursday, October 28, while the Lasky production with Geraldine Farrar was shown by Manager Less at the American for four days beginning the same day.

The presence of both versions in the city brought out a small war between the theatres, both engaging in it through the medium of newspaper advertising. Both carried extra large advertisements in local papers and resorted to automobiles carrying advertisements.

Every available place in the city was filled with posters of the Fox "Carmen." Manager Less of the American put an automobile on the streets carrying a band and with banners on the sides.

In retaliation the Grand had a larger automobile on the street bearing large signs that almost obscured the machine. Both sides of this auto carried signs reading "The William Fox 'Carmen' beats the band." Following one another around the streets of the city, it began to attract the attention of everyone. As a final trump, the American automobile carried signs reading "We lead, others follow," and "We're no pikers, we can afford a band."

The sight that greeted the eyes of Terre Hauteans then was the American automobile and the Grand, which this time carried a sign "We don't need a band." And, the driver of the Grand automobiles had orders to keep ahead of the American at all times, which he did until he forced the rival automobile to stop.

TIFFANY MAKES NEW PRINTS FOR "HEART OF MARYLAND"

New prints and a new campaign are ready for the coming season of Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland," the six-reel Belasco play produced by Herbert Brennon for the Tiffany Films Corporation.

The new bookings are now being taken, and it is pointed out that while these bookings can be arranged at the Metro exchanges, the picture is not and never has been on the regular Metro program.

"The Heart of Maryland" played to 139,000 persons in nine days at the New York Hippodrome, and it has been booked continuously ever since. It was because of the drawing power of the feature that new prints were ordered and the new advertising campaign entered into.

Joseph W. Engel, of the Tiffany company, said this week in speaking of this feature:

"The demand for 'The Heart of Maryland' has not been alone due to Mrs. Carter, although her name has a wonderful drawing power, but rather to the size and importance of the drama itself."

The new bookings are being arranged now for time that extends beyond the holidays.

Anna Held's Morosco Film May Be a Fashion Bazaar

French Comedienne, on Way to Los Angeles from New York, Where There Are Whispers of an Engagement with Russian Prince, to Wear $25,000 Sable Coat

ANNA HELD is on her way to Los Angeles, where the French comedienne will make her motion picture debut at the studios of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company.

On entering her limousine at the Savoy Hotel, which was to rush her to the Grand Central, Miss Held was confronted by several persistent newspaper reporters who tried to secure a confession of her reported engagement to a Russian prince.

The star cleverly avoided all direct replies to the many questions put to her by the newspaper men and blandly smiled at the determined efforts of her interviewers. The story, which Miss Held neither denied nor affirmed, involves a Russian nobleman who met the star on board the steamer St. Louis during her trip to this country several weeks ago.

Since arriving in this country it is stated that the actress and the Russian have been seen together most every evening at the theatres. The Russian has business with his government's consul here and it is confidently expected that an announcement of marriage will be forthcoming when Miss Held reaches Los Angeles.

The famous star did not seem any the worse for her vigorous activities on the battle-front in France since the beginning of the war. That she rendered valuable assistance to her country was demonstrated by the enthusiastic praise which has been accorded her by prominent government officials and other well known figures.

Just before boarding her car Miss Held said: "I have brought over a collection of new gowns which I will wear in motion pictures and which represent an outlay of a fortune. Besides my new gowns I have brought over a new $25,000 Russian sable coat and a $20,000 ermine cloak. Besides its other qualities I think you will find my film a fashion bazaar, as these clothes which I have brought over with me cannot be duplicated in this country and are just fresh from the modiste."

For one motion picture Oliver Morosco will pay her $25,000, it is said.

Premier Will Sell Pictures Outright to Exchanges

Company Expects to Release 55 Features a Year, and Will Have Experienced Men to Judge Quality of Pictures as They Come from the Studios

THE Premier Program Corporation, with main and executive offices at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, announces its entrance into the field of Feature Programs.

Although the name Premier Program, under which this company will release fifty-two features annually, is a new one in the industry, the company is not a newcomer in the field, inasmuch as the five producing companies, who will release on this program, have been established as successful producers of features for years.

Each feature is made under the supervision and subject to the approval of the Premier Program Corporation. It must not only meet the standard set by each producer for his own work, but must also undergo an examination at the hands of the sales company.

Premier pictures will be released through independent exchanges; the attitude of the corporation is that the best interests of both the exhibitor and his patrons demand that the rental, distribution and care of picture plays can best be served by the local exchange.

Premier Pictures will be sold outright to the exchangeman—they will be his property. The plan does not include any percentage or profit sharing scheme.

No franchises or guarantees are a part of the Premier program, as this corporation is amply financed, and ask no aid from the exchangeman.

G. Blake Garrison, secretary of the Premier Program Corporation, said: "Our organization is founded upon the great modern business tendency of co-operation. We are all firm believers in accomplishing the best results by working together. Our success is dependent on and bound up with the success of the exchangeman and the exhibitor."

New Kriterion Engages Expert for Its Publicity

Joseph S. Edelman, Who Made Reputation in Advertising Field by Work for Well-Known Commercial Houses, Will Prepare Helps for Exhibitors

JOSEPH S. EDELMAN, recently director of advertising for the World Film Corporation, has been engaged by the Kriterion Film Corporation to direct its advertising and publicity releases.

The New Kriterion Sales Corporation plans to release a program, featuring well known players of film and stage; one and two reel pictures that will have the strength and drawing power of a feature crowded into one or two reels of interest and action.

It is in line with the policy of quality that Kriterion has outlined that they have engaged a man of Mr. Edelman's reputation and ability to insure the quality of its advertising matter, doing justice to its film releases.

Mr. Edelman, whose work with World Film attracted considerable attention and who was one of the first men to introduce artistic posters into the film field, is president of the Sterling Advertising Service and earned his commercial reputation in the advertising field by his exceptional work for Joseph P. Day, Robert H. Ingersoll and Bro., M. Morgenthau Jr. and many others.

The same character and quality of advertising helps that Mr. Edelman planned for World Film Features will be used for the Kriterion Program.

The company will have a complete system of advertising helps for exhibitors. Artistic posters made from original sketches by the best men in the commercial field, exceptional lobby displays and a number of other things new to the film world will be used by the company.

ESSANAY ANTI-TUBERCULOSIS PICTURE TO HELP FIGHT WHITE PLAGUE

Essanay has just completed a two act photoplay for the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association, of Milwaukee. The film, which is called "The Power of the Penny," depicts all the horrors of consumption and shows all the detail of the work being done by the association to stamp it out.

The plot contains a powerful love story and is an intensely interesting romance as well as a technically instructive story. Scenes were made in the streets of Milwaukee, in hovels where entire families were stricken with the disease, and at the sanatorium and free dispensary.

The work of the physicians in the hospital as well as the life of the patients was shown in detail. It is a story that touches the hearts of all and makes them go out in sympathy to these unfortunates. The photoplay will be shown throughout the State in the association's fight against tuberculosis.

It will afterwards be loaned to other organizations for exhibition, in order to show the public the conditions existing and arouse it to determined action to wipe out the white plague from the country.

The photoplay was directed by Richard Foster Baker, and a staff of Essanay players takes the leads in the drama. The photoplay was written by Louis F. Brand, a Milwaukee newspaper man.

Bronx Exhibitors Make Merry at Third Annual Ball

Large Crowd Entertained by "Trilby," Equitable, and an E. and R. Jungle Picture, Besides Several Vaudeville Numbers and Dancing, Bringing the Event Into Small Morning Hours

THE third annual entertainment and ball of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County, N. Y., held at Hunt's Point Palace, Monday, November 1, proved a most successful affair. Practically every exhibitor in the Bronx is a member of the association, which is one of the best regulated local organizations of the city.

The great majority of them attended the ball, while a number of screen players were also on hand to aid in amusing the many film fans who swarmed the hall.

"Trilby," the Equitable picture, opened the entertainment, in honor of Clara Kimball Young, who attended the ball in person, accompanied by her husband, James Young. The E. and R. Jungle picture, entitled "From the Jungle to the Stage," an animal comedy featuring Napoleon, the trained chimpanzee, was projected and eagerly greeted by the crowded house.

Following this several vaudeville numbers featuring chiefly Thanhouser and Biograph talent held the boards. The entertainment closed with the Vitagraph release, "The Sort of Girl Who Came from Heaven," with Earle Williams and Anita Stewart.

There was a grand march, which paved the way for dancing that continued late into the evening. It was led by Clara Kimball Young and Earle Williams, while officers and members of the association and players followed.

The boxholders were Thanhouser, George Kleine, Metro, Kalem, Edison, Biograph, Simplex, Screen Club, Fox Film, Vitagraph, Earle Williams, Clara Kimball Young, World Film and Equitable, Universal, Pathé, Mutual, the Press, and various of the committees and officers of the Cinema Club.

Members of many of the companies were present, including Miss Young, Mr. Williams, Ben Wilson, Viola Dana, Leah Baird, Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, Mrs. Nellie Anderson, Beatrice Anderson, Harry Benham, Muriel Ostriche, Edward Dunn, Frank LeStrange, and Edward Earle.

Of the various committees and officers of the association, John J. Wittman, Henry Cole, Herman Pollak, John C. Bolte, F. L. Allen, Henry Newman, A. Bauernfreund, James J. Haggerty, Moses Cohen, Thomas Howard, and W. Colby were those of principal importance.

Others present were: Joe Brandt, superintending the vast Universal contingent; Nat Rothstein, Morris Pivar, M. H. Hoffman, George Proctor, Charles Condon and Peter Milne.

The affair ran smoothly from beginning to end. The entertainment provided in the first part of the evening was thoroughly enjoyed, while dancing later on proved as popular as ever. The large crowd indicated financial success of the event.

Ministers Approve Blackton "Battle Cry of Peace"

President of National Association of Evangelists of Churches of Christ Declares That Picture Has Inspirational Value of Untold Benefit, Scout Crawford Tells Boston Audience

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boston, Nov. 6.

SINCE the news was made public of the purchase of the rights for Boston and New England of the Vitagraph company's war spectacle, "The Battle Cry of Peace," now at the Majestic theatre, its purchasers, Frank Howard, Nathan H. Gordon, Ernest H. Hortsman, Arthur E. Lord, Max Shoolman and Richard Browne have been besieged by offers from all pars of New England for territory in this district.

A feature of the film spectacle at the Majestic is the appearance of Capt. Jack Crawford, the famous chief of scouts, who takes part in the finale of the film.

"I am a great believer in this picture," said the captain to a NEWS man. "It is what the people need to wake them up to a realization of their duty to their country in arousing Congressmen to vote for bigger naval and military appropriations.

"And I have a letter here from Dr. S. M. Martin of Seattle, president of the National Association of Evangelists of the Churches of Christ. Dr. Martin says the film's inspirational value is incalculable; it carries a message and has a heaven-born mission in behalf of peace. He believes its thesis and commends it to his friends and to his countrymen."

Captain Crawford has made arrangements to appear in several more Vitagraph pictures.

PROCTOR, SHY OF STINGERS, TURNS DOWN SCRIPT CALLING FOR TRAINED BUMBLEBEE

George du Bois Proctor, scenario editor for the Gaumont Company, has received a scenario calling for the use of a trained bumblebee. Mr. Proctor says the story is a "stinger," but that he was forced to return it because Edwin Middleton, director of Casino Star Comedies on the Mutual program, absolutely refused to direct a trained bumblebee. He was afraid it might forget its training.

Ten Equitable Directors by the Tenth of Next Month

Company Expects, with Six Productions Now Completed, That It Will Have at Least Twelve Subjects Ahead Before January 1

MARSHALL FARNUM, who has been away in Cuba, during the past three weeks, completing the Equitable production of "Creeping Tides," in which Alexandra Carlisle and an all star cast will appear, returned to New York this week with the finished negative, and immediately began work at the Fifty-second street studio on "The Man Higher Up" in which Frank Sheridan, William H. Tooker, Clara Whipple, Mary Charleson, Frank Beamish, Harry Spingler, Myrtis Coney, Anita Booth, John Booth and George Arbene will comprise the cast.

Mr. Farnum, for the production of "The Man Higher Up," has procured the consent of the police department, the New York Clearing House, and several branches of the civic administration's quarters, where many of the scenes will be laid in their proper locale, without the necessity of building studio imitations.

Webster Cullison returned last Saturday from Martinique, French West Indies, where he went early in October to stage the chief scenes in "Idols" in which Katharine Kaelred is appearing. Mr. Cullison is now at the Flushing, Long Island, Equitable studios, and is to start work on "The Chain Invisible," in which Brandon Tynan, the dramatic actor, will appear, and which will be the first of Richard Le Gallienne's stories to be visualized.

E. Mason Hopper, accompanied by William Courtney, Mary Charleson, Arthur Ashley and William Sheer, leave next Saturday night for Ausable Chasm, where many of the scenes in "Sealed Lips" will be staged. When "Sealed Lips" is finished, Mr. Hopper will begin work on "Three Pair of Shoes" in which Julia Dean will make her screen appearance in her first important feature.

S. E. V. Taylor, formerly with Biograph, and now an Equitable director, will begin work November 12 on an original story entitled "One Night" in which Molly McIntyre will make her screen debut. Miss McIntyre, the original Bunty in "Bunty Pulls the Strings," and Kitty McKay, was to have appeared in "The Modern Girl," but when Mr. Taylor joined Equitable, he brought with him the scenario of "One Night," and Miss McIntyre immediately selected this for her first appearance in silent drama.

Edmund Lawrence, a director for the Triumph Film Corporation, who is completing his final scenes in "The Senator" in which Charles J. Ross makes his first Equitable appearance, will return to New York from Washington next week and begin work with Mary Boland, in "The Ransom" which will be Miss Boland's first camera work.

Joseph Golden, also of Triumph, which concern is one of the chief producing allies of Equitable, will be at work within the week on the production of "Old Clothes" in which Lenore Ulrich, last seen in "The Better Woman," will be featured in the stellar role.

In addition to the above activities the Equitable announces the acquisition of numerous stars and directors.

Brandon Tynan, Mary Boland, Olive Wyndham, Thomas A. Wise, William Courtney, Mary Charleson, Arthur Ashley, Gail Kane, Molly McIntyre, Julia Dean, Emmett Corrigan, Frank Beamish, Charles Cherry and Carlyle Blackwell have all joined the Equitable. Gail Kane has been contracted with for exclusive appearance in Equitable films for a period of two years. Muriel Ostriche has been engaged for three years. Molly McIntyre has been contracted with for a long period, to appear in numerous pictures, while Charles Cherry and Carlyle Blackwell will make their appearance in at least six Equitable productions.

Before December 1, General Manager Felix F. Feist expects to have ten directors at work in the three Equitable studios, and enough features of merit on hand to offset any emergencies for the following six months.

Equitable now has six productions on the shelf, all of which were shown the World Film sales and division managers at Chicago last week, and with the ten directors active, it is anticipated by the Equitable heads that they will have at least twelve productions ahead before January 1.

HERO OF "HAM" COMEDY RECOVERS FROM INJURY

Lloyd V. Hamilton's injured leg is rapidly regaining its normal strength, and before long "Ham" will be at his old tricks again.

The famous Kalem comedian accompanied Director Beaudine's forces while the funmakers were at work on "Minnie, the Tiger," and watched the work from the side lines.

PICTURE BOARD OF TRADE ADOPTS TRADE MARK

An official trade mark for the Motion Picture Board of Trade has been adopted and copyrighted by the publicity committee of the board. The spread-eagle with its shield and message of "Progression, Protection, Promotion," the organization's slogan, will hereafter appear on all stationery, circulars and printed matter issuing from the office of the board. It will be a distinguishing mark and evidence of standing in the trade for the users.

The trade mark will become a permanent part of the trade journals, and will also appear on the letterheads, films, lithographs, advertising matter and in the house organs of many of the manufacturers. Cuts of it will be made in a number of sizes, to accommodate the needs of those who wish to use it. Present plans are to have membership buttons made of the same design, also.

Some of the exhibitor members have secured permission to use it in their programs and advertising matter and on their slides and lobby display. The trade mark, designed by Lambart Guenther, art director of the New York Tribune and one of the best artists in America, is easily handled for embossing, stamping or printing, and is a distinct sign of stability and permanency in the motion picture industry.

Historic King's Favorite, Jane Shore, in a Mutual

"Strife Eternal," Featuring Blanche Forsythe in the Lead, and Reproducing Times of Edward IV of England, with Battle Scenes of 4,000 Extras, Ready on 25th

SHOWING EXTENSIVE SETS AND BIG SCENES IN "THE STRIFE ETERNAL," FIVE PART MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE, WITH BLANCHE FORSYTHE AS "JANE SHORE"

MORE than 4,000 persons, including a cast of noted screen players, headed by Blanche Forsythe, are presented in "The Strife Eternal," in five reels and over two hundred scenes, to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation, November 25, as a Mutual Masterpicture.

This production depicts the enthralling romance of Jane Shore, favorite of King Edward IV of England, who rose from the sphere of a humble goldsmith's wife to a life of lavish splendor at the English court, to finally end her existence as a beggar in the streets of London.

Vividly depicted on the screen, the drama is a pageant of beauty. Old London forms a quaint, medieval background for gracefully moving throngs of gorgeously clad people, the pomp of the processional, the festivities of the court, the gaieties of the guilds and the artisan folk. Exceptionally interesting are the wonderful battle scenes, in several of which between 3,000 and 3,500 men are employed. These scenes represent as nearly as possible the hosts of the Lancastrians, King Edward's return from Flanders and the landing of his vast hordes of fighting men at Ravenspur.

Exceptional pains are said to have been taken in selecting the cast for the screening of this important historical play. Old portraits of the historic personages that appear in the productions were, it is stated, studied with infinite care, in order that appearance, manner, dress and personal peculiarities of those who played such a big part in the page of history might be minutely reproduced.

King Edward IV is impersonated by Roy Travers; Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III, is played by Rolphe Leslie; Dora De Winton appears in the role of Margaret, the jealous cousin of Matthew Shore, and Jane Shore lives again before our eyes in the person of Miss Forsythe.

Among the many female characters who crowd the pages of history, few appeal more strongly or stir the emotions so deeply as the remarkable and unfortunate lady—Jane Shore, heroine of this forthcoming production from Mutual. The age at which she lived was a lurid and picturesque one; and viewing it from this period of time, it presents itself to us as a series of interesting dramatic episodes.

British historical records, as viewed by the producers of "The Strife Eternal," narrate that the very first time King Edward IV set eyes on Jane Shore, he fell a slave to her beauty and charm and, forgetting his duty to his lawful consort, took Jane under his protection and established her at court. During her life time she exercised a tremendous influence over him, as Sir Thomas More, from whose works much of the data on which the screen version of "The Strife Eternal" is based, said, "never abused it to any man's hurt, but used it to many a man's comfort and relief."

Her life under the protection of Edward IV was one continuous round of pleasure and splendor, but being a woman of gentle disposition and largeness of heart, she distinguished herself by acts of charity and mercy, and seems to have been exceedingly popular, as Sir Thomas More relates, with all classes at that time.

When Edward died, the brutal Richard (the Protector), and later Richard III, singled the unhappy woman out as a butt for his vengeance and his spite. First of all, he appropriated her jewelry, of which she had considerable, stripped her of all her possessions with the exception of a few pieces of clothing, and then handed her over to the unscrupulous judge (who was completely in Richard's power) who sentenced her to walk bare-footed and but partly clothed through the crowded streets of London. Jeered and mocked at by the ribald crowds lining the streets, the hapless girl, who in preceding years had befriended many of them, suffered agony beyond description. Later the brutal judges placed her, penniless and hungry, a beggar on the streets of London.

Smithson, Noted Stage Producer, Now with Edison

His Broadway Successes Include "The Girl from Paris," a Big Money Maker in Its Day; "The Defender," First Bringing Blanche Ring into Prominence, and Many Others

IN the nature of a triumph for the Edison organization is the winning over to motion pictures of Frank Smithson, the noted Broadway theatrical producer, to become its director general under Leonard W. McChesney, studio and motion picture division manager.

For a bright galaxy indeed it would make were the players' names to be mentioned who owe to Mr. Smithson's acumen their present eminent position on the stage and screen.

A few of these, within easy memory, are "The Girl from Paris," said to be "a world beater" among productions for the money it made; "Monte Carlo," "Hotel Topsy Turvy," "The Defender" in Boston when Blanche Ring first came into prominence, "The Chaperons," "The Orchid," "The Blue Moon," "The Top of the World," "The Motor Girl," "The Beauty Spot," "The Giddy Throng," "King's Carnival," "Nancy Brown," "Queen of the Moulin Rouge," "Louisiana Lou" and "High Jinks."

Mr. Smithson had but just returned from Chicago, where he staged a big success when he jumped into the rehearsing of another in New York. When this task is finished, he will take up his new duties, about November 22, at the Edison studio.

Twenty years of a most active life have been spent in America by Mr. Smithson who, however, was a well known leading comedian in England before he came here. There, he was associated with Sir Augustus Harris, William Greet and others of prominence. He has originated many parts, notably Uncle Matt in "La Cigale," Larry O'Brien in "Dandy Dick," with May Yohe, who made a sensational success at that time. Mr. Smithson also played in and staged many English plays and pantomimes. Then he visited this country for pleasure.

Here he met E. E. Rice, who prevailed upon him to remain and stage "The Girl from Paris" at the Herald Square Theatre. Since that time Mr. Smithson has become a loyal American citizen, declaring that he loves his adopted land the more each year he stays.

Mr. Smithson will work hand and hand with the studio manager, Mr. McChesney, but the former will enjoy more latitude and authority than has heretofore been alloted one in a similar position, in recognition of Mr. Smithson's.

The Edison organization long negotiated with Mr. Smithson before he could hear the call of motion pictures, but now that they have been successful, there is a feeling that he will be a motive and energetic factor in placing Edison releases in an enviable position.

Scream Club Raises Its Voice in Praise of Anita King

Paramount Girl, Who Made Trans-Continental Trip Alone in Auto and Will Be Starred by Lasky, Is Elected Honorary Member of Los Angeles Organization

Los Angeles, Nov. 4.

ANITA KING, the Lasky-Paramount girl, well-known tourist and motorist, the first woman to cross the continent alone in an automobile, was the guest of honor at a dinner given to the members of the

ANITA KING, THE PARAMOUNT GIRL, CARRIED FROM THE TRAIN ON HER ARRIVAL IN LOS ANGELES

Scream Club, composed of publicity people of the West Coast studios, and representatives of the trade papers, by Kenneth McGaffey, of the Lasky publicity staff, Sunday evening, October 31, at Assembly Hall of the Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles.

Miss King was singularly honored by being unanimously elected the only honorary member of the club in appreciation by the members of her most remarkable ability to secure first-page space, embellished by two and three column headlines and cuts.

The dinner of nine courses began with a chemically pure cocktail, and the menu was representative of the dishes each city Miss King passed through, or is famous for. As silent guests were a replica of the pet dog Miss King killed on the desert to prevent it from dying of thirst, and the rabid coyote she killed in a hand to hand struggle.

Telegrams of congratulations poured in at the rate of one a minute from such notables as Theodore Roosevelt, William Jennings Bryan, Lord Kitchener, Mayor Mitchel, and city officials of many localities —asking that the keys of the city be returned. Mr. McGaffey presided as toastmaster, and the principal speaker of the evening was Miss King, who recounted numerous instances of her experience in a most interesting manner. Others who responded were Jesse L. Lasky, William de Mille, M. L. Lewis, and J. C. Jessen.

Miss King arrived from the East, Saturday afternoon, and was greeted at the station with a delegation of Los Angeles officers, many representatives of the Auto Club of Southern California, and the entire producing staff of the Lasky studio. Saturday evening she was guest of honor at the Los Angeles automobile show, the occasion being known as "Anita King Night."

Preparations are now being made for the filming of the first subject in which Miss King will be starred by the Lasky company. This will in all probability be titled "The Paramount Girl." The scenario is being prepared by William de Mille, and the direction, it is understood, will be in charge of Cecil B. de Mille. Every effort is to be made to make this picture the greatest production the Lasky company has ever made, and will be the first of a series.

The tour across the continent has served to cause everyone who comes in contact with Miss King to see that in the past she has been greatly underestimated.

FRANK LOSEE PICKED BY FAMOUS PLAYERS FOR "OLD HOMESTEAD"

Contracts have just been signed whereby the Famous Players Film Company obtains the exclusive services of Frank Losee, the distinguished character actor who has already appeared in numerous feature productions of that concern.

Mr. Losee's first role since becoming a permanent member of the Famous Players staff will be that of Josh Whitcomb, the beloved character in "The Old Homestead," which the late Denman Thompson rendered unforgetable by his quaint and charming impersonation. Work on the screen production of this play has already begun, the first scenes being taken in the newly acquired studio

The first important role which Mr. Losee played upon the screen for the Famous Players was the villainous Baron Bonelli in "The Eternal City," in which he attained a great success in support of Pauline Frederick. Mr. Losee has been seen in a number of other big Famous Players productions.

WATSON SEEN AGAIN IN TRAMP MAKE-UP, IN KLEINE SUBJECT

Harry Watson, the tramp in Ziegfeld's early "Follies" shows, is again seen in his old make-up bearing the more or less appropriate name of Musty Suffer and doing all of those inimitably funny bits of business which did so much to popularize the Ziegfeld entertainment.

As Bickel, Watson and Wrothe, the original team will be remembered in the three-act comedy, "Me, Him and I," but the later combination of Bickel and Watson is better known in connection with the "Follies" and innumerable vaudeville tours.

"Keep Moving" is in five reels. How highly it is regarded by the Kleine forces is amply attested by the barren offices when word goes forth that some part of it is to be projected for editing or other purposes.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City

MONTREAL EXHIBITORS QUICKLY SUPPORT GAZETTE'S PHOTOPLAY DEPARTMENT

THE Montreal Gazette is one of the latest recruits to the ranks of newspapers printing motion picture pages.

This photoplay department, now in its fourth week, is edited by T. H. Frazier, who induced the Gazette to accord motion pictures the recognition due them, and within a few hours himself secured enough exchange and exhibitor advertising to insure a page every Saturday for a year.

How far the Gazette and Mr. Frazier have progressed in their commendable enterprise is shown by a reproduction of part of the Gazette's photoplay department on this page. The issue of October 30 gave up two pages to pictures alone, thereby placing the Gazette at once in the class of newspapers which are doing their full duty by the exhibitor.

Montreal exhibitors are proving they are "live wires" by advertising freely in the Gazette's pages.

In general, the Gazette's department is very good. No doubt it will be improved as it gets older, and this improvement should include, we suggest, the use of illustrations, larger display heads, a guide to all Montreal theatres, uniformity of type in the ads, and short items of gossip about plays and players.

When these and other features are added, the Gazette's department will be as excellent in detail as in general plan.

We urge Montreal exhibitors to give the Gazette's department their continued cordial support, remembering that the newspaper can be made a most powerful ally of the picture theatre.

FREE TICKETS FOR KENTUCKIANS WHO HAD NEVER SEEN PICTURES

Two hundred free tickets were distributed recently by the Masonic theatre, Shepherdsville, Ky., on a novel plan. The theatre advertised for one week that on a certain date it would give one ticket to each person making application who had never seen a motion picture performance.

"WINDOW DRESSING" FOR THEATRE FRONTS LIKE DEPARTMENT STORES

Reports of good times for exhibitors in the Middle West, and prospects of the best season on record, ahead, were brought east this week by C. W. Deibel, of Youngstown, O. Mr. Deibel is proprietor of the Dome theatre, the largest motion picture house in Youngstown, with a seating capacity of 1,200. Although his house is located in the heart of the downtown district, Mr. Deibel has made a great success of features, and has just made an extensive booking of Paramount and V-L-S-E subjects.

"Thorough and vigorous advertising has had much to do with our success," said Mr. Deibel. "We treat our theatre just as the wide-awake merchants on both sides of us treat their stores, and employ a regular 'window dresser' to dress up the front of our house and attract the shopper, the same as a merchant does.

"Attractive posters, appropriate decorations, and lighting effects, changed frequently, give a sample of the goods offered inside, and bring in the crowds. We also use the newspapers freely, and find they are

Players of Note on Legitimate Stage to Pose for Camera

After a career in the spoken drama, extending from 1883, Otis Harlan has announced his permanent retirement from the stage. Hereafter Mr. Harlan expects to devote his talents exclusively to motion picture work. He will shortly make his initial bow to picture fans in the Selig Red Seal play, "A Black Sheep." Harlan has had a notable career on the stage. He has starred in most of the Hoyt comedies, both at home and abroad and has acted as principal funmaker for such stars as Anna Held, Ethel Levy, Elsie Janis, Thomas W. Seabrook, and others. He also staged the original production of "Baby Mine." He aided in the organization and was prominently identified with the Bijou Circuit for years, and is reputed to be among the wealthiest of American actors. He last appeared in Montreal as the comedian in "Bon Bleu."

Henrietta Crosman, star of many stage successes, has just finished her first experience in the movies, posing for the leading role in "The Paddist." She declares herself delighted with the work, and will return to the screen after completing her stage engagements for the season.

Raymond Hitchcock is making his film debut in "The Ring-tailed Rhinoceros," a fanciful comedy. His wife, Flora Zabelle, appeared in his support.

Victor Moore, one of the most successful of legitimate and vaudeville comedians, has decided to forsake the footlights for a period of years, in order to appear exclusively in Paramount Pictures at a large salary. He was the original Kid Burns in Cohan's "Forty-Five led the child's part in "The Prince Chap" and similar roles with Mrs. Leslie Carter, Mrs. Fiske and Bertha Kalich, and was to the title role of "The Littlest Rebel," which charmed playgoers during four years. Finally she was snapped up by Metro making her first appearance in "Always in the Way." Barrie has a screen production been received with such universal approval, and so Metro got busy immediately and found another five-act Star from just waited to her, "Emmy of Stork's Nest," which also scored an immediate hit. The name of little Mary Miles Minter is one that will be heard very often in the next few years.

Great interest is being manifested in the $2,000 and prize contest instituted by the Metro Pictures Limited, according to managers of local theatres showing Metro Pictures. In order to enter the Popular Opinion Contest patrons of houses showing Metro are required to give their candid opinions on each Metro release for a period of twenty-six weeks. The person sending in what is deemed by the judges to be the most intelligent set of answers will be awarded the first prize of $1,000. There are 142 other prizes making up the aggregate sum of $2,000 for this contest.

In the Patriotic Scenario Contest the first prize is also $1,000 and the other prizes aggregate a like amount. These prizes are offered by Metro Pictures Limited and are open only to Canadians. The judges will be prominent men of Canada and only Canadian residents may participate in either event.

Full information and a booklet of rules may be secured at the Imperial, Crystal Palace, Electra or Fairyland Theatres.

"THE SPENDER"

Five-Act Gold Rooster Play at Casino

"The Spender," a Gold Rooster play in five acts, will be seen at the Casino on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Peter Lobert, young, enthusiastic and tremendously alive, lets his reckless carelessness plunge him heavily into debt once too often, and is sent away by his indignant father, to seek his fortune as best he may. Bagley, the faithful old family servitor, casts his lot with his young master. That night, at the Royal Arms, Peter's favorite cafe, he tells his companions of his misfortune. The picture of an American heiress gives him an inspiration and he declares his intention of going to America, masquerading as a prince, and winning the hand of the Yankee newly-rich. As a prince, it doesn't take Peter long to gain entrance to the McCabe home, and as a lover it doesn't take him long to gain admission to Nellie McCabe's heart. They are married, much against the wishes of Pat McCabe, who doesn't put his faith in princes and who orders Peter, now that he has her, to take care of her. This hasn't been Peter's idea at all, but, since it has come to a showdown, he tells of his poverty and she, though disillusioned, sticks bravely to him. Peter and Bagley get a job in McCabe's factory, unknown to McCabe. The latter has trouble with his help, who are incited to strike and riot by Jim Walsh, a walking delegate. NOTE THE GENEROUS SIZE OF ADVERTISEMENTS USED BY MONTREAL EXHIBITORS now waking up to the fact that much news of real news value is to be found in the motion picture business. THE EMPRESS THEATRE, 'FRISCO, USES ELABORATE ELECTRICAL DISPLAY

Sid Grauman, proprietor of the Empress theatre in San Francisco, gave a special midnight performance of the William Fox feature, "The Soul of Broadway," starring Valeska Suratt, on Saturday, October 16. The performance was an invitation affair and several hundred guests were present. Music was furnished by an augmented orchestra, special souvenir programs were distributed and refreshments were served.

ELECTRICAL DISPLAY OF THE EMPRESS THEATRE, SAN FRANCISCO, WHEN "SIN" WAS BEING SHOWN THERE

Mr. Grauman has come to be recognized as one of the livliest exhibitors on the Pacific coast. He is a firm believer in advertising and gives particular attention to electrical displays. During his showing of the William Fox production, "Sin," featuring Theda Bara, Mr. Grauman used a six-deck, four-color electrical display of 246 letters. More than 1,800 electric globes were used in the display.

BOTH "CARMENS" BREAK RECORD IN SYRACUSE

The showing of "Carmen" at the two theatres was heralded with so much advance advertising and talk that Syracuse went "Carmen mad."

The Eckel placed window cards in every store in Syracuse and broke all Syracuse records for motion picture advertising by using practically a full-page advertisement in a Sunday paper. An augmented orchestra furnished music from the opera, and four policemen furnished protection to hold the crowds back.

Manager Edgar Weil of the Strand made history by securing permission of the street railway company to place one-sheet cards on the front of every trolley car in Syracuse one week in advance of showing. In addition, he mailed to each member of every musical organization in Syracuse a photo of Geraldine Farrar, a sketch of her life, and the announcement of the Strand showing.

Fenita DeSora, a Spanish pupil of Geraldine Farrar, and Edward Caferty, a Metropolitan Grand Opera singer, rendered selections from "Carmen" in the intermissions, and sixty college students behind the screen applauded and worked the mob effects.

Both theatres did a record-breaking business and the picture created more comment than any feature picture or any photoplay ever before shown in Syracuse.

DRAWS CROWDS TO "CHINATOWN" BY NOVEL ADVERTISING

"Chinatown" was being pictured at the Boyd, Omaha, Neb. Manager Harry Cockrill had the front of the house decorated in a profuse manner with Chinese lanterns, shrubbery, buildings, etc., and in a side room he served tiny cups of tea, prepared over a charcoal stove by a Chinese maiden. Newspaper stories in Chinese-English were run. A Chinese man, or a man dressed in a Chinese costume, rather, stood in the lobby giving out programs.

Needless to say, everyone who attended told his or her friends, and the local newspapers ran several stories about the idea.

CIRCLE THEATRE, EASTON, IMPROVES ITS HOUSE ORGAN

"GREATER LOVE HATH NO MAN"

To lay down one's life for one's friend is an easy heroism compared with the sacrifice which inspires this story. Varge takes the guilt of a man he does not love, on his own shoulders. Why does he do it? Everyone believes him innocent, even the judge and jury who condemn him on the strength of his own confession. Despite his repeated assertions of guilt, the rumor of his innocence pervades the Penitentiary. He endures punishment stolidly until love enters his cell. Then he breaks and—well, it all ends happily. This is a story of surpassing interest—it grips you, enthralls you, holds you spell-bound. But why did Varge do it?

MARY PICKFORD

The highest salaried motion picture actress in the world

In one of her greatest characterizations

"RAGS"

By Edith Barnard Delano Directed by James Kirkwood

Mary Pickford, the world's foremost motion picture star, repeats in "Rags" the transcendent triumph she attained in "Tess of the Storm Country," hitherto conceded to be her greatest portrayal. Always intimable, always human, lovable and impulsive she makes the character of "Rags" a living, breathing incarnation of all that is sweet and tender. The dramatic situations are numerous and powerful and the sacrifices, renunciation, and ultimate triumph of the abused and oppressed title character are thrilling in the extreme. "Rags" is a genuine Pickford classic.

"Rags" is the great story of a girl's rise from the lowest strata of life to a position of social importance, through which she finds it possible to marry the man she loves, whom before she thought too far above her. There is melodrama in some parts of the story, refined by a touch of delicacy inseparable from all Miss Pickford's impersonations. "Little Mary" herself in the crowning glory of the subject, and the manner in which she illustrates her emergence from the sordid world into which her father's drunkenness places her, is worthy the art of a Bernhardt.

WORLD AND EQUITABLE FILM HEADS CONVENE AT CHICAGO IN FOUR-DAY SESSION

THE convention of the heads of the World Film and the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's sales and division managers and department heads, which convened at Chicago, Monday, November 1, adjourned Thursday, November 4.

Monday morning the convention assembled with Lewis J. Selznick and Arthur H. Spiegel occupying chairman and vice-chairman seats. Mr. Selznick addressed the gathering, using as his theme co-operation and efficiency. At noon the meeting adjourned for luncheon and the afternoon was given over to debating.

Primarily the convention was held to acquaint the World Film roadmen with the Equitable activities, past and forthcoming. During the convention on Monday, Assistant General Manager Harry C. Drum, of the World Film, appointed twenty-four of the forty-eight visiting salesmen and branch managers to act as exhibitors and the remaining twenty-four to act as salesmen, and for five hours the two sides debated on the strength and weakness of the World Film and Equitable pictures.

Tuesday's session convened at 10 A. M., and President Arthur H. Spiegel, of the Equitable, addressed the gathering.

Tuesday afternoon Harry L. Reichenbach, of the Equitable Corporation, addressed the visitors on advertising and publicity, and in the course of his talk intimated that during the forthcoming year Equitable would spend at least twenty per cent of its revenue in aids and exploitation assistance to their contracted customers. This exploitation consists in lobby displays, permanent outdoor posters and other advertising matter of a permanent nature, which will go to the exhibitor almost gratis and be an enduring attraction for him.

All day Wednesday was given over to the sales and division managers of the World Film when a book on salesmanship, compiled by Harry C. Drum, was thoroughly gone over in every detail. The book consists of 155 pages of closely written material.

A banquet was tendered the employees by General Manager Selznick, of the World Film, and President Spiegel, of the Equitable Corporation, at the Hotel La Salle, Wednesday night at 7:30, at which Mayor Thompson, of Chicago, welcomed the visiting film men in the name of Chicago.

Among the prominent speakers at the banquet were: Lewis J. Selznick, Alfred Bamberger, Arthur H. Spiegel, N. J. Spiegel, Captain Harry Lambart, Harry C. Drum, Leander Richarson, Rapley Holmes, J. H. Schaeffer, Harry L. Reichenbach and W. W. Drum.

Telegrams were read from Clara Kimball Young, Maurice Tourneur, Robert Warwick, William A. Brady, Lee Shubert, Felix Feist, Isidore Bernstein, Gail Kane, Harry E. Young, a number of the branches of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors League and the World Film and Equitable employees in New York.

A full list of the employees of the two organizations present during the convention which was held at the Hotel La Salle, follows:

S. J. Berman, New York; S. W. Hand, Boston; George J. Beihoff, Philadelphia; C. W. Bunn, Washington; Ben S. Cohen, Buffalo; S. E. Morris, Cleveland; J. O. Kent, Detroit; Clay E. Brehm, Cincinnati; W. A. Ratz, Indianapolis; I. H. Hirsch, Pittsburgh; I. L. Lasky, Chicago; E. W. Dustin, St. Louis; T. Y. Henry, Kansas City; P. Goldstone, Omaha.

J. A. Salter, Minneapolis; George J. Schaefer, New York; Denham Palmer, Cleveland; W. W. Drum, Chicago; W. E. Knotts, San Francisco; R. H. Clark, San Francisco; C. L. Theuerkauf, Los Angeles; Charles Gilmour, Denver; H. P. Rennie, Salt Lake City; George P. Endert, Seattle; Jos. Klein, New Orleans; Maurice F. Barr, New Orleans; Harry L. Goldberg, Atlanta; C. L. McHenry, Dallas.

BOTH VERSIONS OF "CARMEN" GOING WITH RUSH IN QUAKER CITY

The Lasky "Carmen" is going with a rush in Philadelphia. Four prints are booked up until December 1. The Fox film "Carmen" is starting on an equally triumphal career.

The censors profiting, perhaps, by past experience, treated this Carmen gently from the first, so there was no trouble about it.

A few of the atmospheric Sevillian scenes considered too real for the gaze of moral Pennsylvanians, were cut, but these in no wise interfere with the action of the story. As in the Farrar version, the cigarette girl being pulled across the table was eliminated, as was a small part of the death of Carmen, not enough, however, to spoil the thrill of either scene. The Fox Carmen is in no wise lacking in demand, and is being booked as fast as it can be handled.

ADAMS DIRECTS KRITERION BRANCH IN TOLEDO

R. A. Adams, who has acted as manager of the Detroit Kriterion Film Company in Detroit, has been transferred to Toledo, Ohio, where he now has full charge of the company's branch in that city.

Mr. Adams was formerly connected with the General Film Company in Cleveland, the Superior Film Company in Toledo, and the Mutual Film Company in Detroit.

V-L-S-E SEATTLE BRANCH OFFERS GOLD WATCH FOR BEST PUBLICITY STUNT

AN incentive to more efficient and more aggressive promotion of V-L-S-E features by exhibitors, is that being conducted by Tom North, manager of the Seattle office of the Big Four.

Mr. North has offered a watch to be awarded to the exhibitor who uses the most and best advertising schemes in giving publicity to the productions of Mr. North's company, and who receives the largest number of votes from his brother exhibitors in the Seattle territory.

Many of the exhibitors have had the stunts they originated photographed and sent in to the house organ of the Seattle branch, The V-L-S-E Pals.

All have been unanimous in stating that the various ideas have materially increased the business done on the pictures for which they were devised.

This, of course, is the primary reason for the contest, the watch being of secondary importance, and offered only to stimulate action on the part of all Big Four exhibitors to make a greater effort to increase their patronage.

One of the latest and most original ideas conceived was that of Manager Oswald of Premerton, in advertising "The Man Trail."

Using an old automobile tire, he cut it into pieces resembling the sole of a shoe. Six of these were attached to the rear tire of his automobile, and on the under side of the mud-guard was fastened a heavy scrubbing brush that had been perforated with holes to allow a slowly fed stream of whitewash to saturate through.

As each foot-print rubbed against the brush it was thoroughly whitewashed, and the imprint transferred to the pavement.

Every paved street in town was covered with these prints, with the result that there were few people who did not know of the showing of "The Man Trail."

To advertise this same feature an exhibitor in Renton engaged two men to decorate the city streets with red paint and then to walk in this paint.

The men covered the entire town, but always started from the outskirts and worked toward the theatre. The result was that all these tracks focused in front of a liberal display of six-sheets, announcing the showing of "The Main Trail" for that day. It is said that the idea filled the house three times and left many standing.

LIVE TOPICS OF INTEREST AROUND INDIANAPOLIS EXCHANGES

The Empress Feature Film Company, owned by Bingham, Crose & Cohen, who also operate the Colonial theatre, Indianapolis, have moved their general offices from 47-49 Willoughby building, Indianapolis, to the Colonial theatre. The shipping room of the film company will remain at the Willoughby building. The Empress company is one of the oldest feature film companies in Indianapolis and distributes films in Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky.

W. A. Ratz, manager of the Indianapolis office of the World Film Corporation, attended a meeting of the branch managers of the World Film Corporation in Chicago, November 1, 2 and 3.

J. G. Lytle, Indianapolis manager of the Pathé Exchange, was in Cincinnati, October 31 and November 1, to confer with the Cincinnati manager and W. F. Hurst, comptroller of the company, who will be in Indianapolis next week.

Panel paintings on bill boards are to be erected by the Thomas Cusack company, at Thirtieth and Meridian streets, and at Illinois and Washington streets, as part of a national contract signed with the Cusack company.

GEORGE BEBAN GUEST OF HONOR AT PHILADELPHIA DINNER

W. E. Smith, of the Famous Players Exchcange and Stanley Mastbaum of various and sundry film interests in Philadelphia, but more especially of the Stanley theatre, were joint hosts at a large complimentary dinner tended George Beban, at the St. James Hotel.

Many prominent picture people were present, as well as all the dramatic editors of the Philadelphia papers. Milton Work, of the World Film Corporation, came with Mr. Beban from New York. Some of the others present were J. E. Hennessey, manager of the Fox Film office in Philadelphia, Oscar Morgan, publicity man for Paramount, A. L. Einstein, of the Stanley company.

After full justice had been done to the feast, the whole company adjourned to the Stanley theatre where a private screening of "The Alien" with Mr. Beban as star was given.

"The Alien" is running all this week at the Stanley. On the opening night, Mr. Beban appeared in person and made a speech to the large audience. In honor of the occasion, the Stanley management presented each lady present with a rose, "The Alien" being taken from "The Sign of the Rose." The picture has attracted large audiences at every performance.

HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST AROUND BOSTON EXCHANGES

Miss Stella Verral, bookkeeper in the United Film Exchange in Springfield, Mass., has been tranferred to the Albany office, Miss Grace Huelet taking her place.

Joe Mack, road man for the Kleine-Edison service, has returned to Boston from a profitable business trip through Vermont.

J. Arthur Eslow, manager of the New England Universal Film exchange, has returned from Chicago, where he attended the conference of Universal workers.

Fred Murphy, owner of six United Film exchanges; Joseph K. Berger, general sales manager for Pathé, and George Schaeffer, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, left Boston October 29 for Springfield to attend a dinner given by H. A. Palmer, manager of Mr. Murphy's exchange in Springfield, to the exchange men of the vicinity in a movement for the improvement of conditions of marketing and showing pictures.

The Community Motion Picture Company, of 41 Huntington avenue, Boston, is booking the five Dickens features got out by Hepworth and in charge of Fred Murphy.

ACTIVITIES IN EXCHANGE CIRCLES AT BANGOR, MAINE

Managers who were in Bangor, Me., calling on film men recently, were: Henry C. Moores, of Woodland, who enjoys the distinction of having the easternmost motion picture theatre in the United States, right on the border between the United States and Canada; William Stitham, of the Bijou theatre of Pittsfield, who is booking the Universal Broadway features for his house, and Mrs. Musa M. Steiner, manager of a circuit of four theatres, and one of the most successful women in the business in the state.

P. H. Murray has been appointed assistant manager of the United Film Service office in Bangor. Manager Tinker reports good business.

ATLANTA MUTUAL EXCHANGE RESUMES BUSINESS

Following the destruction of the Mutual exchange offices in Atlanta by fire on October 16, Manager Charles Kessnich has become re-established in the Rhodes building and business is going forward as if it had never been interrupted.

In the fire, which is supposed to have been caused by a short circuit, three girls, Misses Clara Westbrook, Lottie Haynes and Lucile Davis, lost their lives, while several others were injured.

Damage to the building was about $25,000 with $15,000 insurance, while films worth several hundred thousand dollars, according to published estimates, were desroyed. The investigation is still going on.

CAPACITY BUSINESS FOR ALL KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES

John Hardin has resigned as manager of the George Kleine office, Kansas City, and his place has been taken by W. O. Edmonds, who is now on the job.

Every exchange in Kansas City is enjoying capacity business and the prospects are bright for more. This unprecedented business has probably been caused by the excellence of the weather conditions that have prevailed for the past thirty days or so.

M. E. ("Marty") Williams, Metro manager in Kansas City, is absent from his desk, being in New York at the main offices of his company.

PHILADELPHIA OFFICES KEPT BUSY BY BIG BOOKINGS AND SMALL CENSORS

THE World Film's release of "The Family Cupboard" was, on its second review by the Philadelphia Board of Censors, permitted to go its way rejoicing, with but few eliminations not hurtful to the story. On first showing this film was rejected, but an appeal was asked for and granted with the above result. Now the company's picture, "Should a Wife Forgive?" has met with disapproval. Certain cuts have to be made; then the film goes before the board again just as though it were a new one.

George Beihoff, manager of the World office, reports that in the week just past, all records have been broken in the Philadelphia offices for actual collections made.

A private showing of "The Butterfly on the Wheel," with Holbrook Blinn and Vivian Martin, was given at the Arcadia after the regular performance. "Trilby" will make its bow to the Philadelphia public November 15, when it is booked for a week's run at the Arcadia theatre. Clara Kimball Young, "Trilby's" star, will come to Philadelphia for the opening and speak at the Arcadia.

The Triangle Film Corporation have begun their move from temporary to permanent headquarters at 1227-29 Vine street and expect to be settled in a few days.

The Metropolitan Booking Office has removed to 1307 Vine, across the street from its present location.

The interstate Film Company, the Philadelphia name of the Universal Exchange, is making decided improvements in its building, which also houses the Fairmount Film Company, of which George W. Bennethum is manager.

V. C. Carrick, manager of the Interstate, says their increased business necessitated more room, therefore a new projection room is being fitted up in the basement. This is the first Philadelphia exchange to utilize its "subway" in such a manner. The old projection room on the third floor has been turned into a poster room. New fireproof vaults are being built on the second floor.

Mr. Carrick thinks the Universal Movie Game now running in The Evening Telegraph, is helping the Philadelphia exhibitors to a considerable extent in boosting business.

H. G. Atwood, manager of the Pathé office, says "Comrade John," Pathé release, is doing the biggest business yet recorded for a Pathé in his territory. The large illuminated Gold Rooster signs which Pathé have placed in five conspicuous places around the city, are attracting much favorable comment.

Mr. Atwood has started a new stunt in advertising. For over a week advertisements have been run in the photoplay papers of the city (the Evening Telegraph and Evening Ledger) advertising the latest Pathé pictures. These advertisements are addressed primarily to patrons, not exhibitors.

MAINE TEACHERS SEE PARAMOUNT TRAVELOGUE AS GUESTS

To bring the educational benefits of the Paramount Travelogues to the attention of the school teachers of Maine, M. Ross, of the Boston office of the Paramount Film Co., gave a free performance in the Park theatre in Bangor, Maine, during the state teachers' convention, which was attended by nearly 4,500 teachers from all over the state.

There were about 500 of the teachers present, and the travelogues shown for an hour took them to South America via the Panama canal.

The Paramount Travelogues have been booked in thirty-six Maine houses thus far, and M. Ross is endeavoring to interest the school authorities to introduce them in the schools as they are used in Boston.

HIGHLY COLORED POSTER USED INSTEAD OF SLIDE

D. Freeman, of the Universal Exchange in Vancouver, has evolved an advertising idea which is being successfully used at the Colonial theatre there, and has occasioned considerable favorable comment.

The idea consists simply of using a highly colored poster (8, 12, or 16 sheet) instead of a slide to call attention to the picture for the following week. The poster is fastened to a rigid frame, lowered onto the stage, and illuminated with a flood light, which shows up the bright colors in fine style, and renders a much better effect than the usual rather quiet slide.

THEFT OF FILMS FROM SYRACUSE OFFICE REPORTED

Thomas W. Dooley, manager of the Syracuse branch of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, reports the following reels stolen from the office on Oct. 23: "Love's Melody," Biograph; "Broncho Billy and the Posse," Essanay, and "The Serpent's Tooth," Vitagraph.

A suitable reward will be given for information leading to the recovery of these films.

Mr. Lobel, traveling representative of the United Film Service, Inc., has opened an exchange at 506 Eckel theatre Building at Syracuse, N. Y., and installed C. H. Barolett, of Boston, as manager.

BILL OF FARE ADVERTISING FOR LONELY SALESMEN

J. B. Dugger, of the Dallas office of the V-L-S-E is responsible for the novel idea of using hotel menus for the announcement of attractions of photoplay theatres.

The "Big Four" salesman has taken the matter up with a number of hotels in the Southwest, and gained their consent to the appearance of such notices, on the ground that they were rendering their patrons a service.

Mr. Dugger pointed out that every night there were a number of travelling men in every good-sized town who had nowhere especially to go, and who would appreciate a suggestion at the bottom of the bill-of-fare upon what could be seen in the nature of entertainment during the evening.

For instance, a hotel in Galveston, Texas, used the idea in this form:

SUGGESTION

THE PRINCESS THEATRE
"The Juggernaut"

With Anita Stewart and Earle Williams.

The hotel management had a number of compliments from their transient guests on its thoughtfulness.

PICTURE BUSINESS THRIVING IN ALBERTA

The moving picture business in the province of Alberta is in a thriving condition just now, according to D. G. Walkley, manager of the Universal Exchange at Calgary. Practically all theatres of the better class are showing only four or five reels, says Mr. Walkley, at admission prices of fifteen and twenty-five cents.

In Vancouver much the same condition prevails, except that the average number of reels shown is six instead of five.

(Copy)

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 16, 1915.

To the Sales-force:—Secure a copy of The Motion Picture News, October 23d issue, Editorial Page 39 and also Page 51.

Carry them with you to bolster up the same argument you have been using.

These articles will serve to prove to the exhibitors and the newspapers you call on in each town that your reasons for trying to induce the newspapers to establish Motion Picture Departments are not selfish ones, and that as outlined therein, it is a positive benefit to every one concerned.

The Omaha World-Herald has just recently established a Moving Picture Page in each Sunday issue. Their first issue spread over nearly two pages, which serves to show that ample material of interest to the public can easily be obtained.

As often as you get a newspaper interested, as heretofore, let us know and we will advise our manufacturers and our Home Office Publicity Department to keep in touch with those papers regularly, as will also our local Publicity Department.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) E. R. PEARSON,
Mgr. V-L-S-E Inc.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Paris, Nov. 1.

I WAS informed the other day that Madame Rejane, our great artist, had returned from London, where she appeared with enormous success for the last eight months. I jumped at the opportunity and requested our great diva to grant me an interview for MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I was pleased to get a message the next day, saying that I would be welcome whenever I came.

I was delighted to find Madame Rejane exactly the same if not better looking, looking as happy as a child to talk of kinemas.

"Of course you know that I have been on the stage for a good many years. I have made my reputation all over the world with 'Madame Sans Gene,'" she said. "When first approached by the Film D'Art Co. with the request to be filmed in this chef d'èuvre by Victorien Sardou, I immediately accepted, and I may now tell you the reason. I have amused hundreds of thousands with this play, but I myself have never been able to see it. Thanks to the kinema, I would at last be able to see Rejane in 'Madame Sans Gene,' and I confess that the day I have seen the film for the first time at the Omnia, was one of the happiest in my life. I am told that this film has made a big success in the United States, and am delighted to know that a good many people who never had the opportunity to see me on the stage, have been able to see this great production on the screen. Since then, I received many offers to be filmed in all sorts of theatrical pieces, but having had once the satisfaction of seeing myself on the screen, I always refused to be filmed again.

Another reason why I refused to be filmed again, was I never thought a scenario strong enough to beat Madame Sans Gene.

"Not long ago I was again approached to be filmed in Gaston Leroux's great comedy, 'Alsace.' This time I jumped at it. Could I possibly refuse to play the interesting part of Madame Orbey in the marvelous patriotic scene? I could not resist such an invitation, and for the second time, I am facing the camera, this time in the costume of our dear and beloved 'Alsace.'"

Madame Rejane graciously invited me to assist the next day at the studio at one of the scenes to be filmed, and from what I have seen of this one scene, I am able to predict a bigger success for this film. I am pleased to present the very first photograph of Rejane in "Alsace," to the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Nordisk-Union Merger a Fact

Some time ago the news spread all over that the Nordisk Film Co. in Copenhagen had united with the Union Film producers in Berlin, that arrangements have been made by the Union to send all their German artists to Denmark, where German films, with German artists and German capital, were to be produced and sold to France, England, Russia and Italy as Danish films. Immediately this report was most emphatically denied by both the Nordisk and the Union, the one saying that the Nordisk was a purely Danish company, with only Danish capital, Danish artists, in short everything Danish and that they had absolutely nothing in common with the Union. The Union's denial was still stronger. "Why should we have to produce our world renowned films bearing the mark of the Nordisk? Our films are undoubtedly the very best in the world, and it would only be of great prejudice to us to sell our films with a different mark than our own."

We have now proof of what value all these denials are.

Our contemporary, the Ciné Journal, has been able to get the official German trade journal Kinematograph, published at Düsseldorf (Germany) bearing the number 449, in which paper the said Nordisk Film Co. in Copenhagen, the so-called purely Danish firm, officially informs its customers of the fusion of their company and the Union with offices in Zimmerstrasse 16-18 in Berlin. No doubt that this extra official proof will again be officially denied by both of them.

Our exhibitors will have realized now, that they run no risk whatsoever by showing long serial films at their kinemas, provided they are good and interesting ones. I have heard many of our film dealers say that Mary has made a big mistake by securing the French rights of such a long film like "The Trey of Hearts," that no exhibitor will ever dare to show it, that no audience will stand it, that the kinema who may try it, will be deserted the second week and many more most unpleasant remarks.

Well, Mary has tried it, and I believe he has a right to boast of the success obtained. The Chatelet, one of the largest theatres in Paris, took the first chance, and not only was the theatre not deserted, but many thousands of people have followed, greatly interested in the plot of this remarkable picture.

Pathé is next on the list with a serial picture. They are widely advertising a very long and to judge by what was shown this week, most sensational film, called "Les Mystères de New York," an American Ciné Roman adapted by Pierre Decourcelle.

Arrangements have been made with The Matin, the great Parisian morning paper, to publish this story at the same time the film will appear on the screen. Most of the kinemas have already booked this film of thirty-six episodes.

A most interesting case will soon be heard at the Paris courts. Mr. Harry, one of our well-known film dealers, nearly two years ago bought a Selig film from their French agent, Mr. Helfer. When the war commenced it was learned that Mr. Helfer was an Austrian, and most of our film dealers refused to have any business with him. It happened that Harry was short of some posters and he therefore ordered them direct from the London offices and was most annoyed and greatly surprised to get them from the Paris offices. As a true Belgian patriot he refused to accept them, and now the courts will decide if Harry is obliged to take them.

Navarre Becomes a Producer

Gaumonts have lost one of their best artists in Mr. Navarre. He played most of the principal parts in nearly everyone of their important films. It is he who impersonated the celebrated "Fantomas."

Mr. Navarre has formed a company, which is building large studios near Marseilles, where they are to produce some special films.

A film of Lubin, presented by Mary last week called L'Insurrection has created quite a sensation among exhibitors.

"La Fille du Boche" was shown for the first time last Saturday, and as predicted by me, made an enormous success. Mr. Lordier, proprietor of sixteen kinemas, has leased the Folies Dramatiques, a very large theatre on the Boulevards, and is opening it next Friday with this film.

"NATION'S" TRIUMPH AND EFFECTS OF FILM TAX CHIEF TOPICS OF INTEREST IN LONDON

Special to Motion Picture News

London, Nov. 1.

BUSINESS in all branches of the cinematograph trade is most satisfactory, and in the course of the last week or two, I have seen some hundreds of people turned away from cinemas which were showing a film of such unique quality as "Cabiria." This so far has been a real record-breaker.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been hailed with delight by all sections of the trade and the press, and has been aptly termed "a cinematograph marvel." The Daily Mail, one of the leading national organs, said: "The gold is there, and it is genuine gold. Were the dross removed in the shape of certain over-sugared, over-acted sentimental scenes, and were the rest passed through the lantern at a less precipitate pace, the spectacle would be superb and all London would flock to it, for in historical scenes a degree of realism has been attained which has rarely before been approached."

Referring to the war scenes, it says, "The spectacle moves with a rush which carries the audience away till the illusion seems almost too complete, so that it is not some shadow in life, but life itself that passes, and they stand in the very flesh and blood, side by side, with the great statesmen and soldiers at the turning points of history. . . . This is a veritable triumph, and the mind is staggered at the thought of the wealth of appliances and the multitude of actors required to produce so perfect an illusion."

Metro films have come into the limelight, with amazing rapidity and appear to be just what the public of Great Britain wants.

British Film Tax Situation

Although the British government is now charging duties on imported films, the chancellor of the exchequer has promised to go further into the matter of this taxation. It has been pointed out in the House of Commons that one result of the taxes would be that negatives would not be imported into this country, but would be developed in places like Copenhagen. A valuable trade would thus be lost to this country. Extensive arrangements would have to be made for the examination of films and the speaker did not believe that the tax would yield more than £30,000 or £40,000. A proposal was made to omit the tax, but this was withdrawn, and was substituted by a resolution to reduce the duty on negative from eight pence to one penny. This was also withdrawn. The government still adheres to the opinion that the tax will yield £400,000. On good authority one learns that certain firms contemplate opening premises on the continent, whence films may be sent to avoid the tax.

American film men may be interested in the following official statistics showing the value of imported films for the eight months ending August 31, 1915. It will be seen that out of £844,109 worth of films £784,156 came from America:

United States of America	£784,156
Russia	10
Denmark	140
Netherlands	394
Belgium	266
France	36,167
Switzerland	917
Spain	32
Italy	20,568
Japan	62
Cape of Good Hope	40
British East Africa	7
Canada	595
West India Is.	405

Keen competition is being waged between Pathé and the Trans-Atlantic Company with their serials "Exploits of Elaine" and "The Black Box" respectively. Pathé's advertising campaign is one of the biggest and best conducted of the year. The Trans-Atlantic Company, who are the selling agents for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, of New York, are arranging a similarly big scheme for their serial "The Broken Coin," to be released shortly. The first trade show of the latter has been held and was given a most enthusiastic reception. The touch of genuine comedy is thoroughly appreciated, and side by side with the tenser dramatic situations, combines to make the film one with a most comprehensive range of appeal. L-Ko comedies with Billy Ritchie are engaging wonderful popularity.

Real Thrill in T-A Picture

The Trans-Atlantic Company have produced their first comedy, "Poor Clem." One of the most exciting and realistic scenes in this film is that which depicts W. Page, the leading character. While enacting a roof scene he lost his balance and after rolling a distance saved himself from injury by grasping a coping stone. Fortunately help was soon forthcoming—and a picture with a real thrill is the result. This film is well in accord with T. A. traditions. This company is producing their third drama (all-British), entitled, "The Woman Who Dared."

The Essanay company are doing all in their power to correct misapprehensions as to their change of system, which is now one of direct renting. The opposition is still strong and determined. The following is typical of Mr. Spoor's announcements to the trade: "A disruptive element that is striving to rend the coveted fraternal feeling between you and us is being spread by unscrupulous persons who are trying to force your hand, most likely against your will. It's up to you to use your own discretion. You, Mr. Exhibitor, are out for business—trading that can be transacted with efficiency and dispatch—instead of quibbling over details."

English renters are beginning to cast their eyes around for good Christmas films. Unquestionably the most popular film last year was Mary Pickford in "Cinderella." I observe that a film of the same title is to be released for Boxing Day. Edison will be releasing a delightful series of appropriate subjects. Up to the present I have not heard of any British productions.

Sir Herbert Tree, the eminent Shakespearean actor, has intimated his intention of visiting America after the production of the film "Mavourneen." Sir Herbert Tree has taken a deep interest in the cinema, and in the London Film Company's version of "Trilby," played the part of Svengali. He hopes to secure lasting endurance for some of his Shakespearean plays by means of the cinema, and says that he has received a most tempting offer from the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

English film producers are giving earnest attention to film adaptation of popular novels and a number of strong attractions will shortly be put on the market. Three of the latest are "Iris," by Sir A. W. Pinero, "The White Hope," by W. H. R. Troubridge and "Far from the Madding Crowd," by Thomas Hardy.

Leading British Productions

The latest leading British productions are:

"Poor Clem." Trans-Atlantic Com., 925 feet. This snappy comedy contains an abundance of spontaneous fun. A poor musician disguises as a female and obtains a situation as a servant. Her pranks are extremely diverting.

"Cowboy Clem." Trans-Atlantic Com. A quick action comedy depicting the doings in London of a cowboy accustomed to the free air of the Wild West.

"The Jade Heart." Martin, 3-reel drama. A story of a miscarriage of justice and showing how an innocent man is convicted and subsequently exonerated of a charge of murder.

"Coppers and Cut-Ups." Martin Com. 576 feet. An adamant father scorns ambitions of a young suitor who, after many diverting vicissitudes eventually comes into his own.

Yorkshire Cine Co., "Miss Madcap May." Com., 800 feet. An amusing masquerade of a young female. "Getting on His Nerves." Com., 850 feet. An old man's terror of bees and how a young suitor gained his laurels. "Monty's Monacle." Com., 755 feet. Funny sights through a monacle, not visible to ordinary observer.

H. A. Browne & Co., Ltd., "Pimple Explains." Com., 950 feet. Shows Pimple as a special constable. "When Women Rule." Com., 530 feet. The shortage of men through war necessitates women doing the work. The humorous sides of this situation are shown.

The Yorkshire Cine. Company are shortly issuing the second of the second series of Arrow films, entitled, "The White Star," a sporting drama.

LARGE NEWSPAPERS INTERESTED IN SELIG CAMPAIGN

Perhaps twenty-five of the advertising managers of the larger newspapers have communicated with the Selig Company requesting further details regarding the Selig Company's campaign among exhibitors, started three months ago, urging exhibitors to advertise more liberally in newspaper columns.

PALLAS ACTOR WILL LEAVE FOR FRONT

"The Call of the Cumberlands," the new Pallas Picture, may mean the last appearance in pictures for a long time of at least one actor in the cast supported by Dustin Farnum. That is Michael Hallward, the young Englishman playing "Lescott," the New York artist. Hallward has a commission in the English army, and has just come down from Canada, where he has been training an expeditionary force for Kitchener's army.

Hallward leaves for England late in the month, and will proceed thence to the continent, where his regiment is "digging in" in preparation for the winter campaign.

ETHEL TEARE A CRACK SHOT

Although Ethel Teare gave a remarkable exhibition of her skill with the rifle while taking part in "Minnie, the Tiger," a forthcoming comedy, Bud Duncan absolutely refused to allow her to give a further exhibition of her expertness when the Kalem comedienne requested him to allow her to shoot an apple off his head at a distance of fifty yards.

"The mean old thing!" declared Miss Teare.

Equitable, Hungry for the Best, Wants Scenarios

Company Is Willing to Pay Over 100 Dollars a Reel If It Gets Right Material, Preferably from Successful Novelists, with Superior Skill in Plot Building

THE Equitable Motion Picture Corporation is in the market for the best scenarios obtainable, and is willing to pay from one hundred dollars a reel up for suitable vehicles for its stars. The company, while not disparaging the efforts of the average photoplaywright, states it prefers scripts submitted from successful novelists and playwrights, from a conviction that their training in original plot building preeminently qualifies them to give the Equitable just the kind of scenarios it seeks.

Russell E. Smith, head of the scenario department, wishes to get in touch through MOTION PICTURE NEWS with writers of this character. All communications regarding the subject should be directed to Mr. Smith personally at the offices of the Equitable company, 130 West Forty-six street, New York. Mr. Smith's letter follows:

"We are in the market for the highest class stories suitable for production as 5 reel features either in synopsis form or completed scripts. We want only stories that are big, really big in theme and purpose in drama and situation, rather than big in masses of men and exploding steamships and such melodramatic plots, which usually pass for big stories; the bigness of the price we will pay will be commensurate with the bigness of the story, and our lowest price will be one hundred dollars per reel, but we want stories that are worth a great deal more than that. We want them from authors of great reputation, from novelists and playwrights, as well as from strictly photo-playwrights.

We are frank in saying that we believe playwrights and novelists, who write stories especially adapted for the screen, will give us more of the material we want than the strictly photo-playwright. This is in no way derogatory to the photo-playwright in particular, but it is obvious that the trained writer of books, plays and stories, as a plot builder, is bound to have something worth doing in more cases than the photo-playwright.

"It has long been said that the photo-playwright has never had a chance to do really big work, that the manufacturers did not want the big themes. We do, and if the photo-playwright of today is as good as we hope he or she is, we would like to see them send us something that they think is too good for the average film company to produce."

Mme. Pavlowa Is Seen in "The Dumb Girl of Portici"

The Ten-Reel Production Directed by Lois Weber for Universal Is Given a Private Showing in the Company's Private Projection Room in New York

PAVLOWA has made her debut on the screen. The ten-reel production arrived from Universal City last Friday, and a private showing was held in the projection of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at 1600 Broadway, New York, which was attended by the great artist herself, Max Rabinoff, the members of the Ballet Russe and the officials of the Universal, including Carl Laemmle, president of the organization, who delayed a trip west in order to be present on this occasion.

This picture is a picturization of Auber's opera of the same name, and was adapted for the screen by Lois Weber, the woman director of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, whose "Hypocrites" and "Scandal" are well known to the devotees of filmdom, and who was assisted by Phillips Smalley, who has been co-director in all her numerous feature productions.

"The Dumb Girl of Portici" is one of the costliest of all feature films that have been made by the Universal, the company having spent over $250,000 upon its production, and devoting more than three months to its preparation for the millions of photoplay lovers in the United States and Europe.

During those three months the Universal built a special studio in Sans Souci Park, Chicago, for the making of many scenes, and transported the players from Universal City to the Windy City and back. A review of the Los Angeles trade showing will be found elsewhere in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Arrangements are now being made for the leasing of a Broadway theatre, where the picture will have an extended New York run.

Next immediately in turn upon the schedule are: Los Angeles, October 30 to November 2; San Francisco, November 3 to 5; Portland, November 7, and Seattle, November 8.

Thence the route leads Eastward through Salt Lake, Denver, Kansas City and through the principal cities of the Middle West.

WILSON AND MRS. GALT PROMINENT IN WORLD SERIES FILMS COMING FROM MUTUAL

PRESIDENT WILSON, MRS. GALT, MAYOR BLANKENBURG, AND OTHER CELEBRITIES AS THEY APPEAR IN WORLD SERIES FILMS FOR RELEASE ON MUTUAL PROGRAM

HOW do you suppose Woodrow Wilson behaves at a baseball game with his "best girl" along?

A coming Mutual program feature release will tell you all about it.

"The World's Championship Baseball Series of 1915," is the title of a release in two reels on the Mutual program for November 15. This special release is included in the regular program at no increase in rental charges to the exhibitor. For that week it replaces the Monday and Wednesday Novelty brand comedies.

These pictures were made by the World Series Film Company, a company organized to co-operate with the Mutual Commission. The Mutual has purchased the rights for the distribution of these pictures and is now making them available to the exhibitors as part of the regular program service. Previously motion picture exhibitors have been able to get baseball pictures only as expensive specials.

The world's series pictures are altogether remarkable films, showing all the thrilling plays and fine close-ups of the important personalities both in the game and among the spectators.

"NATION'S PERIL," LUBIN WARNING AGAINST U. S. UNPREPAREDNESS, READY NOVEMBER 22

"THE NATION'S PERIL," the Lubin feature film of our country's preparedness and the hyphenated Americans, which for the past four months has been under the course of construction by Director George Terwilliger and his Lubin Company at Newport, R. I., has its finishing touches at the Lubin plant and is scheduled for release on November 22 through the V-L-S-E Inc. offices.

The picture is to be presented at Washington during the coming week before Secretaries Daniels and Garrison and the Army and Navy League, and then taken to Newport, R. I., where it will be viewed by the officers of the Newport Naval Training Station.

In it are shown the entire soldier, sailor and marine strength of the U. S. Atlantic fleet and the troops stationed at Newport—the entire U. S. Atlantic fleet in action—the actual sinking of a ship by shell fire from the battleships—a night artillery attack in which is destroyed an entire street built especially for the picture by Director Terwilliger—several mine explosions and the workings of the wireless stations owned by the Government.

In addition in appearance in the picture are to be seen Secretary Josephus Daniels with the entire Newport War College—Admiral Fletcher, Admiral Winslow of the Pacific fleet; Captain Roger Welles, Lieut. Com. Frank Taylor Evans and Lieut. Ernest Durr, of the Naval Training Station at Newport; Captain Hugh Willoughby of the Naval Aviation Corps; Captain Newton and his staff of the U. S. S. Patterson; Captain Fitch and staff, of the U. S. S. Yankton; Commander Watson of the U. S. S. Utah and Captain W. S. Sims, commandant of the torpedo flotilla.

The scenes are laid in the Ausable Chasm, near Port Kent, N. Y.

MARGOT WILLIAMS STARS IN MINA FOR NOVEMBER 18

Margot Williams, whose first appearance in photo-comedy was in "An Eye Too Many," the MinA release of November 11, will appear again in the release of November 18, "A Woman for a Day."

This story deals with a charming young girl who cannot get the consent of her parents to wed the one she loves. She is taken away to a seminary and finally elopes with her lover who enters the seminary disguised as her aunt and steals her.

BOSTON SEEN THROUGH PRETTY EYES IN MUTUAL SCENIC

Boston, the city of culture and tradition, viewed through the pretty eyes of the Mutual Traveller, will constitute the subject matter of the Gaumont (Mutual) scenic split reel and comic release of November 2, "See America First."

The opening scene will show the brown eyed little guide boarding the train. Then will appear beauty spots between New York and Boston.

A flying trip will be taken out to Cambridge, and through the grounds of Harvard University. Glimpses of the Charles River will be shown, then Boston's historic spots—the Bunker Hill Monument, the harbor, where the famous Boston Tea Party took place, the Tremont Hotel, the old South Church—all that endears the quaint city to the lovers of history.

This will be the eighth release of the Gaumont split reel on Mutual program.

MACKENZIE TO DIRECT "THE WEAVERS" FOR PATHE

Donald Mackenzie, having finished his Gold Rooster Play "Mary's Lamb,' the Broadway success written by Richard Carle, has been given by Pathé, Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Weavers," as his next picture.

"The Weavers" has been remarkably successful as a novel, and in the opinion of competent judges, contains great material for a picture. Mr. Mackenzie is now selecting his cast and will probably begin active work within a day or two.

GOWNS OF MARGUERITE COURTOT, KALEM, EXCITE COMMENT BY THEIR BEAUTY AND MODISHNESS

TWO SCENES FROM "A SOCIETY SCHEMER," SHOWING ELABORATE GOWNS WORN BY MARGUERITE COURTOT THROUGHOUT "THE VENTURES OF MARGUERITE" (Kalem)

ACCORDING to advices received by the Kalem Company from exhibitors who are showing "The Ventures of Marguerite," this series has taken its place as the fashion authority of moving pictures and the gowns worn by Marguerite Courtot, who portrays the central character, are being accepted as criterions of advanced styles.

An innovation was established by the Kalem Company when this series was started recently, whereby Russek, of Fifth avenue, possibly the foremost taillieur in America, was commissioned to costume the beautiful star for the forthcoming episodes. As the result, Miss Courtot is shown in the advanced creations that are interesting Fifth avenue.

That this feature is proving particularly popular with the feminine photoplay patrons is apparent from the numerous letters received by Miss Courtot requesting detailed descriptions of her various gowns.

According to the exhibitors who have written Kalem, their patrons are already looking forward to "Marguerite Day," because of this fashion feature. At the same time, the writers express their gratification because of the fact that aside from the latter, the episodes are replete with dramatic action.

As the result, the photoplays are popular with both sexes.

"The Veiled Priestess," and "A Society Schemer," are two of the November "Ventures."

The first will be issued on Friday, November 19, while the second will be released Friday, November 26.

CUMMINGS STAR IN HORSLEY'S "POLAR ROMANCE"

Irving Cummings, late star in "The Diamond from the Sky," makes his debut as a David Horsley lead in "A Polar Romance," a two-reel Centaur Feature to be released on the Mutual program, November 18. Prominent in Mr. Cummings' support are those of the Bostock animals from the North, including polar bears, seals and so forth.

Most of the scenes of the story are laid in the Arctic Circle and some effective views of the land of ice have been obtained. The bleakness of this country makes the situation of Jennessen, the explorer, played by Irving Cummings, cast overboard from his exploration vessel by conspirators, marooned on a floating iceberg and later cast on a barren island of ice, all the more tragic and increases the interest in the picture.

Jay Hunt, who has directed some of Mr. Horsley's biggest successes, is responsible for the staging of this picture, in which appear, beides Mr. Cummings and the animals, a big cast of players including Josephine West, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Charles Whitman, Fred Gamble and Clarence Baker.

"END OF THE ROAD" WRITTEN BY WELL-KNOWN AUTHOR

H. Grattan Donnelly's play, "The End of the Road," which was successfully produced on the stage, is to be released as a Masterpicture. Harold Lockwood and May Allison play the leading parts.

Its author, H. Grattan Donnelly, was connected with the theatrical and newspaper profession for many years. At one time he was editor of the Philadelphia Press, and during that time wrote what was probably the most famous musical comedy of its day, "Natural Gas," produced by Donnelly and Gerard.

"A Pair of Jacks," "A Night at the Circus," produced by Nellie McHenry, were also other of his musical comedies. "Ship Ahoy" for which he wrote the librette, ran for many months in Boston. "Dick Turpin" was also well received.

His best known dramas are "Darkest Russia," "A Woman in Black" and the play which the American Film Corporation has just completed as a Mutual Masterpicture, "The End of the Road."

IRVING CUMMINGS, HORSLEY STAR, IN A ROMANCE OF THE FAR NORTH, FOR MUTUAL RELEASE

ELABORATE SETS AND STIRRING SCENES FEATURE "A POLAR ROMANCE," TWO REEL CENTAUR WITH IRVING CUMMINGS

THE title of the two-reel Centaur Feature in which Irving Cummings, late feature of "The Diamond from the Sky," makes his first appearance as a David Horsley star, has been changed from "The Explorer" to "A Polar Romance." It will be released Thursday, November 18, on the Mutual program.

"A Polar Romance," written by L. V. Jefferson, is a story of the Far North, and concerns the efforts of Andrew Jennessen, an explorer, to reach the North Pole, and the conniving schemes of Wells, a rival, to thwart his success. The action on Wells' part is prompted by his desire to marry a young heiress, with whom Jannessen is in love. Wells accompanies the expedition, stirs up a mutiny among the sailors and the crew of the explorer's vessel, and in the struggle that follows the outbreak, Jennessen is thrown overboard. Satisfied that Jennessen is lost Wells orders the return of the ship, and upon reaching native soil reports the death of the explorer.

Jennessen, however, reaches a floating iceberg and takes refuge upon it, subsisting upon raw fish. His only companions are polar bears and seals. Wells reports Jennessen's death to the young heiress, but a suspicion of doubt, engendered by a display of hatred between the two men just prior to their departure, enters her mind. This suspicion is increased by Wells' demand that she marry him, and causes her to equip a relief vessel and start for the frozen country in an effort to locate the missing man. A series of adventures follow, Jennessen is found and rescued, and the situation cleared up.

This picture is the first Centaur Feature with the settings laid in the North, and with the Northern contingent of the Bostock animals in use, all of the previous releases having been subjects with African locale, and involving the employment of lions, tigers, leopards and the like.

Jay Hunt directed the picture, and in the cast besides those mentioned are Josephine West, Charles Whitman, Clarence Baker, Fred Gamble and Mrs. Jay Hunt.

"MUMMY AND HUMMING BIRD" FOR CHARLES CHERRY FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS

CHARLES CHERRY, well known as the star of many Broadway successes, makes his motion picture debut by special arrangement with the Charles Frohman Company in the Famous Players Film Company's adaptation of Isaac Henderson's drama, "The Mummy and the Humming-Bird." This subject is scheduled for release on November 11 by Paramount.

Mr. Cherry's delightful impersonation of the absent-minded peer who neglects his wife in order to devote his time to scientific experiments is one which he may justly be proud to add to the personal triumphs gained on the stage in support of such well-known actresses as Mary Mannering, Henrietta Crosman, Maxine Elliott and Ethel Barrymore.

The absent-mindedness of Lord Lumley (Mr. Cherry) and his failure to pay attention to his beautiful and vivacious wife lead to many and varied complications. There is an Italian author, D'Orelli, who looks upon the beautiful woman with more than passing interest.

This is not the first affair of the same ilk in which D'Orelli has participated. Before leaving his native land he reduced the home of Giuseppe, a compatriot, to ruins. His victim has followed him to London in the hope of gaining revenge. By the greatest good fortune, Giuseppe is employed by Lord Lumley, whose blindness and indifference earn him the sobriquet "The Mummy."

Circumstances force upon Lord Lumley the realization that his wife is in danger, and there begins a thrilling struggle for the woman whose innocence has led her into the wily Italian's trap. Using Giuseppe as his pawn, the peer wages a desperate battle of cunning against the intriguer. The contest reaches a powerful climax, in which the peer, who has held the reins, loses control of Giuseppe.

In support of Mr. Cherry there appear Lillian Tucker, William Sorelle, Arthur Hoops, Claire Zobelle and others.

THREE VIM COMEDIANS IN DECEMBER 3RD RELEASE

"Love, Pepper and Sweets," the Vim release of December 3, is the first Vim release in which the three comedians—Pokes, Jabbs and Runt—all work together. Pokes is the star boarder while Jabbs and Runt are the neglected ones. Even in the matter of love Pokes has the best of them while Jabbs and Runt are the "also rans." The efforts of Jabbs and Runt to beat out Pokes furnish the plot but they find their task is a Herculean one.

Burns and Stull appear as Pokes and Jabbs, Billy Ruge as Runt and Ethel Burton as the girl for whom they fall.

UNIVERSAL FILMING TWO CHRISTMAS STORIES

The Universal is anticipating the holidays by filming two Christmas stories. One is produced by Ben Wilson, entitled "A Bachelor's Christmas." It is a three-reel story by William Addison Lathrop. Mr. Wilson is supported by Dorothy Phillips. Great care was taken in handling the snow scenes for it was a "white Christmas" and all of them were taken in the studio.

The other one is also in three reels and was produced at the Coast. It is entitled "The Call of the Christmas Born." It was written and produced by Robert Leonard and stars himself with Ella Hall. Most of it was filmed at Arrowhead Hot Springs.

BECKY BRUCE PICKED FOR RAVER'S "OTHER GIRL"

There was only one Becky Bruce in "A Pair of Sixes" and everyone remembers her, and there can be only one in "The Other Girl," the first Raver-Thomas production, in which she supports James J. Corbett and Paul Gilmore. She must needs be a rarity for combined with beauty and grace are to be found artistry and intelligence so blended as to produce an acceptable picture player.

Director of Productions Percy Winter sought far and wide before he decided upon this selection to portray the character of Catherine Fulton in "The Other Girl."

FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPLETE "BELLA DONNA," HITCHENS' STORY

The adaptation of Robert Hichens' celebrated novel and play, "Bella Donna," with Pauline Frederick in the title role, has been completed by the Famous Players Film Company under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

For the purpose of obtaining the desert scenes, Messrs. Porter and Ford took a company of players to Florida, the outbreak of the war having rendered impossible the original plan of the producers to stage the play in Egypt.

PAULINE FREDERICK IN "BELLA DONNA"

In support of Miss Frederick there appear Thomas Holding, who already distinguished himself opposite the star in her previous screen subjects; Julian L'Estrange, Eugene Ormonde, George Majeroni, and Edmund Shalet.

CAST SELECTED FOR "THE RUSE"

Joseph Kilgour, Charles Kent and Naomi Childers have been selected to portray the principal characters in Eugene Mullin's society drama, "The Ruse," which will be produced by the Vitagraph company.

THIRD CENTAUR FEATURE, "COULD A MAN DO MORE?" IS STORY OF BROTHERLY SELF-SACRIFICE FEATURING WILBUR

FOR release Wednesday, November 24, on the Mutual program, David Horsley offers as the third of his Centaur Star Features with Crane Wilbur as the star, a three-reel drama of the old South, entitled, "Could a Man Do More?" The story, founded on the theme of brotherly love, was written by Crane Wilbur.

As suggested by the title, the story deals with a man's self-sacrifice and brotherly devotion to shield another from harm. The principal characters are the Rev. Darrell Sherwood and his brother, Richard. Upon her deathbed Mrs. Sherwood charges Darrell, her elder son, with the care of Richard, and he promises to shield his brother on every occasion. The boys grow into manhood. Darrell, a studious man of high attainments, a free thinking man with a deep understanding of human nature, becomes the village preacher. He wears clothes of no distinct clerical cut. His time is spent for the temporal and spiritual welfare of his flock.

Richard, on the other hand, is a man of the world. Having studied law he does not find that vocation to his taste and directs his attention to an easier way of living. Through his unscrupulous mode of life he becomes embroiled into serious difficulties, his last finally leading to his death. Throughout he was assisted by Darrell in memory of his promise to his mother, even so far as to suffer banishment from the town he loved. Richard's death, however, with his last note of confession, clears Darrell and returns the self-sacrificing man to his old place and even deeper in the affection of his people.

Crane Wilbur plays the Rev. Darrell Sherwood; Carl Von Schiller is Richard; Celia Santon appears as Faith Richardson; Margaret Gibson, as the little town girl; and Victor Rottman as Colonel Richardson. Others in the cast are Jean Wolfe, Paul Willis, Roland Sharp, Allen Williams, C. A. Scheafnocker, Georgia Sheart and B. M. Rice. The production was made under the direction of Robert Broadwell, who offers in this his first effort as a Horsley director.

SECOND "O'ROURKE" EPISODE WILL BE KERRIGAN IN IRELAND; THIRD COMPLETES THE SERIES

FOLLOWING the first release of J. Warren Kerrigan's new three week serial of his Terence O'Rourke characterization, "The Palace of Dust," the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will show Mr. Kerrigan in Ireland, where "The Road to Paradise," the second installment, was filmed.

In this episode, Terence is at his home in Ireland where he learns of a message from his friend Chambret, that Beatrix, his brother's widow, is in danger He leaves for Paris with his valet, Danny. Beatrix is a prisoner in Duke Victor's castle, where he is endeavoring to force marriage upon her.

Victor learns of O'Rourke's coming and endeavors to have him stopped at the border. O'Rourke and Danny rush past in an auto which is later overturned by an obstruction. O'Rourke and Danny are made Victor's prisoners and are taken to the castle. A duel is fought by O'Rourke and the Duke, while Chambret releases Beatrix. The Duke is killed; Danny, saving the righted machine, all escape across the border. O'Rourke postpones the marriage until he is in better circumstances and thus ends the second episode.

There will be but one more release of this O'Rourke series, after which the first installment of "Graft," by Irving S. Cobb, will be released.

HYSTERIA OF PROTEST OVER "NATION" IN THREE NEW ENGLAND STATES LARGELY INEFFECTUAL

CONNECTICUT, Rhode Island and southern Massachusetts have been swept by a storm of protest against the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation." The result is strangely complicated, to say the least, and none other than the officials of the town of West Springfield, Mass., have helped to make it so.

The city of Springfield itself officially barred the spectacle, but the selectmen of the small suburban town are reported to have rented the picture for a month's run in the town hall. To what purpose the proceeds will be devoted is not known. They will form a neat sum, if the enthusiasm with which the people of Springfield and neighboring towns received the news that the subject is to be shown is any criterion.

Hartford, Conn., also acted surprisingly in the matter, exhibitors going over the head of the superintendent of police, who is also chief censor of public amusements, to obtain permission for the showing of "The Birth of a Nation." The chief first refused to allow the picture to be exhibited, but higher authorities granted the necessary permit, and the subject will soon appear in that city.

Providence, R. I., censoriously looked upon the picture as immoral and degrading, and ordered extensive cuts, demanding particularly that the scene of the chase be deleted. Notwithstanding that that scene furnished the keynote necessary to the interpretation of following scenes, and in spite of the protests of exhibitors and public alike, the police censors were obdurate and the picture had to be shown in its abbreviated form.

Principally because he has seen the picture and considers it unfit for exhibition, but largely also because he feels that it is offensive to the colored population of this city, Chief of Police Philip T. Smith has refused absolutely to permit the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at Poli's theatre, in New Haven, Conn. Since he issued his edict, there has been no attempt to take the matter before higher authorities, the theatre management apparently being content to let it drop. Recently, however, a Savin Rock theatre opened negotiations for the booking of the picture, and there seems to be a possibility that the people of New Haven will have an opportunity to see Griffith's masterpiece in the suburb where the law is less sternly enforced.

It was only after they heard that the picture had been barred from other cities, and some time after the theatre had commenced running large display ads in all of the four daily newspapers that the negroes of Bridgeport, Conn., united and appeared before Mayor Wilson with a protest against allowing "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown at Poli's in that city, where it is scheduled for a week's run. The belief is general, however, that the protest will have little effect, and the management continues to advertise the production for the date originally announced.

FT. WORTH PASTORS WANT PICTURE THEATRES CLOSED SUNDAYS

The general pastors' association, of Fort Worth, Texas, have lodged a protest with Judge Ben M. Terrell against the dissolution of the injunction granted last year to prevent moving picture shows from operating on Sunday.

The injunction was granted by Judge Marvin Brown when he occupied the Sixty-seventh District Court bench, and Judge Ben M. Terrell, who succeeded him, has been asked by the picture people to dissolve it. A decision is being awaited with interest by exhibitors.

MINNEAPOLIS EXHIBITOR WILL TRY TO FORCE COURT DEFINITION OF POLICE POWER LIMITS

THE motion picture business in Minneapolis is going to the mat with police power. Police power is something rather vague under the Minnesota statutes and whenever a statute can't be found that will apply to cases in hand, mayors of cities, sheriffs and others call in old "General Police Power" and, as a rule, carry the day.

This is all very well for the stamping out of evils, and the motion picture men believe that it is good when it comes to freeing plays, film or old school, from obscene matters, but to apply it because this or that faction might be displeased, they believe, is a far different matter.

That is why A. G. Bainbridge, Jr., manager of the Shubert theatre, which is showing "The Birth of a Nation," has obtained a temporary injunction from the city preventing the mayor or police from stopping the film until the police powers of the mayor can be ascertained in court.

Mayor Nye has used this same power several times recently in prohibiting plays. While the picture men know he is sincere, they believe he is exceeding his legal rights. The city ordinances and the statutes allow public peace officers to stop and prevent forthwith obscene exhibitions.

"The Birth of a Nation," however, is not obscene. Nevertheless the mayor ordered Mr. Bainbridge not to show it on the ground that it would tend to incite race hatred.

Several negroes assured the mayor that it would do just that.

There was also a protest from the G. A. R. men, who said that the picture gave a wrong impression of the Civil War.

Still there were others who said that it was all right for people of the North to get the Southern view if the picture gave such a view. The discussion led the mayor to prohibit the film.

The first run was scheduled for Sunday, October 31, and a permanent injunction was obtained and the case taken to court. The show continues. The decision, however, is eagerly awaited in Minneapolis. The city has no censor board, but the censoring is done by a policeman.

In St. Paul the negroes proved their point. The film is running there, and when a negro employed at the Auditorium testified before the city council that the film did no harm to the colored race, fifty other negroes who were there to protest, followed him out of the room and chased him down the corridors. He was rescued by the police.

SMALL TORONTO EXHIBITOR ALLEGES POLICE DISCRIMINATION

That Yonge St. theatres, being on Toronto's main street were favored over and above their lesser rivals on the side streets was the contention at the police court in the Canadian City, in the case of Hyman King, a proprietor charged with allowing a number of people to obstruct the entrance to his playhouse. His lawyer stated that he saw two long lines of people waiting to get into a prominent picture house on Yonge street, with a constable standing between them, surveying the scene.

"Is there a different law for Yonge street, as a big main street, than for Queen street as one of the lesser main streets?" he asked.

The magistrate replied that the by-law had been broken in this case and that he had to impose a fine of $20 or 30 days. He added that if the Yonge street theatre men were brought to court, they would receive the same treatment, including the fine.

PUBLIC HEARING AT ST. LOUIS ON CENSORSHIP

More than a hundred motion picture theatre managers of St. Louis attended a public hearing of the Legislative Committee of the Board of Aldermen on October 29 to oppose the proposed censorship bill for the City.

O. G. Cox, secretary of the National Board of Censorship of New York, was present to give his views on the matter, and in a little speech he declared that in his opinion a local board of censors was unnecessary, in fact it would be rather a detriment to the business. William Sievers, of the New Grand Central, said he did not believe the people wanted censorship, and cited the instance of the "Isle of Regeneration," which attained such popularity on account of unfavorable criticism by E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, who wanted some swimming scenes eliminated, that the feature was booked to run the second week to satisfy all the demands from the patrons of the house. Mr. Sievers invited fifty prominent St. Louisans, among them a number of clergymen, to view the film, and all said that they saw nothing objectionable in the picture.

Another opponent of the bill was Arthur J. Fitzsimmons, member of the Associated Theatres, who control a chain of moving picture houses in St. Louis, besides two dramatic houses.

Arguments for censorship were made by E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, attorney for several Catholic societies, Park Commissioner Cunliff, Jacob Furth, a representative for the Jewish Charities, and Alfred Burgess, a negro attorney.

At the end of the discussion, Park Commissioner Cunliff announced that he would draft a third bill, which he would present to the Board of Aldermen on the next day. The amended bill was duly presented by Alderman Koenig on the following day, but at this writing has not yet been passed.

WINNIPEG CENSORS PASS "NATION" AFTER MAKING A WEIRD "CUT"

"The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Walker theatre, the biggest playhouse in Winnipeg, Canada, during the week of November 22, had a hard time getting by the Winnipeg censors. They have been very gravely considering for several days the advisability of refusing to permit the picture to be shown. Although "The Birth of a Nation" was shown in London, England, for six months and in Toronto for four weeks, the censors were considerably opposed to its being shown in Winnipeg.

The censors became terribly agitated at the suggestion that the film be produced in Winnipeg. After seeing the picture, Alderman Davidson declared emphatically that it must not be produced. He thought the sight of women crying over the prospects of their husbands going to war might interfere with recruiting. He is not a member of the board, but at the city hall it was said he attended the sittings occasionally.

The board is composed of J. W. Horne, T. A. D. Bevington, Sam Clarke and Frank Kerr. They finally decided to permit the film being shown, if the scene portraying women in distress over the presence of war be eliminated. The members seemed to think that in this way the fact that anyone who goes to war may get hurt will be concealed.

PICTURE INDUSTRY YIELDS $500,000 YEARLY TO CANADIAN REVENUES

According to an evidently carefully prepared article in the Starr Weekly, a Canadian periodical of considerable importance, over $500,000 is contributed yearly by the moving picture industry to the Canadian revenues. About $9,500 is collected every week in customs duties by the Dominion Government, while the Provincial Board assesses $1,125 in fees.

On every reel coming into Canada there is a duty payable of $26.50. On an average something like 300 films come into the country every week. Thus it can be seen that the duty derived from this number of films is quite considerable in aggregate. In addition, duty has to be paid on all the posters, photographs and advertising matter at the rate of 42½ per cent., which amounts to about $500 a week. Then the duties on new projection machines bring in another respectable revenue, which at the rate of 42½ per cent. amounts up to roughly $1,000 a week.

Every reel has to be censured by the Provincial Government and the cost is $1.50 per reel. A rough estimate of the censor fees paid every week to the Governments of Quebec and Ontario place the amount at $1,125.

"THREE WEEKS" PROTESTED BY CLUB WOMEN

Club women in Montgomery, Ala., recently protested against the showing of "Three Weeks." They went to the city commissioners and to the manager of the Grand theatre, at whose house the picture was to have been shown.

The management went to the expense of wiring Birmingham and Atlanta, and both those cities wired back that "Three Weeks" was unobjectionable, and had been shown in both cities to large audiences. It was finally agreed that "there was nothing offensive about the picture except the name."

CENSORSHIP COMMITTEE TO PASS ON PICTURES IN QUINCY, ILL.

Quincy, Ill., is now organizing its motion picture censorship committee, which is to act under a city ordinance just passed by the council. The ordinance provides a fine of not exceeding $100 to any exhibitor who shows a picture which the mayor has ordered suppressed. The mayor's action in suppressing pictures comes only after a majority of the board, which is composed of five members, has recommended that a picture be suppressed.

Some objection to this section of the ordinance has arisen among the board members, who say that it is not always possible to have three members pass on a picture, and an effort may be made to have the ordinance changed to permit the suppression of a picture on the recommendation of any two members. The committee plans to adopt a set of rules and regulations covering their work.

Mayor Abbott is assisting in directing the work of the committee, although not a member. There is one woman on the board, Mrs. Inghram, and the other members are Messrs. Brackensick, Hasse, Luther and McHugh.

"PIRATING" OF "DAMAGED GOODS" TO BRING PROSECUTIONS

Evidence is being gathered by the American Film Company, Inc., against certain exchange men in various sections of the country who have been discovered "duping" the famous "Damaged Goods" recently released on the Mutual Special program, with Richard Bennett in the leading role.

This picture has created a sensation in film circles, and the extensive manner in which it is being backed has led "film pirates" to try to deceive exhibitors with "duped" films.

Reports of the pirating have come from several cities.

MAYOR OF ANDERSON, IND., ORDERS SIGNS FROM SIDEWALKS

The mayor of Anderson, Ind., has ordered all picture show proprietors to remove signs from the sidewalks. The mayor says that the exhibitors have been abusing the sidewalk privileges.

RHODE ISLAND CONGRESS OF MOTHERS PROTESTS PLAN FOR CENSORSHIP IN PROVIDENCE

A RESOLUTION protesting the action of Providence, R. I., women's organizations in asking the Board of Police Commissioners to appoint a board of theatre censors of three members, including a woman was passed by the Board of Directors of the Rhode Island Congress of Mothers at a meeting in the parlors of the Young Women's Christian Association recently.

Mrs. Dwight K. Bartlett, president of the congress, opened the discussion by briefly reviewing the work done last year by the Council of Presidents in studying city ordinances and State laws on censorship, and of her own personal observation of results obtained in some Western cities. She suggested a method of control through the licensing of theatres and pointed out how, in many cities, voluntary agencies strengthen and guide the police power to which public drama is subjected.

She told of Philadelphia's recent experience as a result of a State board of censorship allowing certain pictures to be shown. A riot ensued, and the police were powerless to prohibit the show, she said. At the close of the address, resolutions were adopted in protest of such a board in Providence.

The resolution pointed out that censorship is impracticable and dangerous; that the theatre is a vital factor of democracy in the development of new world-ideas; that the people need not so much protection as life, and that ultimately moral protection comes through knowledge and life.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 4.

MAE MARSH, the Fine Arts Films actress who has been on a vacation spent in New York, has returned, and will soon begin work on another subject for the Fine Art Films.

Director Lloyd Ingraham during the past week staged a very realistic fight scene for the coming Fine Arts subject, "The Missing Links," in which Tom Wilson, a former semi-professional boxer, proceeds to show Robert Harron and Elmer Clifton just how the stunt is done. Wilson appears as the sheriff who raids a club room where a poker game is in progress. Just how the players escape with their lives when Battling Wilson and his men raided the place, is a mystery to those who have seen the film projected at the studio.

One of the pleasant social events of filmdom this week was that of a birthday dinner party given by Ralph Lewis, known throughout the country as Stoneman in "The Clansman," who is now playing in "Mother of Seven." A very large number of the Fine Arts Films Company were present and made the event a very merry one.

Lillian Gish in Original Photoplay

"Daphne," is the title given an original photoplay written by Granville Warrick in which Lillian Gish will play the name part. The role is that of a young vivacious French girl of convent training, who slaps the face of a handsome count who makes overtures to her. An eventful romance follows. Elliott Dexter has been cast to play the role of the count, and he is considered an excellent type for the part. A number of scenes will be taken aboard a private yacht, and William Christy Cabanne will be in charge of the direction.

The Fine Art company producing "The Wood Nymph," in which Marie Doro is playing the name part, is now at Pine Crest in the San Bernardino mountains. It is the intention of the players to remain here for two weeks living out of doors in tents with a complete camp outfit. Those in the party are Director Paul Powell, Frank Campeau, Cora Drew, Wilfred Lucas, Charles West and F. A. Turner.

The Fine Art Films Company has purchased the motion picture rights for "The Five False Friends," written by Rufus Steele, the magazine writer of San Francisco. The theme of this is the unreliability of the testimony of the five physical senses as evidence upon which to convict a suspect of murder.

"Cross Currents" Drama of Home Life

Advice from New York is to the effect that Alan Dwan is now producing "Betty of Greystone," at the New York Fine Art Films studio, in which Owen Moore and Dorothy Gish are featured.

"Cross Currents" the Fine Arts Films play featuring Helen Ware which is now in the process of cutting, is spoken of at the studio as a drama that shows that family home life is the stronghold of the nation, and its honor and sanctity must be preserved. The author has made it plain in this that child rights are paramount, and that children are entitled to the parents' protection and the benefit of heir mature experience to fight the world. Life of the children should not be handicapped by a division of the family, and two people who become parents should consider this as the vital thing in social life.

Teddy Sampson has been transferred to the New York studio of the Fine Art Films Company for a period of eight weeks, and has left for the eastern metropolis.

The Seattle V-L-S-E exchange is conducting a contest at the close of which the exhibitor of Big Four features, who has used the most and best stunts in the way of publicity, will receive as a gift a one hundred dollar watch. The contest closes December 15, and Manager Tom North is already receiving numerous pictures from the patrons of this exchange. He has aroused considerable interest in the territory.

Smiling Billie Mason who was with the Universal Joker comedy company, has transferred his affections and smile to the Keystone studio. Although Mr. Mason has been in Los Angeles but a short time, he has made a large number of friends here.

Nell Shipman, who wrote a number of plays during the summer for the J. Warren Kerrigan Victor company, has now taken a contract to write two subjects for Francis X. Bushman. One has been completed, and the second will be taken up in a short time, or after Miss Shipman completes the five-part story, "Wanda of the Red Street."

New Uniforms for Keystone Cops

The uniforms of the Keystone cops, which according to records of the films, have absorbed more muddy water than any other clothes in the world, have been relegated to the rear, and replaced by foxy new uniforms of the style of those worn by the cops of New York. The policemen are soon to be seen in Keystone Triangle films.

De Wolf Hopper is now riding his third nag, two having become so weak that they could not support him without their knees giving way, and to quote the girl at the cashier's office who issued checks for the "steeds," "Everyone was afraid the first two horses would break." These celebrated specimens of horse-flesh are playing in support of the star, literally and figuratively, in the filming of "Don Quixote."

The Spero company, making comedies for the Kriterion Program, have finished their first subject entitled "Cupid vs. Sammy," which consists of two reels, and are now working on a one-reel subject, "An Innocent Crook," in which Sammy

Burns and Dot Farley are featured under the direction of G. P. Hamilton. Lee Hill, late of the Chaplin-Essanay company, is a new member of this organization.

Gilmore Leaves for New York

In response to a telegram, Paul Gilmore, who has just finished his scenes in the Quality Pictures Corporation subject "Rosemary," in which Mr. Gilmore was co-starred with Marguerite Snow, left for New York Monday to become a member of the Harry Raver cast in the production of the Augustus Thomas play, "The Other Girl." Mr. Gilmore will be featured in this subject together with James J. Corbett, a former champion pugilist, who has also appeared in several stage productions.

The four-reel comedy entitled "The Submarine Pirate," which has a cast which includes, according to the Keystone scenario department records, "Syd Chaplin, Phillis Allen, Wesley Ruggles, Glen Cavender and the U. S. Navy," has been completed. A great many of the scenes for this were made on board the U. S. submarine boats at San Diego navy yards. The other subject completed during the week is "The Village Scandal," in which Raymond Hitchcock as an itinerant magician, steals the sweetheart, Flora Zabelle, from "Fatty" (Roscoe) Arbuckle.

A new member of the Keystone stock company is Betty Marsh, age six years, who has proven to Director Mack Sennett that she is a regular actress capable of portraying the most emotional child parts, as she was called upon to do so in scenes for "The Janitor's Wife's Temptation," when she shed copious tears and heaved regular sobs that made all think her heart was breaking.

The Keystone Film Company gave Edendale, a suburb of Los Angeles, the shock of its gay and fastidious life Sunday morning, when a set a block in length and representing motion picture studio, garage and offices of an aeroplane company, was burned for scenes in a coming Roscoe Arbuckle Keystone subject. Every member of the Keystone stock company, together with many others and companies of the Los Angeles Fire department, took part in the scenes. Every cameraman and all directors of the Keystone organization, took part in the making of this scene. Roscoe Arbuckle rescued Mack Sennett when the exit of the building was practically filled with flames, then came little Sam Bernard overburdened with the body of Alice Davenport, whose weight amounts to far more than two hundred pounds. Lew Fields carried his little playmate, Joe Weber, out, and Joe then finding he had left his purse inside, fought to return for it. Joe Jackson and his motorcycle of miniature size blocked the exit of the burning building while he put the machine together. The streets and hills on both sides were covered with people watching the making of this scene, and the big crowds added much to the atmosphere. The title for this picture has not been decided upon.

William J. Bowman, director of the Quality company, until they left for New York this week, and who has had more than five years' experience in the motion picture field as director and producer, intends to begin producing for himself, and as soon as the studio is completed will begin making Bowman features. Mr. Bowman has secured a site on Central avenue, Los Angeles, and work was begun there on the studio. This will have a stage one hundred and fifty by three hundred feet, and all modern equipment that will enable production to continue in all kinds of weather, either day or night. No definite announcement has been made as to what pictures will be taken up first, and no players have been engaged.

The Malibou Motion Picture Company, which was organized last fall, has leased the old Kalem studio at Santa Monica, and are making a series of pictures to be known as Casey Jones comedies. J. E. Brada, vice-president and general manager of the company, has engaged P. C. Hartigan, formerly with the Kalem Company, and later producer for Pathé, who is in charge of the direction. A stock company of seven people is retained.

Edison Entertained on Coast

Thomas A. Edison was most pleasantly entertained in Los Angeles during the past week by civic organizations, city officials, and motion picture companies. Mr. Edison arrived here Wednesday afternoon, coming from Santa Barbara by auto. While at Santa Barbara that day, motion pictures were made of the wizard of electricity, and inventor of motion pictures, the films including the start of the Edison party for Los Angeles. Instead of coming direct to the city, Mr. Edison and party stopped at Universal City, where arrangements had been made for the laying of the brass corner stone plate for the new enclosed electric lighted studio. Upon his arrival there the ceremony was performed, and after dinner at Universal City cafè, the party was taken to the theatre, where all members were surprised seeing pictures of themselves, made but a few hours before at Santa Barbara, projected on the screen.

The making of these pictures was under the direction of Beverly Griffith, and certainly marks a new record for speed, in that he traveled more than one hundred miles by auto to reach the studio, had the pictures developed, printed and projected on the screen almost as soon as the Edison party arrived.

Edison Sees Pictures Made

While at Universal City, Mr. Edison watched the making of motion pictures under the direction of Robert Z. Leonard, and at this time, Mrs. Edison first saw the making of motion pictures. The laying of the cornerstone by Mr. Edison is to be considered a remarkable event in the history of electricity and motion pictures, in that he is the inventor of many appliances of both, and this cornerstone is for the largest electric lighted motion picture studio. While here Mr. Edison was entertained at many of the different studios, including that of the Selig Polyscope, where he was in company with Colonel William Selig.

the Quality Pictures Corporation, the studio owned by Fred J. Balsofer, president of the Quality, was leased to President William Parsons, of the National Film Corporation, and possession was taken Monday of this week. The National will make a five-reel subject, the filming of which will be taken up in the very near future. Albert W. Hale has been selected as director for the National.

In the making of a Balboa feature at Seal Beach recently, a company under the direction of Bertram Bracken secured scenes of the incorporation ratification meeting of the villagers, which will serve as a political gathering scene in the photoplay. Following the scenes needed by Director Bracken, he made views of the gathering including the barbecue and display of fireworks, a copy of which will be given to the city for filing, that the future generation may know the importance of the event.

A ball was given on the evening of October twenty-eight at Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, for photoplayers and friends under the management of Charles Murray, Keystone comedian. Mayor Charles E. Sebastian of Los Angeles, lead the grand march.

Lasky Takes Out Big Insurance Policy

The largest insurance policy covering jewels and gowns made on the Pacific Coast, was that through a London firm, taken this week by the Jesse L. Lasky Company on the costumes and jewels of Valeska Suratt, Fanny Ward and Edna Goodrich. The amount of the principal was seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The jewels of this famous trio who are now playing in pictures at the Lasky studio, are every night locked in the safe and guarded by the regular watchmen. In addition, the insurance company has a special watchman at the studio to guard the costumes valued at fifteen thousand, which hang in the three stars' dressing rooms.

A very remarkable set was used this week in the coming Fanny Ward Lasky subject which at this time has not been named. It was not costly from the point of settings, but from furnishings. It represented four rooms of a wealthy Japanese supposed to be located on Long Island, and there were many pieces of genuine teak wood furniture, without a doubt the greatest collection ever gathered together at one time in the West. It is estimated there are not to exceed twenty-five pieces of this costly furniture to be found in California, and more than half that number were used in the scenes. All of this furniture was borrowed from homes of wealthy Japanese in Los Angeles and San Francisco. A bronze Buddha valued at five thousand dollars was used in the set. There are novelties to this in that it contains sliding screens, mysterious panels, etc. Sessue Hayakawa appears as the wealthy Japanese, playing one of the featured parts.

Director Cecil B. de Mille has adopted new hours to keep up with his day and night shifts. From nine to five he devotes his time to the filming of the Fanny Ward subject, and from eight P. M. to two A. M. to the second Edna Goodrich subject. Sleeping apartments have been provided for him at the studio, and aside from putting in the above time, and reviewing all film made, he has nothing to do but read scripts, and take care of other business of the studio, and sleep. De Mille is not very busy these days.

Valeska Suratt has designed a number of new gowns, which are to be given their first showing in the Lasky subject which is being made under the title of "The Immigrant," directed by George Melford. In this the well known legitimate and vaudeville stage actress is supported by Theodore Roberts and other members of the Lasky stock company.

The United Motion Picture Company will at an early date file incorporation papers at Los Angeles. The officers of this are William Francis Truth and Wycliffe A. Hill. They have purchased a site in Edendale at 1764-68 Allesandro street, and a studio is now being constructed. It is the intention of the company to produce religious pictures.

Opium Smuggling Topic of Universal Feature

The coming Universal Broadway feature to consist of five reels which is an adaptation from the Rufus Steele story and entitled "Hop," is based upon actual attempts at smuggling opium into the United States. This story will show the daring attempts that smugglers make for the big reward they receive as the result of the drug being a contraband, and brings out the fact that since stringent laws were passed by the Government in 1909, the prices have increased six hundred per cent. The cast of this consists of Phillips Smalley, Lois Weber, Charles Hammond, Juan de la Cruz, and Marie Walcamp.

AN ARMOURED AUTO IS WRECKED IN BATTLE FOR "THE BROKEN COIN"

"Transgression" is a two-reel story by F. McGrew Willis, being produced with a cast composed of Mina Cunard, Malcolm Blevins and Jack Livingston. It is a story of a sculptor who finds a model in a dance hall, and later when she has succeeded in raising her social standing to that of a respected woman, he causes very unpleasant conditions in her home.

The Universal Gold Seal Company is filming "A Maid, a Man and a Liar," which will consist of two or three reels. The scenario is prepared by Harvey Gates and the production will be in charge of Cleo Madison, who also plays the leading part, that of a fisher girl who is wooed and finally won by a city man despite the attempts of the heavy, a young man of the fishing village. Several fights are to occur in this and a sensational attempt to put the city man out of the way by setting him adrift in a small boat, will be filmed. The cast supporting Miss Madison is composed of Tom Chatterton, J. F. Abbot and Seymoure Zeliff.

The Horace Davey Nestor company is filming "Operating on Cupid," a hospital comedy which ends with the jealous lover who is the head physician of the institution, getting the worst of it, when he attempts to prevent the chief nurse from seeing her sweetheart. The story is by Al. E. Christie, direction by Horace Davey, and the principals are Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallagher and Neal Burns.

The Allen Curtis Joker company is making "Italian Love" wherein a jag who falls getting his hand into a can of red paint, and a ventriloquist practicing with a dummy woman who accidentally tips over a bottle of red ink, cause frightful conditions. The principals are Gale Henry, Max Asher and William Franey.

Myrtle Gonzalez in Feature for U

Myrtle Gonzalez is to be featured in Universal subjects the first of which is now being produced and entitled "The Cruise of the Nancy Lee," which is a story within a story, related by the grandmother to her grand-children, and tells of her experience with her father, a sea captain, and the misunderstandings which arose because of her secret marriage. In this there will be several shipwreck scenes in which Miss Gonzalez will play an important part. The story was written and is being produced by Lynn Reynolds.

The Big U company is filming a Ben Cohn story, "Tides That Meet," a greater portion which is laid in mining camps of the west. The plot contains three principal characters played by Murdock MacQuarrie, Edna Payne and M. K. Wilson. The eternal triangle, mining fortunes and misfortunes serve as a theme. The story will be in three reels.

Frank Tannehill and James Montgomery, the former remembered for his long connection with Gus Hill legitimate stage attractions and his prominence of thirty years on the stage, and the latter for his recent Broadway success, "Ready Money," have been added to the scenario department of the NYMP studios by Producer Thomas H. Ince.

Motion picture rights for "Alias Jimmy Valentine" have been secured by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and it has been determined to feature H. B. Warner in this. Playing opposite will be Dorothy Dalton, who appeared opposite William S. Hart in "The Disciple." The first big interior set for this will be that of the New York Stock Exchange, which is now nearing completion at the new Culver City studios.

Strenuous Week at NYMP Studios

The past week has been a most strenuous one at the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, as the big scenes for the twelve or thirteen reel war drama being made were filmed during the past few days, the last scene being that of the big peace conference at the capital of the imaginary principality built on the plateau above the studios. Work was commenced on this production more than seven months ago, and it will probably require one month more of filming, and then the tedious task of cutting before it will be ready for release. The scenes made this week consist of battles and charges on the capital. Some days more than one thousand men, and fully one-third as many horses were used. The most elaborate scenes were those made Sunday when a peace pageant was staged. Posters inviting the women of Southern California to witness this pageant were conspicuous throughout Los Angeles for the past week, and as the result a great many people visited the studios on Sunday. In this manner Mr. Ince secured thousands of spectators for the peace pageant that it would have been impossible to secure in any other way. These people served as extras. Special cars took the visitors to Long Wharf, Santa Monica, and from there they were conveyed in sight-seeing automobile busses. This was one of the few times that the gates of Inceville have been thrown open to the public, and the public seemed very glad to take advantage of the invitation. The peace pageant was of an allegorical nature, Peace, War, Glory and Victory being personified. The Christ was impersonated by George Fisher. Later in the day a barbecue was served the visitors.

This subject, it is understood, is not for the Triangle program, but will be released as a road show attraction. The principals are Howard Hickman and Hershall Mayall. The major portion of the direction has been in charge of Raymond B. West, and he has been assisted in the big scenes by a number of the directors with several cameramen working on the scenes. The production is under the supervision of Mr. Ince, and it is to be his greatest film.

The Balboa company has added to its equipment a blacksmithing department, and a special building for this is now being erected. Another wedding is reported from the ranks of the Balboa players, the parties being Mr. Alden Willey and Inez Wysong. Yes, it's a habit. This is the fourth in the past six weeks. E. N. Wallock, late of the Selig Company, has been added to the Balboa stock and will serve as director. At the present time he is making a multiple reel subject featuring Jackie Saunders with John McKenzie as cameraman.

Miller a Persistent Advertiser

Manager Fred Miller of Miller's theatre, one of the popular down town houses where Fox Films are given their premier showing, is the most persistent advertiser of any theatre man on the Coast, and uses every means possible to keep the name of Miller's theatre before the public. His most recent stunt was to furnish every apartment within a hile and a half radius of the theatre with a fancy cake of soap on the top of which was the advertisement of the theatre bearing the words, "Why not tonight?"

The last work of "The Broken Coin" serial was completed this week, and Director Francis Ford has left the Universal studio for a vacation of two or three weeks. He departed for New York where he will spend a major portion of the time. Before departing for the East, Mr. Ford renewed his contract with the Universal Company which is for a period of two years.

Managing Director R. S. Sturgeon and company of Vitagraph players departed Monday for Bear Lake Valley, where they will spend six weeks making exterior scenes for "God's Country and the Woman," adapted from a story of the same name by James Oliver Kirkwood. Neil Shipman has been selected to play the part of Josephine, the lead in this, with William Duncan in the opposite lead. George Holt will be the heavy with George Kunkel as the tool. Edgar Kellar has been selected to appear as the half-breed. There were about twenty people in the party, including cameramen, artists, etc. Within the next three or four weeks between fifty and seventy-five people will be taken to the mountains to appear in scenes. For this subject costumes have been secured from the Hudson Bay Company, and the only regret of Director Sturgeon is that the films will not show as many pretty colors. More than fifty dogs have been leased at a cost of more than one thousand dollars a week, and food for the teams will require four steers during the stay in the mountains. Going at this time it will be possible to make scenes before and after snow falls. Later it will be necessary for all who enter the mountains or work out, to use snow shoes. Last year in the making of "The Chalice of Courage," locations were used in this vicinity, and for ten days the party was cut off from communication with the outside world.

Dustin Farnum on Vacation

Dustin Farnum having completed his scenes in "The Call of the Cumberland," for the Pallas Pictures Corporation, departed this week for New York City for a vacation of three weeks, when he will return for three additional Pallas Picture subjects.

Some very unusual sets have been built at the Vitagraph studio for scenes in "La Paloma," the three-reel subject, the idea of which was from the song of the same name. This is being directed by William Wolbert with George Stanley playing the name part, a Spaniard, supported by Mary Anderson, Corrine Griffith and Otto Lederer, who impersonates a very important part, that of the old chair maker.

Production of "He Fell In Love With His Wife," adapted for the screen by Elliott Clawson from the E. P. Roe novel, has been taken up at the Pallas Pictures-Morosco studio under the direction of William D. Taylor. Florence Rockwell, remembered for the part she played as the true blue chorus girl in "Double Cross," when she was co-starred with Arnold Daly, played the part of the wife with Forrest Stanley appearing in the opposite lead. Page Peters is the heavy in this cast. Herman Scott has been added as cameraman.

Waldo Walker, who has been in charge of publicity at the Pallas-Morosco studio for the past year, has decided to enter the producing work, and has accepted a position as assistant to Director Frank Lloyd. Connie Miles, late of the National, and former Los Angeles newspaper man, will be in charge of publicity.

Anna Held will arrive in Los Angeles in a special car from New York for an engagement for the Morosco photoplay company. The vehicle for Miss Held has not been decided upon, but it is stated at the studio that the filming will be in charge of Director Frank Lloyd.

Selig Zoo Working on One Reeler

"The Toll of the Jungle," is a one-reel story being filmed by Tom Santschi at the Selig Zoo, with a cast composed of Vivian Reed, Harry Lonsdale, Wheeler Oakman and Walter Beckwith.

"The False Alarm" is the title of a three-reel Diamond Seal film in which Fritzie Brunette is being featured. This will be directed by William Robert Daly, and Miss Brunette appears as the sweetheart of a detective and by her keen intuition aids him in outwitting a clever diamond thief. This subject will have a big cast.

"Bloom Center" comedy series consisting of twelve two-reel episodes, has been completed under the direction of Sydney Smith, and this week he is directing and playing lead in "The Safe Risk," a single reel by C. B. Hoadley. This gives Mr. Smith opportunity to make a number of his celebrated break-neck falls. He is supported by Ralph McComas, John Lancaster, Betty Nathon, Lee Morris and William Hutchinson.

Lillian Brown Leighton, who has been with the Selig company for the past four years, has accepted a position with the Vogue Films, Inc., whose subjects will soon make their appearance on the Mutual program.

All Selig cameramen, many of the directors and about three hundred people were at San Pedro Saturday to take part in scenes for "My Neighbor's Wife," being directed by Colin Campbell. A superstructure of a sea going vessel showing the saloon, staterooms, stokers' holds and decks of the ship, had been previously constructed and was used in these scenes which terminated with the vessel capsizing. The stars in this are Tyrone Power and Kathlyn Williams. Harry DeVere, Emma Clifton and Eugenie Breserer composed the supporting cast.

NEWS OF THE WEEK IN AND ABOUT SAN DIEGO

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

San Diego, Cal., Nov. 4.

Helen Eddy, formerly with the Lubin company at the Coronado studio, is now with Bosworth and appeared with Constance Collier in "The Tongues of Men."

Adda Gleason, of the Lubin staff, severs her connection with this company next week and is to go with Clune as "Ramona," in the film production of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel of that name. As Mrs. Jackson got much of her material for this popular Southern California romance in and around San Diego it is very probable that a number of the scenes will be filmed at Old Town, as the original San Diego is now called. Miss Gleason's many San Diego friends were pleased to see her excellent work in "The Voice in the Fog," which was a good drawing card at the Broadway theatre last week. This was made shortly before she joined the Lubin forces.

The past week Melvin Mayo has been directing a one-reel picture, "A Delayed Reformation," written by himself and Julian Lamothe. It is a story dealing with the work of a young society woman who is interested in the problems of the slum district. Francelia Billington takes the character of Margaret Norwood, known as "Lady Margaret," the society girl, while R. E. Bradbury and Helen Wolcott play the parts of two crooks, who are ultimately reclaimed through the instrumentality of Margaret.

For the coming week Director Edward Sloman, who has been putting in some hard work with his company on the three-reeler, "The Bond Within," the past week and more, will put on another three-reel picture. "One of the Chosen," a Jewish story, with its opening scenes in Russia. In his youth the main character has a strong hatred for the Gentiles, but in later years there comes a change of heart, and the old man, then a pawn broker, looks at life in a different way. The script is by Julian Lamothe.

H. O. Davis, formerly director-general of the Panama-California Exposition in this city, has been offered an important position with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in the business department.

The Princess theatre, at 1130 Fourth street, which has been dark for some weeks, will be reopened by E. M. Burbeck, of this city, and Arthur A. Lotto, of New York, presenting the programs of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Lotto was one of the first to be connected with the famous Kinemacolor pictures in New York several years ago, and later brought the pictures of the Balkan War and the Panama canal to the Spreckels theatre here.

Signal Films Studio Ready for Filming of Frank Spearman Railroad Serial for Mutual

MAKING A "HELEN" RAILROAD EPISODE AT THE MUTUAL STUDIOS. HELEN HOLMES APPEARS ON HORSEBACK

HERE they are, Signal's famous triumvirate—Helen Holmes, star; J. P. McGowan, producer; and Frank Hamilton Spearman, author of "The Girl and the Game," the sensational and romantic novel now being screened as a special feature for Mutual and which will have its first release December 13.

Mr. Spearman, recognized as one of the foremost American writers, has been paid, it is said, $25,000.

And Helen Holmes, dainty, charming daredevil that she is, has dared the author to do his worst in the matter of death-defying situations. In this, however, Mr. Spearman has the aid of Producer McGowan, who, in order to cascade the thrills and bring every ounce of fear-making energy to bear, built a regular railroad yard, all his own, with engines and cars and all the appurtenances of a sure-enough passenger and freight-carrying line.

The accompanying picture shows a partial view of the Signal studios in Los Angeles, with two locomotives in the background waiting to be used by the company, gathered in the foreground around Miss Holmes, mounted on her favorite horse, Rocket.

A few minutes after this picture was taken Miss Holmes was riding Rocket down down a stretch of the track in front of one of these locomotives in a nerve-racking rescue scene which, when disclosed on the screen, will bring thousands of motion picture thrill-hunters bowing to her shrine.

"Greatest Bunch of Grafters Under One Roof"—But Not as Bad as It Sounds

PLAYERS IN THE UNIVERSAL SERIAL, "GRAFT," WRITTEN BY SIXTEEN FAMOUS AMERICAN AUTHORS

THE greatest bunch of grafters ever gathered under one roof, that's what it is. These are the fifteen characters who will appear, one in each release, of "Graft," the new Universal Film Manufacturing Company serial, which is being written by fifteen different authors.

You might say that some look to be perfect gentlemen. They are in real life, but in reel life they are some of the world's most noted criminals. The first of the "Graft" series will be released the first part of December, immediately following the three-week serial of J. Warren Kerrigan in the new adventures of Terrence O'Rourke. The first chapter is by Irvin S. Cobb, and is now being made at Universal City.

BARKER, KALEM, GOT EXPERIENCE IN STOCK COMPANIES

Bradley Barker, who has joined the forces of the Kalem players, began his work for that company in support of Marguerite Courtot in "The Ventures of Marguerite."

Mr. Barker entered the motion picture field several years ago, following a long experience on the stage and in commercial life. While he was not of a theatrical family, Mr. Barker's early inclinations were toward the stage.

Born in Hempstead, Long Island, thirty-one years ago, Mr. Barker had everything in his favor. He started stock work, becoming a member of F. F. Proctor's stock company. Later he joined the West End stock.

His stock experience finished, Mr. Barker turned to new productions, and for two years he supported Dustin Farnum in "Arizona," and then in "The Virginian."

Then came a season or two in vaudeville, in which he headed his own company. At the conclusion of his vaudeville engagements Mr. Barker left the stage and entered commercial life, but he soon returned to the theatrical field and later turned to motion pictures. After working for several companies Mr. Barker turned to the Kalem Company and was engaged.

"DUMB GIRL OF PORTICI," WITH PAVLOWA, A PICTURE OF STRIKING SPECTACLES

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 4.

ANOTHER strikingly spectacular motion picture that compares favorably with the best of that sort yet produced, was given its first showing to an audience of approximately three thousand professionals at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Friday evening, October 22, following the regular performance. In this, Mlle. Anna Pavlowa makes her debut as a film star, and proved equally as wonderful on the screen as on the stage, in her part the name role of "Fenella" or "The Dumb Girl of Portici." The picture was produced for the Universal by the Smalleys.

This subject stands out from all others produced in which fancy dancing is a part, in that in this the dancing appears natural and with perfect rhythm, and lacking that jerky motion films heretofore have possessed. Mlle. Pavlowa is introduced first as the dancer, and gives several of her most popular dances. Through the film she appears in this role in but few instances, but in each case the dances brought forth applause. Other very beautiful scenes were those in which Mlle. Pavlowa's Russian Ballet took part. These were staged in the palace set and make new standards for producers of future subjects.

The story for this is a decidedly strong one, giving to the various members of the cast supporting Mlle. Pavlowa remarkable parts. That all were cast well is brought out by the very good performances given by each member.

Wonderful sets of great magnitude and elaborate furnishings were used in the court and village street scenes. In the latter there are broad thoroughfares and market places of the width of an American street, and the scenes enacted in these for the wedding festivities are indeed beautiful. The riot scenes, which continue for several reels, are thrilling in the extreme, but are wanting in variety, in the point of view and close ups, as the principals of the production are entirely lost from view in these.

Rupert Julian as Masaniello was sincere in his performance, and Douglas Girrard as Alfonso was an ideal lover swayed by the will power of his royal parents. William Wolbert in the heavy part of Pietro, though a most unlikable character, gives a remarkable performance. Edna Maison and Betty Schade appeared as Lady Elviria and Isabelle, and their beauty and ability as actresses add to this production. Wadsworth Harris as the viceroy gives a very worthy portrayal of this heavy part, and Hart Hoxie as the captain of the guards, again proves his ability as a horseman in the dashing raids, and especially the one in which he rescues the duke's leader. Laura Oakley was seen to advantage in the part of Rilla, the widow.

A notable feature of the production is the novelty introduced in the sub-titles. All consist of double exposures with motion pictures within the titles which emphasize the principal subject of each title.

"GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA" STARRING DUSTIN FARNUM, OF UNUSUAL MERIT

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 4.

OF unusual merit is the coming release by Pallas of an adaptation in five reels from the Indiana story which made Booth Tarkington famous, "The Gentleman From Indiana," with Dustin Farnum playing the name part, that of John Harkless, the University hero who bought and conducted a small town newspaper with such success that the voters of the district sent him to the lower house of congress as their representative.

Most of the important features of this story of a lone youth and corrupt political machine are shown in the film which opens with the hero captaining a varsity football team. At the close of his school days, he purchases the newspaper, and because he will not bow down and be a servant to the leading politician, he is given to understand that every effort will be made to cause his paper to fail. Angered by this threat of the politicians, young Harkless secures proof of corruption, and wages war on the politician's henchman of the Cross Roads, which has been a notorious place and an eyesore to the better citizens.

As in the story, Harkless is white capped, almost beaten to death and placed on an out-going train. Miles away, he is found and taken to a hospital where it requires weeks for him to recover his health. During his absence, the daughter of a former college professor, whom he had befriended when the poor old man was in need, conducted his paper, launched a boom for his congressional candidacy, and successfully terminated it on the day he arrived home.

The subject has several unique and realistic sets. One is the interior of the small town newspaper printing shop, another a street scene at Plattville and the village at the Cross Roads. There are a number of big mob scenes in this, one of which ends in the burning of a village following a hand to hand battle. The night rain storm effects of this are very excellent, and added laurels to the successes of Dal Clawson, the cameraman.

The subject was produced by Frank Lloyd for Pallas, and this can be referred to as this director's best production. Dustin Farnum gives his usual good performance, and especial mention should be made of Herbert Standing, who appears in the role of Joe Fisbee, the drunkard whom Harkless reformed. Helen Eddie, as the slavey, did a clever bit of acting. Winifred Kingston appeared in the part of Helen Sherwood and again was the lovable sweetheart.

This story offers wonderful opportunity for filming. In one or two instances the continuity is not real clear, and there are several scenes that could be improved by close-ups. All in all, the subject should prove a good drawing card for any theatre.

"THE BLINDNESS OF DEVOTION"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

IN the multitude of pictures offered exhibitors these days it is a rare thing to find one in which the union of story and acting is complete, and upon a high plane of excellence, but this is what has happened in "The Blindness of Devotion."

The story is not new but it is good; it is told with merciless regard for its rights and privileges as a story, and with no thought at all of forcing a happy ending. In brief, it has to do with the devotion of an elderly man to the son of his dead friend; the son's betrayal of this devotion by an affair with his benefactor's young wife; the subsequent discovery, bringing with it the young man's suicide and the poisoning of the unfaithful wife by the outraged husband.

Such a sketch of the plot does not do justice to its strength as a whole. It gains and keeps the interest because it is developed logically, and because the players chosen to present it are convincing.

Robert B. Mantell, long an eminent Shakespearean actor, makes his first screen appearance in the role of the elderly benefactor. To those who associate Mr. Mantell only with high tragedy of the old school, this picture will be a revelation. He "registers" with perfect ease, and is apparently just as much at home before the camera as he was behind the footlights. His work is dignified and restrained, as you would expect it to be, but it also carries real power.

Genevieve Hamper (Mrs. Mantell), as the unfaithful wife who ensnares the adopted son, shows a fine appreciation of her role. Besides being blessed with extraordinary beauty of countenance, Miss Hamper is also blessed with considerable ability in the difficult art of pantomime. The presence of several Fox favorites ensures a well rounded cast: Stuart Holmes (the ward), Claire Whitney (whom he is compelled to marry by his guardian on the eve of the discovery); Mr. Leone, Charles Young, and Jack Standing.

Several garden scenes of real beauty make up the greater portion of the exterior sets, while the interiors are fully up to the Fox standard. Rex Ingram wrote the story, which was adopted for screen use by J. Gordon Edwards, also the director of the production.

"ANSELO LEE"

(Vitagraph—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"ANSELO LEE" is the simplest form of romance, but because of the expressive characterizations, its unusual treatment and its lack of a forced happy ending, it makes a most extraordinary picture.

Antonio Moreno, who plays the title part, a gypsy entertaining hopeless yet sincere love for a girl of fine breeding, is a fitting type for the role, bringing to it a varied series of significant expressions and a noticeably fine physique. Naomi Childers as his opposite is equally well suited to her role. She conveys a sincere and true impression of the girl, whole heartedly in love with a man she inwardly knows she can never marry. The scenes between the two leads are remarkable for their quiet impressiveness.

The support contributed by the rest of the cast is most adequate. Mrs. Nellie Anderson as Anselo's mother, an aged Romany wanderer of the popular type, renders an excellent piece of character work, besides creating by her acting and appearance a ruling air of witchery. Donald Hall as the girl's suitor and Frankie Mann as another gypsy complete the well-balanced cast.

The success of the picture depends in practically every instance on the acting, but it is pleasing to note that the scenes chosen by Director Harry Handworth conform in every respect to the atmosphere created by the players. The photography, though not as good as we have seen in other Vitagraphs, is clear enough not to interfere with the interest in the action.

We believe that the exhibitor who desires a pathetic, beautiful love story, entirely free from any semblance of the morbid, that carefully avoids making much of the eternal triangle, and one that is gloriously pleasing because of the absence of a wrong-doing villain, will find a most suitable and appealing answer to his wants in "Anselo Lee." A. C. Johnston scenarioized the story by Paul Kester.

"SEPTEMBER MOURNING"

(L-Ko-Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN respect to plot and haphazard continuity of scenes this knockabout number much resembles a musical comedy without the music. Even the girls are present, scantily clad in filmy draperies. They essay several weird terpsichorean gyrations and are excitedly watched by the all-devouring male charcaters who, in this respect alone, display human traits. At other times they are the usual clownish inhabitants of slapstick comedies.

"September Mourning" is in many ways superior to past L-Ko products. Although we can bear out its comparison to musical comedies in stating that it is cluttered with shapely lower limbs, it is quite free from suggestiveness and literal dirt, unwelcome qualities that have often crept in offerings of this sort.

UNWILLING AND AGGRAVATING MODELS

The funny business perpetrated by the leading comedians is of a novel sort. Shooting off hats is one of the favorite pastimes indulged in by the members of the cast, while much humor is extracted from those revolving lawn water fountains. The film has its utterly idiotic character in the shape of a crazily made-up photographer who continually keeps popping up to expose his film before the exposed ladies.

The cast is headed by Gertrude Selby, a very pretty little lead, Ray Griffith, Charles Wimringer and Gene Rogers, all of whom are capable enough in their own particular eccentric lines.

We will not attempt to relate the meandering plot, but suffice it to say again that it is made very funny by the abilities of the cast.

ILLUSTRATING FAMOUS PLAYERS' PRODUCTION OF "MADAME BUTTERFLY," A CURRENT PARAMOUNT RELEASE, WITH MARY PICKFORD

"MADAME BUTTERFLY"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CONSIDERABLY well immortalized in novel, opera and drama, "Madame Butterfly" is now presented in pictures, the only remaining medium for conveying its pathetic charm to the people. To doubt the commercial success of John Luther Long's classic as produced by Famous Players is as sane a proposition as to doubt the law of gravity or the power of the press, for such a distinguished work visualized and carrying such a star as Mary Pickford will hardly be likely to know money-making limits.

For proof of this statement witness the innumerable throng that crowded the Strand theatre, all day Sunday, even before the daily papers were given the opportunity to state their opinions of the picture. "Madame Butterfly" and Mary Pickford turned the trick.

"Madame Butterfly" presents Miss Pickford with a role of the sort differing widely from her customary parts. As the too trusting little Japanese girl, who places a firm faith in her American husband, she creates a most appealing character.

Then when realization of his deception dawns upon her, when after firmly expecting his return, she discovers that he has married in his own country, her predicament is pathetic in a true Pickfordian style. She seeks oblivion in the still waters of a Japanese lake, and one can't help softly cursing the handsome young American for his act of criminal folly.

Miss Pickford fulfills all expectations as to her ability to handle the part, insofar as she has been allowed to fulfill them. Sid Olcott seems to have an aversion to close-ups, in which he might have caught an expression even more winsome, even more pathetic than those offered in the many scenes set at a regular distance from the camera.

Olcott has furnished the picture with artistic settings that are truly fascinating. The exterior scenes of Japan clearly suggest that far off country in a convincing and realistic manner. The costumes are appropriate, the types, all of them, well chosen and the photography excellent.

Marshal Neilan, as the American officer, the thoughtless youth who alternately brings joy and sorrow into the life of little Cho-Cho-San, meets easily the requirements of his part. Olive West, W. T. Carleton, Lawrence Wood and Caroline Harris register well in character parts of importance, while the Japanese supernumeraries are there to furnish the desired and attained oriental atmosphere.

"Madame Butterfly" is conclusively an attractive picture. Mary Pickford has created her own Madame Butterfly, which will most assuredly meet with the success her previous roles have been honored with.

"STILL WATERS"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

MARGUERITE CLARK shows in "Still Waters" a complete mastery of screen technique, placing her in the front ranks of motion pictures actresses who count longer periods of training before the camera to their credit. Her role of Nestra, whose sheltered life has developed certain worldless, ingenious qualities, calls for a certain elfian grace associated with numerous stage successes of Miss Clark.

The scenes alternate between canal banks and the circus. The peace and quiet of the uneventful life on the artificial inland waterways are reproduced with charm. And strong contrast is obtained with the hurry and bustle of the sawdust ring.

Nestra is the daughter of a woman who ran off and married a circus performer, then followed her husband's profession. Her father, an irascible old man who had always had his own way, refused to forgive his daughter for leaving him.

She is compelled to care for her infant—born under the big top—amid great difficulties. The child, a girl, is often left in an open trunk in the dressing room while the mother is at her turn in the ring.

One day her pet dog, jealous of his mistress's affection for the infant, shuts the top of the trunk with his forepaws, when nobody is around. This happens just before word is given to strike the tents for the journey to the next town. The circus roustabouts, seeing the trunk closed, suppose it is ready, and buckling the straps, puts it on the top of a wagon.

While passing along a canal the trunk is knocked from the wagon, unknown to the driver. Presently the owner of a canalboat, the grandfather of the half smothered infant, sees the trunk and brings it to the bank with a boathook.

He opens the trunk to see what is inside, and on discovering its unusual contents goes home to his canalboat.

The girl grows up under his care, and not being allowed to see many people, naturally falls in love with the first good looking chap she meets, a young doctor who is equally in love with the wonderfully sweet and fresh child of nature.

Of course there is considerable opposition on the part of the grandfather, who takes it as a personal insult to think that anybody should presume to rob him of Nestra. Before the marriage finally takes place, Nestra finds her mother in a circus, and there is a reconciliation all around.

"THE SUBSTITUTE MINISTER"

(American-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THE plot of this drama, were it unfolded in chronological sequence, would cause tears—of unmitigated boredom. By employing the device of starting at the middle of the story, and leaving the introductory episodes to be shown at the close, the picture is made infinitely more dramatic.

Alfred Vosburgh, making his debut with American Company pictures, is a satisfactory hero, and Vivian Rich acquits herself in her usual commendable manner.

During a police raid on a gang of crooks, John Drummond escapes, and entering the home of Bishop Gould, disguises himself as a minister. A telegram arrives for the bishop, in which a small town pastor asks a substitute, while he is in the hospital.

Drummond decides to impersonate the substitute, and going to the distant village, meets the absent minister's daughter, Muriel. He entirely reforms, and makes a very acceptable preacher. One Sunday, as he is about to deliver his sermon, he sees the bishop and a sheriff in a back pew. Realizing that his trickery is discovered, he tells the congregation of his misspent life in the theological seminary, his father's sorrow at his waywardness, and the subterfuge by which he has posed as an ordained minister.

In the back of the church he points out the bishop, and announces that he is his father. Seeing that he is not needed, the sheriff withdraws, and the happy father blesses his prodigal son.

A FEW OF THE SCENES THAT MAKE "MY OLD DUTCH" ONE OF UNIVERSAL'S BEST OFFERINGS

"MY OLD DUTCH"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"MY OLD DUTCH," with Albert Chevalier, is a feature about which Universal may shout themselves hoarse and still not do justice to its merits. Chevalier's acting is its prime point. His Joe Spudd is a character that "stirs the sympathies," "pulls the heart strings," and affects one in sundry relative ways that are mindful of the press agent's customary chatter.

It is by no means an unusual thing to see husband and wife embrace. Such an event is continually happening in pictures, but do many such scenes make a man whisk out his handkerchief and quickly wipe his eyes or rub his nose, feigning a bothersome itch? It is the quaint, human likeness of the two characters that forces the tears, traits that Chevalier and Florence Turner have brought out with a quiet, dominating strength.

The appeal of the picture lies entirely in the character portrayals of the two leads. The story merely follows them through all their fortunes and misfortunes until at last it leaves them, made comfortable and happy by the son, who for a time disgraced himself. Chevalier and Arthur Shirley collaborated in the preparation of the scenario which allows for extensive character work from Miss Turner and her most lovable opposite. Larry Trimble produced the picture in England, where correct types, actual atmosphere and an evident knowledge of his subject have aided him in making a delightful picture.

As an example of the fine performances given by the leads, we will cite the theatre scene. The costermonger and his wife are seated in the gallery watching a ripe old melodrama. Not once is the stage shown, but by means of the couple's expressions, aided by a few subtitles, the spectator knows exactly what is transpiring on the boards. This series of scenes and many others in the first part of the picture take the shape of delightful comedy, but with further developments, pathos is introduced, and then the tears begin.

"My Old Dutch" is one of the best features of the season. That statement no one will deny after witnessing it.

"SWEET ALYSSUM"

(Selig Red Seal—V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

TYRONE POWER'S commanding presence, his expression of great emotions by a single gesture or the lifting of an eyebrow, and his understanding of dramatic reserve, lend distinction to a plot made of familiar material and not too skillfully put together. Gilson Willets wrote the scenario from the novel by Charles Major. Colin Campbell, the director, has given the production satisfactory settings.

Kathlyn Williams, as an erring wife whose indiscretions with the employer of her husband lead to her own suicide and her lover's accidental death, will further endear herself in this picture to the thousands who are already thoroughly acquainted with her winsome charm. Edith Johnson is "Sweet Alyssum," the daughter upon whom the wronged father lavishes his affection, and she seems born to the part. Wheeler Oakman, Frank Clark, Harry Lonsdale, and "Baby" Frazer are the other principals, and they do their work well.

Sets show interiors and exteriors of an iron works, where Roanoke Brooks (Tyrone Power) is employed, a club, oil fields, a cottage, and other scenes that give a pleasing variety.

The story has several threads of action in it, and while coincidence is nearly always at hand, particularly in the latter reels where the son of the man who ruined Brooks' home meets and weds Brooks' daughter, eighteen years afterwards in the West, interest as a whole is well maintained, chiefly because the work of the players is good throughout.

"Sweet Alyssum" has all the necessary qualities for winning the interest of the average audience.

"THE FERRET"

(Laemmle-Universal—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS a mystery detective story, written and produced by Rupert Julian, "The Ferret" ranks with the best of that variety of pictures.

Without belittling its nice construction and the able manner in which it has been visualized, it may be said that the picture derives the greater part of its sustaining strength from the remarkable twist that Julian gives to his face. He appears in the first few scenes looking like the worst sort of maniac and thug. Later he changes to his natural self and it is almost impossible to believe that the two expressions belong to the one man, until he is seen to contort his features in a closeup.

Aside from this the picture presents a pleasing aspect. A popular plot has been utilized but its development is original and engrossing. Julian has managed to conceal the motive of the murder until just the right moment, and until that time the workings of the detective maintain great interest. Doc Crane as the detective carries this part in an excellent manner. The other important characters are played by Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson.

In respect to direction the picture is very good. There are touches of comedy brought out throughout the three reels, usually with Crane as the medium. The atmosphere is convincing, particularly in those scenes that are laid in the police station, the gangsters' den and the ill-reputed road house.

"THE COWARDLY WAY"

(Equitable—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THIS promised in the first few reels to be merely a story of a frivolous society woman who through her extravagance brought ruin to her husband, but the last reel gave the theme an unusual turn, arousing interest where it had not been keenly aroused before.

A good many producers would have stopped the picture with the suicide of the extravagant wife, the insanity of the husband, and the marriage of the husband's business partner to the husband's sister.

The Equitable people did not do that. They chose to punish the wife for her folly by returning her to earth in her astral body, forcing her to witness the sufferings of her husband and to save him from murdering the child of his sister by a sacrifice on her part. Just as the husband is about to kill the child, the spirit-wife calls upon the Master of Spirits to restore the husband's mind, thus preventing her ever again communicating with him, for in his insanity he had become clairvoyant.

The mechanical effects necessary to make the last thousand feet convincing to the spectator are managed with skill. Double exposures and dissolves are plentiful, and they are introduced naturally, and not as an attempt to produce something wierdly sensational.

Florence Reed, the wife, is equally good as a mortal and as a spirit. The chief merit of her acting is its restraint. Bennett Southard is a trifle melodramatic in the role of the husband, but his work, on the whole, is acceptable. Among the players all of them faithful in their efforts to please, are: Isabel MacGregor, Ferdinand Gidmarsch, and Maud Hill. Marc Edmond Jones wrote the story, and John Ince was the director.

"THE NEW ADAM AND EVE"

(Rialto-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE'S poetic fancy has been worked into a pleasing picture with true artistic feeling, and an evident sympathy for the subject, by the Gaumont studios. The story, although commonplace enough, has received the touches which will aid it to reach the responsive chord so essential if a picture is to be at all successful.

A young girl, persecuted by her aunt, with whom she lives, forbidden to marry the man of her choice, and beset by a scheming adventurer, is led to the theft of a box of securities belonging to her aunt. Before she has fully decided to appropriate them to her own use, she falls to musing over a copy of Hawthorne's book, and soon the astral bodies of both her and her sweetheart, are projected from their mortal prisons, and go forth t see life from the astral plane. To them the conventionalities of life which kept them apart, appear as silly restrictions, and such barriers have no place in their new existence.

They wander about with nature, shunning roofs and walls, which keep them from the sky, and which they cannot understand, and when they resume their mortal bodies it is with a new outlook on life. Belle repents of her theft in time to repair the damage.

Much has depended upon the mechanical arrangements, and the skill of the cameraman, and these have not failed. There is also a directness and logic about the production which is commendable. Grace Valentine and Elaine Ivans are both able and pleasing in the leading feminine roles, and are well supported by a large cast, which includes Charles Richmond, Mathilde Baring, Edward Craske, Frank Goldsmith, William Cahill, Charles W. Travis, Lucile Taft and James Levering.

"THE PITFALL"

(Kalem—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

EXCELLENT acting, good characterization and an elaborate setting have made a brilliant picture of up-to-the-minute life in the case of this new Kalem feature. Several unusually deep interior sets are used in connection with a magnificent country estate to produce an unusually impressive effect of luxury and wealth, in the midst of which fast melodramatic action moves on to a series of climaxes.

The picture opens with as good a poker game as has ever been screened. The camera has been placed directly above the table, and the entire play, with a view of each hand of cards, is shown. Thus the gambling atmosphere and quick action are introduced at the start and the interest awakened immediately.

Through losses which threaten to ruin him, Peter Laird is induced to break his daughter's engagement and force her to marry Deering, a gambler. In later years the discarded man becomes district attorney, and raids the magnificent home of Deering, which is used as an American Monte Carlo. Deering, suspecting that his wife has had a part in notifying the authorities, attempts to kill her after a sensational escape, but the district attorney arrives in time to save her, and the gambler is killed by a fall.

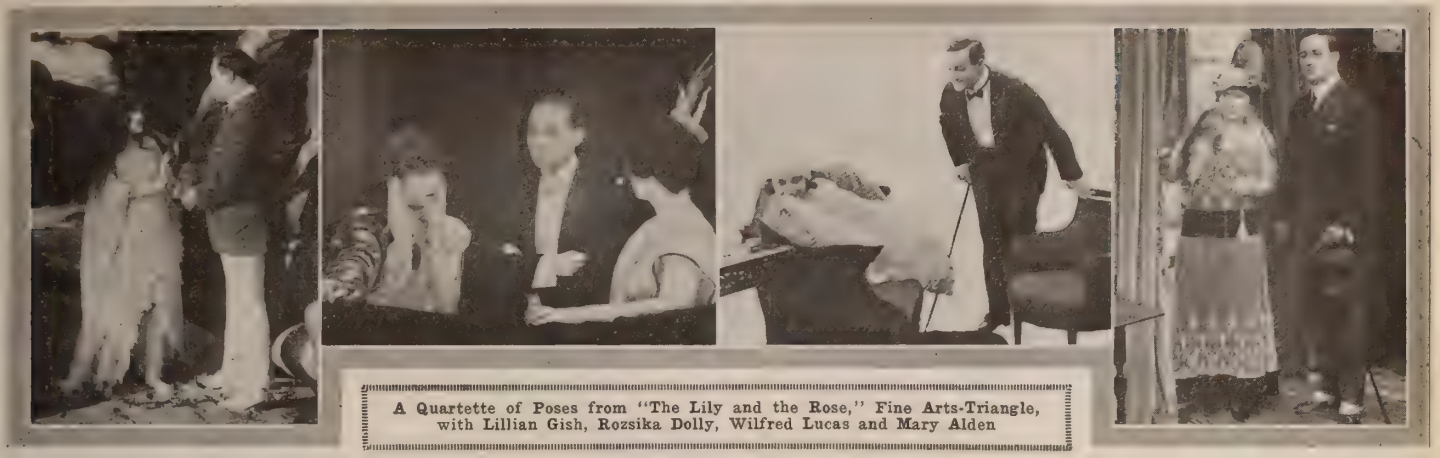
There is a great deal of realism in the spectacular features of the picture, and the characters of Deering, the wife and the district attorney are admirably handled by Thomas Lingham, Marin Sais and True Boardman. Others in the cast who also deserve credit for their work are Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, Paul C. Hurst, and James W. Horne, who is also the director. Howard Irving Young wrote the piece.

"A BIT OF LACE"

(Essanay—Three Reels—

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

JOSEPH B. TOTTEN has had the courage to produce one of the few extant dramas without the last-reel clinch and osculation. The temptation is strong to introduce the "and-they-lived-happily-ever-after" motif to please the "happy ending" fiends. In this picture, logical plot development and human probabilities are not sacrificed to attain a felicitous finale



A bald outline of the plot cannot possibly convey the real power and intensity of the piece. The spectator never feels that he is looking at a mimic representation of dramatic events—the action is breathing reality, and the tragic elements are poignantly powerful.

Sydney Ainsworth's interpretation of the luxury-loving incompetent is consistently brilliant, Edna Mayo betters her usual strong performance, and Darwin Karr's work is thoroughly good.

Douglas Fenwick rebells against his grinding existence as a poorly paid clerk. Bruce Canton, a rich bachelor who had been his chum in college, sympathizes with him, and engages him as his private secretary.

Taking advantage of this confidence, Fenwick embezzles the accounts entrusted to him. By chance Carton discovers this duplicity, and Fenwick is discharged. The embezzler tells his wife that he has been unjustly accused, and fearing prosecution, sends her to his employer's apartment to steal the evidence of his guilt.

Fenwick hopes that Carton's love for Mrs. Fenwick will prompt him to conceal the facts from her, even if he discovers the theft. Carton enters the apartment unexpectedly, and informs Mrs. Fenwick of her husband's action. Broken-hearted, she leaves her husband. The story was written by H. Tipton Steck.

A Quartette of Poses from "The Lily and the Rose," Fine Arts-Triangle, with Lillian Gish, Rozsika Dolly, Wilfred Lucas and Mary Alden

SIXTH KNICKERBOCKER TRIANGLE PROGRAM

("A Janitor's Wife's Temptation"—Keystone—Two Parts. "Aloha Oe"—Kay-Bee—Five Parts. "The Village Scandal"—Keystone—Two Parts. "The Lily and the Rose"—Fine Arts—Five Parts.)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

VARIETY, they say, is the spice of life. Such being the case, the sixth Knickerbocker Triangle program much resembles life both in regard to variety and spice. Griffith's picture is a well acted version of the eternal triangle, Inces an unusual number enhanced by great scenic beauty, depicting a lawyer's downfall and regeneration, and of course, Sennett's comedies offer widely diverse entertainment.

"A Janitor's Wife's Temptation," leading the bill, is a lively farce introducing the female form divine in various stages of negligee. Fred Mace is featured as the janitor, whose better half contemplates eloping with an artist. However, her little child brings the two together again and incidentally introduces some typical melodramatic "sob" scenes, mindful of ten-twenty-thirty. Several novel, although not entirely original, bits of trick work are introduced including the suspension of Mace on a fountain.

Artists' models, dancers and cabaret performers are present in unattired abundance, particularly in the gorgeously arranged cabaret setting. Harry Gribbon and Martha Golden are also in the cast of this rough-and-tumble affair which was produced under the direction of Del Henderson. It is a laughable subject, though nothing extraordinary.

"Aloha Oe," Hawaiian for "Farewell To Thee," Ince's dramatic subject, is burdened with a scenario of somewhat fragmentary and loose construction, but the final effect is satisfying. To begin with much space is occupied by a trial scene of the most dramatically thrilling sort, but its only ostensible bearing on the rest of the story is to bring about the downfall of the lawyer, who is obliged to take to drink in an attempt to settle his nerves. Later, in one of the South Sea Islands he meets Kalaniweo, a native girl, who believes him the son of the god of the volcano. For a time he is happy with her, but later departs for home. There he discovers many changes. His fianceé has married, he himself is thought dead and so he returns to the girl of the south.

Ince has produced the picture in a most spectacular manner. His courtroom scene has a wonderful effect; the storm at sea will exist a long time before it is equalled in realistic effect, and the eruption of the volcano is realistic enough to convince the most hypercritical. The other southern scenes are also nicely convincing while the camera work is good throughout.

Willard Mack, distinguished as an actor and author, performs with expected excellence. Enid Markey, always good, is an appropriate type for the Hawaiian girl, while Margaret Thompson, Frank Borzage, J. Frank Burke and J. Barney Sherry furnish the support. "Aloha Oe" is an entertaining picture, notable for its artistic beauty and good in other respects, save for its scenario.

"The Village Scandal" is the third Triangle comedy featuring, or to be more exact, with Raymond Hitchcock. However, Roscoe Arbuckle, director, is quite the individual star, numbering in his support, Hitchcock, Flora Zabelle, Al St. John and ridiculous Harry McCoy, this time in character makeup. In a country town Fatty looses his girl when a traveling magician comes along.

The locale offers plenty of opportunities for the funmaking ability of the cast, which have been seized upon with the usual Keystone efficiency. The picture ends rather unexpectedly, but undoubtedly will be as well received in every house as it was at the Knickerbocker theatre.

"The Lily and the Rose," directed by Paul Powell, is strong in its cast, which is pleasingly able. Its story, based on the eternal triangle, ends with the husband disappointed in his paramour, seeking oblivion in death, while the wife is at last made happy by her former lover.

Lillian Gish, Rozsika Dolly and Wilfred Lucas are the angels. Miss Gish as the unsophisticated wife gives a most appealing interpretation of the part. She captivated the audience, which was audible in its praise for her work, an adequate tribute, we believe, for any screen actress. Miss Dolly, a dancer of no little note, is a very attractive siren, strikingly in contrast to Miss Gish's type and playing with pleasing ability. Wilfred Lucas is a satisfying husband, while Lyola O'Connor, Cora Drew, Mary Alden, Elmer Clifton and William Hinckley complete the cast.

"The Lily and the Rose" is very frankly treated, Miss Dolly being a most expressive and telling, questionable woman. We will take exception to two things in the picture. One is the title coming before the scene in which the husband contemplates death. "Such things don't happen nowadays" is the way it reads. Evidently it is intended to alleviate in a comedy way a dramatic situation. If this be its mission, it fails. It merely makes the onlooker wonder why it is there. The other point in question is a close view of the wife staring at her dead husband, whose face is visible in the coffin. People don't like it, even though it affords Miss Gish a wonderful chance for dramatic work.

In other respects, the picture is nicely done. The photography is superb, while the story is well developed and enacted most commendably. Miss Dolly does a little dancing.

In general this program is a collection of averagely good pictures. The casts are the strong points in every instance, the work of all the principals being unusual enough to warrant a warm reception of the pictures.

"NEDRA"

(Pathé-Gold Rooster—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

IN charm and interest of theme, in development and strength of story, and in magnificence and logic of production, "Nedra" promises to rank with the season's most important film offerings. There are several minor details which have been attended to with scrupulous care, and the eye and mind of the spectator are pleased simultaneously.

Pictures such as this have a latitude of appeal which a careless production or one which aims at the heads of great critics can never achieve; it will be difficult to find an audience of a class which will fail to be pleased with what has been done for them—which makes it an especially impressive offering for a "hopelessly mixed" audience.

Honors should go about equally to author and director. An excellent and unique story has been provided, and the director has added touches, ranging from little bits of nature to broad sweeps of atmosphere, which show his conception and mastery of his subject.

The combination which has produced this result is George Barr McCutcheon, Edward José, George B. Seitz and George Probert. Nor should we forget Fania Marinoff and Margaret Greene, who have the only two feminine rôles of any moment, and handle them excellently. Assuming that the director cast the piece, one of his greatest achievements has been the selection of George Probert for the lead. He seems to fulfill every screen requirement, and add much of his own irrepressible youth to the part.

Gripping as is the typhoon at sea and the breaking up of the liner, which throws the leading characters onto the mercy of the Pacific, and finally onto the savage island of Nedra, it is balanced by the charm of the scenes on the island, when the hundreds of savages greet the "white gods" and the visitors organize them into battalions. The culmination comes when an American warship arrives, and a white boat, filled with white-clad men, takes away the "white gods" while long lines of bedaubed natives bow their obeisance from the crest of the breakers. These scenes were filmed in the Bahamas, and a wealth of tropic vegetation frames the island pictures.

Other scenes are set in New York drawing rooms and on shipboard. They are well in keeping with the standard set by nature in the samples shown to us.

"HEARTS OF MEN"

(Harris-World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WORLD FILM'S latest offering from the Charles K. Harris studio is distinctly novel in that it is a five-reel feature, enacted for the most part by child players.

The young actors and actresses furnish comedy, pathos and bits of melodramatic villainy as the story unfolds, all of which is done in a captivating way. Frank Longacre and Ethelmary Oakland lead a large rank of juvenile performers, and their acting is of a sincere and capable sort.

Arthur Donaldson and Beulah Poynter are featured in the mature roles of "Hearts of Men," the former giving an emotional rendition of his part, that well corresponds with the general heart interest tenor of the production.

The opening of the story finds Wagner and his wife on their way to America after they have been robbed of a valuable formula for the manufacture of perfume, which Wagner had only completed after many days of hard labor. In America, their little child is sent to school and instantly forms a great companionship for a little German girl, who turns out to be the daughter of the man who swindled Wagner. And then for the sake of the children Wagner buries his long-cherished revenge and goes into partnership with his former enemy.

The adventures of the children occupy much of the footage. The two little lovers are obliged to cope with a mischievous pair of young imps who also attend the school, and the consequences are naturally very funny.

The direction by Perry N. Vecroff is consistently good throughout the five reels while the photography is fair enough from beginning to end. "Hearts of Men" seems certain of appealing to a large class of people. Children will take great delight in it, because the true juvenile atmosphere is there, and besides its appeal is broad enough to include those of mature age.

"The Gambler of the West." (Biograph. Four reels. Wed., Nov. 17.)—Not yet shown for review.

"His Wife's Sweetheart." (Edison. Wed., Nov. 17.)—A rather clever comedy skit. The longing for a little poodle dog so takes up the wife's time and affection that the husband is forced into the background. His refusal to buy a dog leads to a temporary separation, during which the husband imagines his wife false, picks a fight with the husband of another woman whom he takes for his wife, gets decidedly "beat up," and finally winds up by giving in to his wife by bringing home the "purp," which is almost smothered by the wife's caresses while poor hubby falls exhausted to the floor entirely forgotten by his dear spouse.

"A Child in Judgment." (Edison. Three reels. Fri., Nov. 19.)—Reviewed at length in the issue of October 9.

"Twice Into the Light." (Essanay, Mon., Nov. 8.)—Barring infrequent poor motivation, and the over-zealous work of the heavy, this picture makes good entertainment. John Lorenz in the part of the blind musician, does a capital bit of acting. Waldo Perry, who has been blind from birth, learns to play the violin and becomes an accomplished musician. A girl named Laura has been his constant companion during his blindness, and when his sight has been restored by an operation at the age of 25, he falls in love with her more than ever.

He takes her to an Idaho construction camp, where he has a job as foreman. The head of the company arrives at the camp, and finding Waldo playing the violin for his men, smashes the instrument. Waldo rushes out of the cabin, accidentally falling over a cliff. He loses his memory and for a year is a wandering tramp.

By chance he comes upon his wife, who is being annoyed by an undesirable suitor. This man strikes Waldo in the face, and this jolt restores his memory. In later years Waldo becomes a famous violinist. Supporting John Lorenz are Harriet Notter and Charles Racey.

"A Night in the Show." (Essanay. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 15.)—Charles Chaplin sans derby, cane, inflated trousers, and Brobdignagian shoes is Chaplin still. In his latest of his pictures he appears in conentional evening garb, but he gets into just as much trouble as usual.

The scene is laid in a vaudeville theatre, and Chaplin in an orchestra seat has ample opportunity to display his genius for making those around him unhappy. A rough-neck in the gallery (also played by Chaplin) cuts loose with pies, tomatoes, and finally with a fire-hose. This last weapon breaks up the show.

It is doubtful whether the public will allow Chaplin to discard the famous make-up regularly, but as an experiment it is interesting. The supporting company is surprisingly good.

"A Bit of Lace." (Essanay. Three reels. Tues., Nov. 16.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Lakes and Glaciers." (Essanay. Wed., Nov. 17.)—A very good scenic.

"Snakeville's Eugenic Marriage." (Essanay. Thurs., Nov. 18.)—A broad farce-comedy, moderately amusing, burlesquing the conditions that might ensue, where compulsory ante-nuptial physical examinations required by law. The cast is composed of Margaret Joslin, Victor Potel, Robert McKenzie, and Bell Mitchell.

"The River of Romance." (Essanay. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 20.)—The story of this picture was adapted from the winning scenario of the Birmingham Age-Herald contest, and is of average merit. The out-door scenes are very well chosen, and the acting is occasionally unusually good.

Ramon Randolph, a young engineer, is offered $10,000 by a railroad company, if he can plot a way through a mountain range without cutting a tunnel. While at work he is captured by a band of moonshiners, but when he proves his identity, he is invited to their cabin for the night. There he meets Dora, who more than interests him, but he is jealously watched by Joe Lucas. Next morning Ramon starts for his camp, but returns to the cabin for his field glasses. Dora is alone, and he is about to kiss her, when he is shot down by Joe. Joe flees, but divulges Ramon's whereabouts when he is captured by the chief engineer. Through Dora, Ramon learns a way through the mountains, and gets the $10,000. They are married shortly after.

John Lorenz, Charles E. Ashley, Elizabeth Tinder, and Charles W. Racey are the principals.

"The Kidnapped Heiress." (Kalem. Fri., Nov. 12.)—The third of the "Ventures of Marguerite" finds Marguerite Courtot captured by a band of thieves, while attempting to assist the husband of her maid. The thieves hold her for ransom, but Leo, the man she was trying to help, comes to her rescue, and after a thrilling pistol duel she is rescued. The shooting attracts the police, who round up the gang, and Marguerite's object: to save Leo from their hounding, is accomplished. Marguerite Courtot is assisted by Richard Purdon, Helen Lindroth, Frank Holland, Robert Vaughn, and Harry Edwards.

"The Pitfall." (Kalem. Four reels. Mon., Nov. 15.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"A Bargain in Brides." (Kalem. Tues., Nov. 16.)—Bud, who wants to marry Ethel, is opposed by her father, who offers him $500 if he will marry Marie the cook, instead. Then Bud disguises Ethel as the cook, and locks Marie in the pantry. The ceremony is performed and Bud gets his $500, when a policeman who has rescued Marie brings her in. But it is too late. Ethel Teare, Bud Duncan, Rube Miller, Charles Mulgro, H. Griffith and Julia Rand are in the cast.

"The Night of the Embassy Ball." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 17.)—A thrilling drama of European intrigue and politics, removed to this country. Agents are seeking the Prince of Weerkelm to get his signature to a document which will insure peace, while another coterie seeks war. The Prince is abducted and held, but a maid learns of the capture and informs her sweetheart, a member of the secret police. The Prince is rescued, and hurried to the embassy, where a ball is in progress. There he learns for the first time of the war cloud, and immediately signs the peace pact which prevents hostilities. Guy Coombs, as the Prince, is ably supported by Thedore Branch, Martin Strong, Paul Tepper, Anna Nilsson and Joseph Baker. The piece was written by C. Doty Herbert.

"The Veiled Priestess." (Kalem. Fri., Nov. 19.)—Fourth episode of the "Ventures of Marguerite." The heroine becomes interested in Durbar, a mystic, and Hal, her sweetheart, who is alarmed at her interest, meets Martha, a girl whom the mystic has robbed of her fortune under promise to wed her. Marguerite is enticed to the mystic's house, where Martha is already being held, and in attempting to rescue her, Hal is also caught and locked up. Durbar gives Marguerite fifteen minutes in which to decide to marry him. In the meantime Martha escapes, changes clothes with Marguerite and, heavily veiled, is presented as the heiress, completely fooling the mystic. Hal and Marguerite escape. Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon, F. B. Vernon, Walter McEwen and Anna Reader are in the cast.

"The Girl on the Bridge." (Kalem. Sat., Nov. 20.)—Helen, in this episode of her "Hazards," becomes involved with a band of criminals who plan to rescue a comrade as he is being taken to states prison. The gang in the meantime has stolen a money bag from a railroad clerk, and Helen recovers it. She dashes away in a handcar, but as she approaches a drawbridge it lifts, and she has just time to jump from the car before it goes over into the water. The gang overtakes her, but the train with the prisoner on board pulls up at the drawbridge, and the entire gang is rounded up. Besides Helen Gibson, Clarence Burton and Franklin Hall are in the cast.

"The Orgy." (Lubin. Mon., Nov. 8.)—A gruesome drama that turns out to be merely a dream and so the guardian profiting by his nightmare sanctions the marriage of his ward and secretary instead of offering further interference. It is not clear that the action is dreamed, and consequently the awakening seems as an excuse to bring about the happy ending. Bernard Seigle, Ethel Clayton and Francis Joyner are the leads. The story is by Daniel Carson Goodman.

M-I-N-A COMEDIES
FLORENCE TURNER AS MABEL NORMAND
RELEASE OF NOVEMBER 25th ON GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Half a Million." (Lubin. Tues., Nov. 9.)—This is better than the usual run of David L. Don Comedies, being blessed with a plot of some humor besides introducing Don at his best. The incidental business registered by all the characters is quite funny. Others in the cast are Eleanor Blanchard and John Delson. Edwin Mckim directed from the scenario by Daniel Ellis.

"The Secret Room." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 10.)—A mystery story of some little merit although much of the later action is unconvincing. It is slow at first but startling things begin to happen toward the end, and the interest quickens. Melvin Mayo, L. C. Shumway, George Routh and Velma Whitman are the leads. The wife's part is rather porly interpreted. The story is by Julian Louis Lamothe, the direction by Paul Powell.

"The Ghost of the Twisted Oaks." (Lubin. Three reels. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—While the picture contains novel incidents and has at times a generous amount of suspense because of them, it is not based on a story worthy of three thousand feet of film. Its general impression is fragmentary; too much is made of subplots. The photography and scenes on the other hand are quite unusual. Valentine Grant, Florence Wolcott and James Vincent appear in the leading roles. Sid Olcott produced the picture from a story by Pearl Gaddis.

A Night in Old Spain. (Lubin. Fri., Nov. 12.)—The attractive personality of Helen Eddy lifts this rather mediocre story to the level of good production. The greater part of the action takes place in a dream and is laid in Spain. The atmosphere, scenes and photography are good. Jay Morely, L. C. Shumway, Adda Gleason and Melvin Mayo are also in the cast.

"His Three Brides." (Lubin. Sat., Nov. 13)—Mark Swan prepared this scenario for Billie Reeves, who for the time being discards his eccentric makeup and appears in civilian garb. Under Earl Metcalfe's direction, the comedy presents a very satisfactory appearance, the cast being equal to bring out the funny points of the story. Nancy Baring, Patsy De Forest and Adelaide Hayes add a pleasant dash of beauty to the picture.

"The Vengeance of Rannah." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 15.)—Not yet shown for review.

"The Tenderfoot's Triumph." (Selig. Tues., Nov. 16.)—Not yet shown for review.

"The Print of the Nails." (Selig. Three reels. Thurs., Nov. 18.)—Will be reviewed at length next week.

"Locked In." (Selig. Sat., Nov. 20.)—Not yet shown for review.

"California Scrap Book." (Vitagraph. Split reel. Mon., Nov. 8.)—An unusually beautiful scenic containing snow scenes, some impressive views of the ocean and glimpses of the Sierra Nevada. It is very well photographed.

"No Tickee, No Washee." (Vitagraph. Split reel. Mon., NNov. 8.)—This comedy follows after "California Scrap Book" and occupies most of the reel. Kate Price and William Shea are the leads. The title suggests the plot and its nature can best be imagined when it is said that it concerns a squabble between a red hot Irishman and a group of Chinese. It is a fair number, although much is made of a humorless chase.

"Hats Is Hats." (Vitagraph. Wed., Nov. 10.)—Ellis Parker Butler is the author of this comedy reel, a subject that relies for much of its humor upon the witty subtitles. They are quite long, but they add much to the comedy value of the story. Hughie Mack, Edwina Robbins and Donald MacBride are the leads, and under the direction of Wally Van have done excellent work. The story is something original and its abundant humor brought out by the appreciative cast makes "Hats Is Hats" a most desirable number.

"Anselo Lee." (Vitagraph. Three reels. Sat., Nov. 6.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Midnight Prowlers." (Vim. Fri., Nov. 12.)—"Pokes and Jabbs" are the central figures in these new subjects. Jabbs is bothered by burglars, and hires a woman detective, while his wife hires Pokes for the same duty. The detectives become involved with each other, and a real burglar arrives and rifles the house. Pokes, walking in his sleep, bumps into the intruder, and in the scuffle which follows, Mrs. Pokes comes to the rescue and succeeds in accomplishing what the detectives did not. Burns and Stull, with Ethel Burton head the cast.

"A Pair of Birds." (Vim. Fri., Nov. 19.)—"Pokes and Jabbs," garbed in prison stripes, break from the lockstep line, and after several humorous experiences, make their escape from the prison. They encounter an especially heavy man who has left his clothes on the bank while he bathes in the river, and they find his suit large enough to envelop them both. As one man, they visit the fair, and when pursued by police, manage not only to dive off the pier, but to bring the pursuers into the water after them. Burns, Stull and Ethel Burton are in the cast.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Little Captain of the Scouts." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 9.)—The story of how a boy scout brought back the real soldier with whom his big sister had quarrelled. The soldier was a West Point cadet who organized the boy scouts, then suddenly went away, and all the scout could learn about it was that there had been a quarrel. So the little scout went off to war. All the scouts went out to find him, but he was finally discovered by the real soldier. In turning him over to his big sister, the quarrel was patched up, and everybody was happy. Grace De Carlton, Charles Compton, Leland Benham and Ethel Jewett are in the cast.

"Seeing America First," No. 9. (Gaumont. Tues., Nov. 9.)—The Mutual Traveller takes a trip through the Berkshires, shows us a glimpse of Pittsfield, and the inner workings of a big paper mill. "Keeping Up With the Joneses," on the same reel, treats amusingly of Pa McGinis's visit to a picture theatre.

"Stanley in Starvation Camp." (Centaur. Two Reels. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—In continuation of the Stanley narrative, this picture takes the explorers to a settlement where they are unable to obtain sufficient provisions. In the meantime, Ada, in the attempt to rejoin Stanley, has been captured by the White King, but the King is in turn attacked by native tribes, who defeat him and take Ada. Stanley starts for the camp of the natives, and routs them after a night battle but Ada and her party have been spirited away. Roy Watson, Princess Mona Darkfeather, Marie Manley, Edward Roberts, Charles Gay, A. Van Antwerp, Charles Wheelock, Capt. Jack Bonavita and the Bostock animals appear.

"The Substitute Minister." (American. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 15.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Johnny the Barber." (Beauty. Tues., Nov. 16.)—John Sheehan and Carol Halloway enter into the frisky spirit of this lightweight vehicle, and make it amusing, but not hilarious.

Johnny and Doris are college mates and lovers. Doris' father will not hear of their marriage until his son-in-law proves his business ability. Johnny opens a safety razor store, and lures all of the barber's patrons away.

Since Doris' father is the barber, John's enterprise does not make him popular with his prospective relation by marriage. The barber persuades his daughter to do manicuring in his shop, and all the customers return. Another exodus results when Johnny marries Doris, and she does trimming in his store. The business rivalry is ended when the father blesses the pair, and they all work under one roof.

Rae Berger is also in the cast. John Dillon was the producer.

"The New Adam and Eve." (Rialto. Three reels. Wed., Nov. 17.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Warning." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri. Nov. 19.)—Those who revel in typical Western drama will be pleased with these two reels that fairly reek with cowboy flavor. John Graham and his daughter Bessie take a homestead in the cattle country of Arizona.

There they are persecuted by the cattlemen, but after plottings, shootings, rescues, and the like, Bessie is won by a fellow homesteader, and the villains are foiled.

In the cast are Helene Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor, and Charles Newton.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Colorado." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five Reels. Mon., Nov. 15.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Nov. 13.

"A Looney Love Affair." (Nestor. Mon., Nov. 15.)—Love in a lunatic asylum is always made very funny when Al Christie has a hand in staging it. Here Horace Davey directed Neal Burns, Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher in a story by Burns that will most assuredly be greeted with great mirth.

"Manna." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 16.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Nov. 6.

"Bill's Plumber and Plumber Bill." (Imp. Tues., Nov. 16.)—This sidesplitting comedy by Roy Clements has a number of conventional characters and a familiar plot, yet the ability of the cast and some duly funny situations unite to make it most pleasing. Victor Potel as the lazy plumber, and the actress who plays the maid are the cleverest in the cast.

"Lil' Nor' Wester." (Victor. Three reels. Wed., Nov. 17.)—Mary Fuller is presented here in an attractive romance of the sea. Elaine Sterne, who prepared the scenario, knows Miss Fuller's requirements and has evidently constructed her story with these in mind, for the star has a most suitable role. The scenes taken on the water are very pleasing, while all of the locations are appropriate. Paul Panzer and Glen White have the other principal roles.

"Disguised But Discovered." (L-Ko., Wed., Nov. 17.)—Hank Mann and Peggy Pearce in a laugh producing number based on the aged tale of the widower and widow marrying, and each trying to keep from the other the fact that they have children. Hank and Peggy are the kids, and Hank, as usual, is perfectly ridiculous.

"The Ring of Destiny." Rex. Two reels. Thurs. Nov. 18.)—An average Western in which a girl takes it upon herself to avenge her brother's murder. Cleo Madison produced it as well as playing the lead. The scenes and photography are very good and the story contains a creditable amount of suspense with a few comedy touches.

"Muscles and Merriment." (Powers., Thurs., Nov. 18.)—A picturized vaudeville number featuring a troupe of acrobats and tumblers headed by Mlle. Potento. It is exactly the correct thing for the town that doesn't often see a vaudeville show. The feats of strength and agility performed are quite startling. The reel is closed with a Ditmars educational.

"Blood Heritage." (Imp. Three reels. Fri., Nov. 19.)—An average drama by W. H. Lipert, produced by Brinsley Shaw and containing some novel situations. The cast composed of Gladden James, Betty Grey and Lionel Adams, all formerly of Vitagraph, does pleasing and sincere work. The story creates a normal amount of suspense and is notable for the absence of a villainous character of any importance. Opportunities are often offered to the leading players to register heavy emotional bits, and while none of them are particularly adept at this art, their acting is quite convincing.

"Wanted—A Leading Lady." (Nestor. Fri., Nov. 19.)—An enjoyable number with the studio as a locale for the comedy. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are rivals for the hand of their new leading lady but midget Gus Edwards gets in ahead of both. We hope Betty Compson, the leading lady retains her job, for she's very pretty.

"The Heart of a Tigress." (Bison. Three reels. Sat., Nov. 20.)—This is perhaps one of the most fearless wild animal melodramas that have been pictured, chiefly because Paul and Madam Bourgeois have had their hands in its production. Africa, India, California and shipboard are the locales of the picture and in all of them, various feats of daring are performed by the principal players. It is regrettable that such thrilling action should be wasted on such a cheaply melodramatic plot.

"Chills and Chickens." (Joker. Sat., Nov. 20.)—A comedy of the usual Joker sort written by Gale Henry and produced by Allen Curtis. The cast includes Miss Henry, Max Asher, Lillian Peacock and William Franey. The laughs are fairly prominent while the story contains a humorous idea.

"The Mystery of the Locked Room." (Rex. Three reels. Sun., Nov. 21.)—Collectively a very good detective story with a romantic and somewhat lengthy introduction. It is by William Addison Lathrop and features Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips supported by Ned Reardon and Joe Girard. The mystery in the story is a real one and is solved logically.

"Ready for Reno." (L-Ko. Sun., Nov. 21.)—A novel slapstick number, slightly risque in places, but terminating with a smashing and hilarious climax in which all the wonderful tricks of the camera and studio are called into play.

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special. Twenty-first Episode. Two reels.)—This number has more action and more deciding action than the last few episodes.

DETAILS

MUTUAL SPECIAL FEATURE

THE GIRL AND THE GAME

What It Is--What It Means To Exhibitors

"THE GIRL AND THE GAME" is a tremendous feature absolutely new to the world of motion pictures. It is a film novel, gripping in exciting action, and plot interest. The "girl" is that fearless film star, Helen Holmes, the most daring bit of femininity that moving pictures have produced—the "game" is that great, baffling, and always exciting game of railroads, social intrigue, love, and high finance. Nearly 1,000 leading newspapers will publish the story, week by week.

"The Girl And The Game" is a powerful film novel in fifteen highly thrilling chapters. Each chapter is complete in itself, bound into the story by a strong connecting link of splendid romance. One two-reel chapter will be released each week, beginning Monday, December 13th.

The Story by Frank H. Spearman

Noted Author of Railroad Stories

"The Girl And The Game" will back your theatre regularly, for it is built on the true American, red-blooded type of stories that everybody loves. It comes from the brain and pen of Frank Hamilton Spearman, the foremost author of railroad stories of the world. Mr. Spearman is a master creator of plots. He stands absolutely unrivalled in his chosen field of literature—a field that smacks of thrills and realism—of great deeds done in the face of tremendous odds. Frank Spearman has written such successful novels as "Whispering Smith," "Robert Kimberly," "The Mountain Divide," "Held For Orders," "The Daughter of a Magnate," "Dr. Bryson," "The Nerve of Foley," and a score of other widely published works. In "The Girl And The Game," Mr. Spearman has woven a wealth of personal experience and observation. He lays bare the cold blood code of rail finance—the money trickery of the silk-hatted few who fight to control the webs of steel that gird our continent. Through every chapter of the story runs the struggle and eventual triumph of a beautiful young girl who fights the railroad monster. It is a fight to a finish—and the young girl wins!

The Author

The Fearless Film Star—HELEN HOLMES

In all the world there is but one actress whose capabilities fit her to interpret the heroine role in this stupendous screen novel. That one is Helen Holmes—Helen Holmes, the fearless film star. She has the nerve to dare and do. She possesses the grace and the beauty, the ability to "wear the clothes," that are so essential in the interpretation of the remarkable role to which she has been assigned. Further, Helen Holmes is known. She is the empress of daredeviltry, the fearless film star—and as such has a tremendous following from Broadway to the smallest country crossroads.

The Director—J. P. MacGowan

The Director

Samuel S. Hutchinson, filmdom's master producer, has selected J. P. MacGowan to direct "The Girl And The Game." MacGowan has always directed Helen Holmes. He is known as the greatest spectacular and unique director in the motion picture field.

MR. and MRS. VERNON CASTLE

The Foremost Dancers and Fashion Leaders in a Melodrama Written Around Their Lives

Everybody knows the Castles and everybody wants to see them from the wealthy right down. Everywhere they go they are a hit. As stars in "Watch Your Step," the great musical comedy success, they made dramatic history and satisfied the most exacting box office demands.

Here in a perfectly produced and acted six-part drama, full of "go" and vim and life, they bring to you the opportunity to capitalize all the publicity and popularity in your territory for yourself.

Get Your Territory

"The Whirl of Life" is a play with enough romance to delight the youth; with enough homely philosophy to satisfy the elderly folk; with enough excitement to make even the youngest gallery fan shout himself hoarse.

This is not press talk. This is a digest of just what happened in the Globe Theatre, New York, when the play was shown.

"The WHIRL of LIFE"

Story by Vernon Castle Adapted for Screen by Catharine Carr Produced by Oliver D. Bailey

Before asking for this picture analyze what it is that to your mind will make the ideal feature to make money for you. Big stars, a big play, powerful scenes, good photography, exceptional direction, enough of the soft things of life and a trace of villainy. They are all in this feature. Do you want it?

Wire if interested. Territories are going rapidly

THE CORT FILM CORPORATION

Possibly by the time this is on the press, other territories will have gone. This is not the opportunity to delay. A wire is the thing to acquire an option for you.

The Vernon Castles have made money for legitimate theatres, vaudeville theatres, dance houses, restaurants. Their name attached to shoes and other clothes have sold them. Don't you think their motion pictures should do as much for you?

Mrs de Marigny, a widow, without funds, leaves her little daughter, Grace, at a foundling asylum. That same day, an unidentified waif is brought to the asylum, and through the carelessness of a nurse, the babies are wrongly tagged. Several weeks later Mrs. Marigny returns for her baby, but learns it has been adopted by the wealthy Van Dorns, with whom she lets her stay. The real Grace has been adopted by a couple named Whitfield, who set her to work in a dressmaking establishment when she is fourteen. The Van Dorns have named their adopted child "Beatrice", and at fourteen she shows signs of inherited criminal tendencies. Her foster parents are willing to return her to her supposed mother, Mrs. de Marigny, now Mrs. Burleson, but through the absence of an identifying scar on the girl's arm, it is discovered that Beatrice is not her daughter. Meantime, the Whitfields are having a hard time and Grace is the sole support of the household. Beatrice goes from bad to worse, and spreads ruin and misery among those who come in contact with her. She finally runs away with a crook, and becomes a woman gangster. A political crook recognizes in Beatrice the daughter of his dead wife who had run away. On finding he cannot reform her, he kills her, then shoots himself, while Mr. and Mrs. Burleson, learn from Mrs. Whitfield and the Foundling Asylum authorities that Grace is their own daughter

Critics Find Triangle Plays Above Standard

In the beginning of the Triangle offerings at the model theatres, interested persons said the quality could not be maintained; that the first plays were exceptional. The press did not say that it went on reviewing Triangle drama. In the sixth week three dignified Metropolitan Journals say:—

"The sixth Triangle programme, which was presented yesterday in the Knickerbocker Theatre, proved to be one of the best yet offered, and a large audience gave sign of approval.—N. Y. Press.

"The Golden Claw" is presented with true Incian flavor. We waited to the end to see this picture, and it is well worth waiting to see."—Chicago Herald.

"Just how much can be accomplished through the medium of motion pictures is demonstrated by such men as Griffith, Ince and Sennett at the Studebaker this week, and it is so much more than is ordinarily hoped for that the spectator is overawed by the thought of what is to come in the future. It is to be hoped Mr. Griffith will give us more pictures which measure up to 'Double Trouble.' "—Chicago Examiner.

"When Weber & Fields appeared on the screen in 'The Best of Enemies,' a Mack Sennett-Keystone farce, there was a perfect scream of recognition from the audience, and the merriment went with crescendo free until the finish."—Phil. Inquirer.

These are but examples from the opinions of the newspapers in three great cities. Compare these with other opinions and ask yourself why Triangle Plays command such notice.

The Public Will Pay for Triangle Quality

When the Triangle Plan of continuing the greatest producers of motion picture drama with immense resources, and the pick of players was announced, the claim was made that the public had been so long educated to cheap prices that no patronage for better drama could be looked for.

Like many another opinion based on past performances it proved fallacious.

Good pictures and good theatrical offerings are not in separate classes. Motion pictures are not doomed to the ten cent environment—provided they are of the regular theatre quality. The trend of motion picture drama is upward.

A New York theatrical manager is advertising that one scene in his play is of the strength of a great film drama.

The proof—

Richmond, Brooklyn, Norfolk, Louisville, Cleveland, Columbus are offering Triangle Plays at the standard theatric scale. The public patronizes these for the same reason it buys government bonds. They're of a definite proved value.

A film play that costs sixty or a hundred thousand dollars to produce deserves and commands attention. Triangle Plays are of that character—not occasionally, but continually.

35—In closing the discussion on the rheostat for direct current, will you give the important points to be kept in mind in the selection and operation of rheostats?

Ans.—The first and most important point is to make sure of the voltage on the circuit and that the rheostat is intended for the control of the arc lamp on such voltage and circuit.

Second—Never operate a rheostat, no matter how it may be marked, or what your understanding as to the voltage may be, for any length of time if the resistance unit is so hot that it glows red. Any rheostat or resistance unit which glows when the current flows through it is too small for the work.

Third—Remember the object of the resistance in series with the arc and the line is to dissipate or use up the voltage difference between the line voltage and the arc voltage.

Fourth—The arc potential is normally intended to be with D. C. at the arc between 45 and 55 volts and the rheostat must therefore, use up or dissipate in the form of heat, the difference between about 50 volts and whatever the line voltage may be.

Fifth—Consider the fact that if the rheostat is not of sufficient resistance to offer a voltage drop equal to this difference, then if you maintain the same length arc or carbon separation, the amperes flowing through the circuit will be increased.

Sixth—If for any reason you are caught in an emergency with a rheostat which would show signs of glowing at its resistance units or blowing the fuses, you may save yourself by separating the carbons further, thus dissipating some of the excess voltage in a longer arc in which there is no harm or danger, excepting that a flaming arc, due to the greater length may cause an unsteady light, but it is better than no light at all.

Seventh—If for any reason you should have to practice the method of maintaining an arc longer than usual to compensate for lack of voltage drop in the rheostat, then remember to strike the arc very quickly, because at the instant the carbons touch each other when striking the arc, there will be an excessive flow of current, and by separating the carbons suddenly this rush of current will be minimized.

Eighth—Almost all standard make rheostats are constructed of a material which is of such nature that it offers less resistance when it is cold than when heated to the temperature at which it operates. On this account it is a fact, and one which must be remembered, and considered at all times by operators, that when the arc is first struck when the rheostat is cold, it will receive a considerably greater amount of amperes than it will after the rheostat has become fully heated, which generally happens within about five minutes after the arc has been started.

Ninth—Take note of the fact and remember that the usual difference in current flow in a rheostat is from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. in operating hot and cold. The current flow is, in other words, from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. greater during the first few minutes or until the rheostat has become heated.

Tenth—Experience has proven that for a normal projector are with D. C. operating at 25 to 35 amperes the arc voltage should be between 45 and 50 volts.

When the arc is maintained at 45 to 60 amperes the voltage drop should be arcoss the arc between 50 and 55 volts.

When the ampere flow over the arc is between 65 and 100 amperes the arc voltage may be maintained between 55 and 65 volts, depending upon the quality and style of carbon used.

Eleventh—The proper combustion of the carbon is one of the most important points for an operator to remember. Proper combustion is indicated by a clean, soft, sooty looking surface on the upper as well as on the lower carbon points.

The formation of the upper carbon point with D. C. should be such that the crater is perfectly round and slightly hollowed and slanting at an angle of about 45 degrees towards the condensing lenses. The lower carbon should burn to a smooth, round, fairly long point.

Twelfth—If the arc is maintained too long, it will flame excessively which will destroy the upper crater, burning off the front edge, which will distort and spread the crater, thus lowering its efficiency.

On the other hand, if the arc is maintained too short, there will be improper and too slow combustion and as a result the lower carbon will become blunt and will in most instances glaze over, forming a cap of comparatively high resistance. The upper crater with a short arc will be similarly glazed and the appearance of both carbon points, will be instead of a soft, black, a grayish-brown color, mixed with hard, white spots, almost looking like slag from a furnace.

If your carbon points should ever form such caps, remove them with a file immediately and maintain a longer arc. If you cannot prevent the formation of the slag, it is a sign that your line voltage is too low or your rheostat offers too much resistance, and it requires readjustment, as some of the resistance in series with the arc should be cut out, in order to give you a higher arc potential, unless, of course, you are satisfied with a reduced amperage at the arc which will be the result if you separate the carbons further to secure the proper arc voltage drop across the carbon points; but in most instances, this performance will rob you of too much light on the screen and will not be satisfactory.

Apollo Leads in Capital Neighborhood Theatres

Crandell's House on H Street, Northeast, Washington, D. C., Seating 800, Makes Impression by Its Artistic Furnishings and Conveniences for Patrons—Theatre Is Located in One of the City's Most Thriving Living Sections—Exterior Is Elaborate in Design in Ornamental Brick

HARRY M. CRANDALL, president of the Crandall Amusement Company, operating Crandall's theatre, at Ninth and E streets, Northwest, has purchased the interest of the Apollo Amusement Company in the Apollo theatre, on H street, Northeast, taking possession of that house this week.

Washington has a number of motion picture theatres of note, but none are more attractive or better equipped than is the Apollo. Located in one of the most thriving of the city's residential sections, and on the main street of the neighborhood, it has a large population from which to draw for its patronage.

The theatre has a seating capacity of about eight hundred, and is sixty feet wide and one hundred and forty feet deep. It is of first-class construction throughout and was built on plans prepared by Clark C. Jones, a local architect. In planning the building, Mr. Clark paid particular attention to the matter of ventilation, with the result that even in the warmest of weather, he house is very comfortable.

Air for the theatre is drawn into the auditorium in part by large suction fans located within the double roof. In addition, there are four stained glass windows on either side of the house, while over each of the two rear exits and near the floor on both sides at the back of the house are large vents through which air is forced by blowers located behind the screen.

During the summer months sixteen large wall fans are kept constantly in motion. In the winter the auditorium is heated through nine very large radiators.

Patrons Safeguarded Against Fire

The same care was taken with respect to safeguarding the patrons from danger caused by fire or other disaster. The house itself is as near fireproof as modern construction can make it. There are two rear, two side and two front exits, while between the latter is a large entrance which may also be used as an exit in the case of an emergency.

Distributed throughout the auditorium are fifteen fire extinguishers of a type approved by the board of fire underwriters. As a further precaution, the operator's booth has been built out over the lobby and is of sheet iron. A ventilator has been placed above the booth so that no matter how hot a fire might become inside of it, neither smoke nor heat could penetrate into the theatre. There is no entrance to the booth from the inside of the auditorium. Another worthy feature of the booth is an automatic device which closes all projection and look-out openings in the event of fire.

The exterior of the Apollo theatre is very attractive and is quite elaborate in design. The front is of ornamental face brick and stone. The roof extends out exposing the polished roof beams.

The rear of this arch is supported by two pilasters, the bases of which are of marble while the upper sections match the walls in coloring and decoration. The walls are plastered and tinted in a sort of champagne color, with marble baseboards three feet in height. They are paneled with white frames set in relief. The lobby is roofed in cream colored art metal.

The flooring is of stone, ornamented with a border of mosaic blocks with an oblong space at the front with the name Apollo similarly outlined. It is brightly illuminated, there being a large number of small lamps in the central arch and large arcs throughout.

At the right of the lobby is a large room used as the cashier's office and for the storage of posters and other supplies. On the opposite side is the office occupied by the manager.

Comfort for Patrons

The two front exits and the entrance to the auditorium are fitted with double doors of mahogany with glass inserts covered with white lace curtains each ornamented with an Old English "A." Inside everything is roomy and comfortable. The opera chairs with which the house is equipped have been placed far enough apart to insure sufficient space for ingress and egress without annoying those whom may remain seated. The aisles are exceptionally wide and the house can readily be filled and emptied without confusion.

From the ceiling there is suspended a dozen oxidized copper chain hung lamps in inverted bowls which are supplemented on either side by four wall lights supported by ornamental wrought iron fixtures. These furnish a soft light but of sufficient power to enable one to read a newspaper without discomfort.

The screen is a Gold Fibre one, fourteen by eighteen feet in size. At the left of this is the ladies' retiring room, while at the right is the room reserved for the use of male patrons. In front of the screen is the large pipe organ and the station of the orchestra.

The operators' booth is fifteen feet deep and thirty feet wide and houses two Powers' 6-A machines, an electric rewinder and other equipment usually found in a first-class theatre. This booth is said to be the largest in the city. For the convenience of the employees in the booth there is running water. Great care has been taken as to its proper ventilation. The throw is 110 feet.

Gilbert McDonald, who has been in charge of the floor at Crandall's theatre, Ninth and E streets, Northwest, will manage the house for its new owner.

PROPER USE OF RHEOSTATS ESSENTIAL

E. C. N., Burt, Iowa.—I have been using a four H. P. Cushman engine and a 60-volt generator 1.8 K. W. 30 amperes. I use a 5/8 cored carbon on top and 1/2-inch hard carbon in the bottom; I speed my engine to its fullest capacity, turn the field rheostat on about 3/4. I also have a Power's 110-volt rheostat in my booth, before I cut this in any my volt meter shows about 110, but when I turn the handle to the right on the third notch or contact point, it shows about 80 volts, which is the way I run.

Now, my engine is getting old and I am figuring on putting a motor to pull generator. We have 220-volt current here D. C. A party told me that if I took out the Power's rheostat and just put in a kick coil in the line, to take care of the resistance while lighting the carbons, I could run with higher voltage and less amperage, and get the same results and it would not take so much power to turn the generator and there would not be so much current wasted in heat, as there is now with the rheostat. Kindly advise me if you think this would work, and where I can procure a kick coil of this kind.

How large a H. P. motor would it take to run my generator with the kick coil, which is 60-volt, 30 amperes, 1.8 K. W., or if I leave my wiring the way it is and use my Power's rheostat, how many H. P. motor would I need?

I would use 220-volt D. C. from their lines, or do you think I had better do away with the outfit I have altogether and put in a Ft. Wayne Compensarc, but I hate to discard my generator as it is just as good as new. Haw many amperes would the Compensarc draw from the line on 220-volt D. C.?

Ans.—Your 4 H. P. Cushman engine outfit with 60-volt generator to deliver 30 amperes is, I take it, one of their regular 4 H. P. engines and 2 K. W. 60-volt generator equipments.

This outfit, if it is properly installed and used together with the proper controller, should give you splendid satisfaction, and at very low cost.

The carbons which you use, if they are of proper quantity, are the right kind.

You should not use a 110-volt Power's rheostat with your moving picture machine. A special rheostat is required for your arc when you use the generator which you describe, and this rheostat should be so designed that it will pass 30 amperes, when the arc is maintained about 3/8 inch apart with 60 volts reading on your volt meter.

Rheostats of this kind are not regularly on the market and you should consult an authority on rheostats, because the rheostat which you require must be of large capacity and with good regulating features, in fact, your condition is much more exacting than when operating on 110 volts.

There should be no reason for you to put in a motor to drive your generator, but if you wish to do so, a 220-volt motor with a full rated 3 H. P. capacity should be installed and such a motor would take 12 amperes from the line of the electric company, when producing about 60 volts at 30 amperes on your generator.

In my opinion there is no advantage in you making any change whatsoever in your installation, excepting to remove the Power's rheostat and substitute one which will give the right result, with your 60-volt generator.

There would be no advantage to you in putting in a Ft. Wayne Compensarc or any other motor generator, on your 220-volt D. C. system, as you could just as well put in, and at less cost, a 220-volt 3 H. P. motor, and the current consumption would be just about the same as with the Compensarc, and the cost less.

My suggestion, however, is to keep your engine equipment the way it is, install a new special rheostat and maintain the voltage between 60, and at the most 70, and then you will get proper results.

TROUBLE IN STARTING THE ARC

M. L. L., N. Y. City.—I experience trouble with my arc when starting. After the arc has been burning five or ten minutes it gives a nice steady light, but during the first few minutes the arc sputters and blows forward and is very difficult to control. I use about 55 amperes on a D. C. rheostat, and have 3/4-inch cored carbon in top and a 5/8-inch solid carbon in the bottom. I have cleaned all connections and believe everything is in proper condition. What would you suggest?

Ans.—It is a fact with which you may not be familiar that the greater the amperage maintained at the arc, the more sensitive the arc will be, especially at the beginning of burning when the carbons and the rheostat are cold.

There are two reasons why the arc is more sensitive at the beginning. One is, that when the rheostat is cold, the resistance in series is 25 per cent. less than when it is hot. Therefore, the amperes flowing through the arc are considerably greater, in fact 25 per cent. greater than after the arc has been started.

The second reason, or really the result of the first one, is that due to the magnetic blow-out effect which tends to push the arc forward towards the condensing lenses, the magnetic pressure or pushing effect is greater at the arc when the rheostat is cold, due to the higher amperage at the start. After the arc has settled the amperage drops, with increase in temperature of the rheostat.

Another point is, that when the carbons are cold it takes some time to heat the surface of the upper crater and also of the lower point and during those few moments the arc is naturally unstable anyway.

My suggestion to you would be, to cut in slightly more resistance in series with the arc when you first start and then after the arc has been burning maybe two or three minutes, cut out one or two steps on the resistance to bring the amperes up to the desired point.

Another fact with which you may not be familiar is, that for the very best results with amperages over 35 with D. C., it is recommended that you use a cored carbon in top as well as in the bottom.

Another suggestion which I might make is that you use a 7/8-inch cored carbon in the top instead of the 3/4-inch, as this will further assist you in securing quick and proper control of your arc.

UNIVERSAL CAMERA IS A LIGHT, PORTABLE CAMERA SELLING AT REASONABLE PRICE

NEARLY everyone will admit that there has been a market for a light, portable motion picture camera, selling at a reasonable price. The manufacturers of the Universal camera were confident that a machine could be turned out that would duplicate the work of the heavier, more expensive cameras, and that the prestige of older makes would not prevent expert buyers from investigating the new proposition.

They were also sure that a machine could be produced to retail at $250 without sacrificing anything essential for the making of perfect pictures.

After three years of development work, and an expenditure of $25,000, this confidence in the Universal product seems to have

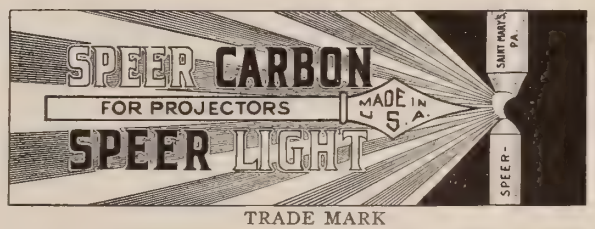
Gentlemen:

I received The Speer carbons—have given them a thorough test and find them superior to any other carbons I have ever used. I find they produce a whiter and steadier light than other brands.

I can see no reason for the Operators buying foreign carbons when they can purchase Speer carbons, which I believe are superior to the other brands.



Yours truly,

been justified, for the company has not yet been able to keep up with the demand.

A representitive of the News was given a demonstration of the Universal camera, and was much impressed with some of its featurse, notably, its simplicity of construction and lightness of weight. All the moving parts are directly connected to one main casting, and are driven by one large master gear, which makes for smooth operation and easy accessibility.

The News representative interviewed several leading Chicago camera experts to get their opinion of the Universal, and their statements were very flattering to the camera. The only adverse criticisms expressed were directed against the absence of a fading attachment, the magazine capacity of only 200 feet of film, and the problematical durability of the aluminum construction.

Most of those consulted, however, considered 200 feet the most practical and convenient length. The general unpopularity of aluminum for camera material has been shown to be unfounded, since all the Universal machines in operation have stood up wonderfully.

The experts were unanimous in their praise of the unique footage indicator, the segmental slide action of the head for vertical tilting, the simplicity of reloading and threading, the superior position of the focus tube, and the attachment for reversing the movement of the film.

Beside supplying the larger producing companies, the Universal camera seems destined to furnish the happy medium between the toy machines and those with a price prohibitive for exhibitors and other independants who want to make their own pictures, and have them of standard excellence.

REGENT, INDIANAPOLIS, LARGEST IN THE CITY, NEARLY FINISHED

THE new Regent, photoplay theatre, which is being built in South Illinois street, Indianapolis, by Bingham, Crose and Cohen, who also are operating the Colonial theatre, in North Illinois street, the largest photoplay theatre in Indianapolis, is nearing completion and the owners hope to open it either the latter part of November or the first part of December.

The Regent will cost about $35,000, and will be one of the finest and best equipped photoplay theatres in Indiana. Two Power's 6-A machines probably will be installed. The screen has been built by F. J. Rembussh, of Shelbyville, Ind.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of more than eight hundred, with a women's retiring room and free telephone service, men's smoking room and office in the basement.

One of the innovations will be an aisle system of lighting, small lights being placed in the aisles in order that persons coming into the theatre in the day time, temporarily blinded by the sudden change of daylight to a darkened theatre, may be able to see their way to seats.

The front is of terra cotta with mosaic tile panels. Between twenty-five hundred and three thousand electric lights will light the front of the theatre, and there also will be a two-way electric sign over the front.

Bingham, Crose and Cohen, have signed contracts, for Fox, Metro, Pathé and V-L-S-E features, and expect to operate one of the best photoplay theatres in Indianapolis.

NEW ORLEANS PIONEER IN SUBURBAN FIELD TO ENLARGE THE ISIS THEATRE

P. A. BLANKENSHIP, the pioneer in the New Orleans suburban field, is about to make extensive additions to his Isis theatre, 1515 Dryades street. Mr. Blankenship is the first man in New Orleans to introduce to that city an attractive theatre away from the business district.

Mr. Blankenship spent a little more than $40,000 on the Isis, in the face of assertions that that was too much to put into a suburban theatre.

"Does it pay?" Mr. Blankenship asks. That is best answered by the fact that the Isis seats 630, turns people away nightly, and is to be enlarged to seat 900. It is the only suburban house embodying all comforts and beauty of design to be found in the business district theatres.

Mr. Blankenship also made a definite announcement in regard to his newest suburban house, which is to be built, he says, in exclusive St. Charles avenue. Such a move was unheard of heretofore, and Mr. Blankenship expects no little trouble in getting the desired location.

St. Charles avenue is a boulevard of beautiful, aristocratic homes; but that makes little difference to him, Mr. Blankenship says. One other theatre is to be built in December, at a location to be decided upon later.

MINNEAPOLIS PATRONAGE INDICATES INCREASE IN PICTURE INTEREST IN ALL LOCALITIES OF CITY

THE film business in Minneapolis still moves. Persons who say the field is crowded should visit any of the theatres this fall between 7 p. m. and 9 p. m. on any day. The crowded conditions have made an increase of three theatres necessary in the Lake street district, an outlying business section.

The Calhoun theatre, opened less than a year ago, has already outgrown its house, though it is the largest on the street and the handsomest of all theatres in Minneapolis. A new theatre is to be built beside it and the wall between will be torn out, giving a total capacity of 1,200 persons. The theatre is at Hennepinn avenue and Lake street, and Prosper Schwie, formerly of the Lyric, is manager.

E. J. Phelps is going to build at Chicago avenue and Lake street a theatre that will seat 1,200 persons. It will cost $75,000. It is to be fireproof and strictly up to date.

Green and Agnew, proprietors of the New Lake, which already has a capacity of six hundred persons, will build a new theatre on adjoining grounds at Nicollet avenue and Lake street. This theatre will seat 1,500 persons and will cost nearly $100,000.

HENRY W. MARCUS DIES IN BUFFALO AFTER LONG ILLNESS

BUFFALO exhibitors and the many friends of Henry W. Marcus are mourning the death of that long time Buffalo musician and theatrical manager. Mr. Marcus died last Monday after a long illness.

At the time of his death he was manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo's largest photoplay house. Prior to accepting this position he was manager of the Lyric and Academy theatres, and was for many years director of Shea's vaudeville house orchestra.

Mr. Marcus was known to most all of the popular stage actors and actresses. When Elsie Janis was in town a few weeks ago she visited the home of Mr. Marcus on learning that he was sick. He was a member of many fraternal organizations.

Both Shea's vaudeville theatre and the Hippodrome orchestra played "Lead Kindly Light," and showed his picture on the screen on the day of his death. Mr. Marcus will be missed by Buffalo. As a musician he was most active a few years ago, when the Buffalo Symphony orchestra was formed, he accepted the chair of concertmeister.

PARK, BOSTON, TO BE UNDER TEMPORARY MANAGEMENT OF A WOMAN

SINCE Paramount withdrew from the management of the Park theatre, Boston, and W. F. Bossner returned to New York, E. L. Knight has managed the theatre for the Park theatre company. Now, after two weeks' service, Mr. Knight has resigned to go on the road in New England with "The Birth of a Nation" for the American Feature Film Company, which controls the New England rights to the Griffith spectacle.

Mr. Knight's place at the Park, it is said, will be taken by a woman connected with the Metro corporation. But it is also reported that her connection with the theatre will only be temporary, until the company can find a suitable man for the place.

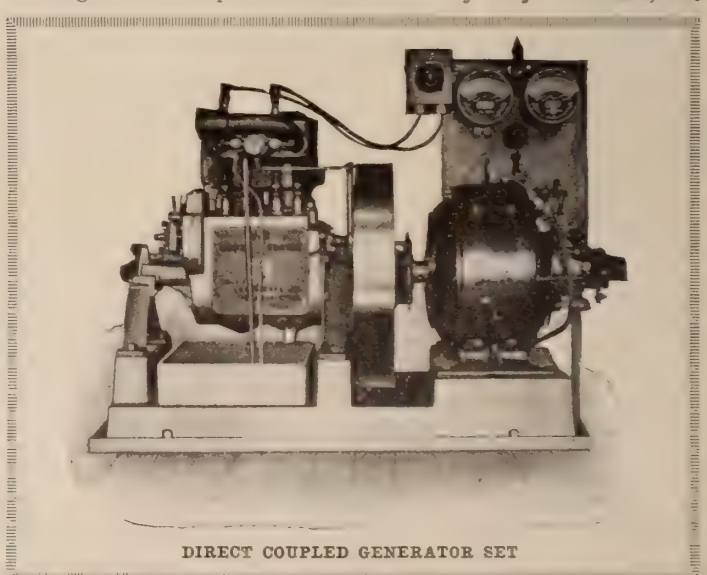
LIGHTING EQUIPMENT MUST BE COMPLETE

OF first importance to the picture show man is his lighting equipment. It is safe to say that more failures in picture shows are directly attributable to poor lights than any other single factor, mismanagement not excepted.

The difference between success and failure is the difference between a clear, bright light and a poor one.

There are three factors of special importance and worthy of careful consideration by picture show men in the selection of his lighting plant and to which he will do well to give the most careful attention.

First, Adaptability.—There are certain special features that are important to insure clear, bright lights. A thoroughly governed engine is best adapted for generator work because of its closer governing qualities. Where there is a flicker in the light from the picture machine, it is due to poor governing quality of the engine. The engine that requires least attention is naturally best suited for this work, which means that the lubricating system is worthy of careful attention. An engine with the splash feed system, with single lubricator on cylinder, is far better than one having numerous lubricators to be watched. An engine with a direct driven water cooling pump, insuring perfect cooling under hard, steady, continuous service, with minimum quantity of water, is highly efficient.



GAS ENGINE AND THEATRE LIGHTING OUTFIT MANUFACTURED BY THE CUSHMAN MOTOR WORKS

An engine with all working parts enclosed is a protection against injury, and avoids an accumulation of dust and dirt on the interior working parts.

Weight Is an Important Factor

Weight is an important factor. An engine extremely light in weight and compact in size is not only easy to handle, but the freight and drayage charges thereon are proportionately small. Therefore, the lighter the engine, combining the features above outlined, the better.

DIRECT COUPLED GENERATOR SET

Second, Reliability.—This is second because all reliable engines are not necessarily peculiarly adapted to the picture show work.

In other words they might not embody all of the features above outlined. On the other hand, no engine that is not thoroughly reliable in every particular is worthy of consideration.

Third, Durability.—Be sure the engine is long-lived. This can best be ascertained by the general reputation of the manufacturers as to the length of time they have been in business, and had engines in actual service.

Combined with the above features regarding engines, the same are applied in general regarding the generator. If possible we recommend buying your plant complete from the engine or generator company. There are a number of reliable firms making a specialty of building these complete combined outfits.

By purchasing your plant assembled complete you get the benefit of an outfit that the manufacturers have thoroughly tried and tested, and into which they have embodied all that experience has taught them in the assembling of the most efficient lighting outfits.

Best results are obtained from the arc at 50 to 52 volts. We accordingly recommend the 60 volt outfit as being by far the most efficient. It is readily seen that there is but a slight loss in the reduction of voltage with the 60 volt outfit.

Leading manufacturers equip their outfits with special type rheostat to enable operator to handle this to advantage. Thirty amperes on arc, 60 volts will produce a picture 14x16 with any throw up to 150 feet, and with the 60 volt outfit this requires 1,800 watts. Where the 110 volt outfit is used it gives 3,300 watts. It is therefore readily apparent that, with the 110 volt outfit, there is a loss of 1,500 watts or 1½ kw.

Three of the leading companies making lighting sets are Cushman Motor Works, Lincoln, Neb.; Chas. A. Strellinger, Detroit, Mich., and Foos Gas Engine Co., Springfield, Ohio.

DECORATORS' SUPPLY COMPANY BRINGS OUT NEW CATALOG

THE 1916 catalog of the Decorators' Supply Company, Archer avenue and Lime street, Chicago, which is now ready for distribution, surpasses in beauty and completeness their previous efforts along this line. The book is 9 x 12 inches with cover of heavy pebbled stock printed in colors.

Its eighty pages contain large half-tone illustrations which show to the smallest details some of the theatres which they have designed and decorated. Several pages are also devoted to cuts of ticket booths, lighting fixtures and miscellaneous decorations for theatres.

It is a very complete and artistic handbook of theatre decoration and construction and contains many ideas that any exhibitor, whether he is planning the construction of a new theatre or contemplating the re-modeling of his old one, may profit by. The catalog is well worth having on file, for its suggestions are of the greatest possible value.

"CLANSMAN," ENTERING ITS TWENTY-SIXTH WEEK AT 'FRISCO, ESTABLISHES LONG RUN RECORD

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

"THE Birth of a Nation," or the "Clansman," as it is popularly known here, has entered upon its twenty-sixth week in San Francisco, establishing a long run record for this city that will probably not be surpassed in the near future. This film was first shown at the Alcazar theatre and was later transferred to the Cort theatre, when the former was required for stock purposes. For several weeks it has been shown at the Savoy theatre on McAllister street, where it now is. This house is just a little way out of the established amusement district, and during the past four or five years has been dark most of the time, it having been found impossible to make a success of it with other forms of attractions.

"The Birth of a Nation" is being handled in San Francisco by Will C. Wheeler, assisted by Thomas W. Johnson, the press representative being W. E. Keefe. The latter has done some splendid publicity work, especially in connection with the attempt at censorship made at Oakland, a suburban city across the bay. The management of the film scored a decisive victory in this instance, losing but one performance.

A GOOD PROJECTOR + A POOR SCREEN

Why buy an expensive Projection Machine and destroy the picture light that it is possible to get out of this machine by using a poor screen? A good projector is essential, but a good screen is an ABSOLUTE NECESSITY!

"MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREENS" are made to reflect, without glaring, the PERFECT light in which the picture was taken. They give the picture the beautiful "Tone Value" which is completely lost on poor screens.

"Minusa" screens are different from all other screens because they are "BUILT BY BRAINS." They are not kept in stock by the "bolt," but each screen is scientifically built to fit the particular theatre in which it is installed.

In spite of the wonderful "Picture Light" you get from a "Minusa" they do not cause EYE STRAIN—the one big complaint from the show going public.

Because of the many reasons set forth above the "Minusa" is the screen that will MAKE ITS PRESENCE FELT IN THE BOX OFFICE.

Light—Then More Light! Only Rule for Exteriors

No Theatre Can Have Too Much Illumination on the Front, on the Roof and Sides for Publicity Purposes—It Draws Patrons with the Same Power That a Candle Attracts Moths—Architectural Treatment Often Decides the Kind of Lamps and Their Arrangement

THE designing of the theatre so that it will be most effective at night, and the various kinds of illumination are interesting subjects for the reader to review. Whether the play-house be used for dramatic performances or for picture plays, there is no doubt but that plenty of light for the exterior is proper and much needed.

Light has at all times been a great moral force. When the streets of London were brought from total darkness to but dim illumination by a system of small gas lights, which we too still remember in our own streets, there was an immediate striking reduction in crime. The like is experienced in each city or town, with each improvement in illumination. We may therefore conclude that plenty of light to the front of all theatres has, firstly, a strong moral influence; secondly, it has a great drawing power, as the moth seeks the flame, so are people attracted by brilliant illumination.

Architectural treatment will often dictate what kind of lamps and arcs that might be used, and what disposition shall be made of them. If the illumination can be made an integral part of the design, if it can be made to appear as if it grew out of the design instead of having it simply planted on the building, a better and more consistent illumination will be obtained.

Arc Lamps Becoming Obsolete

The arc lamp is gradually going out of favor, the constant necessary replacement of the carbons, the cleaning of the lamps, and the only too often expensive repair of the same, have been the causes of their gradual rejection. They have an overpowering effect of placing too much light at the points of their location. The lamp of the day is the new Type C Mazda, also known as the nitrogen lamp. They may be purchased in various sizes from one hundred watts up to one thousand watts, and over.

They consume much less current per candle power than the old tungsten, and while costly to install, they are highly economical in the end.

Having provided a brilliant light on the exterior, much care and experimenting must be undertaken in each individual installation, that there shall be a gradual gradation of light from the brilliant exterior to the subdued light of the interior. Nothing is so distressing as too sudden a change. Where there is but a short distance from the exterior to the interior of the theatre little can be done to make an effective change, but in such cases screens must be erected so that the glare of the exterior will not effect adversely the dimness of the interior. The interior of all houses must be so wired and controlled that the light system may be correct for all occasions.

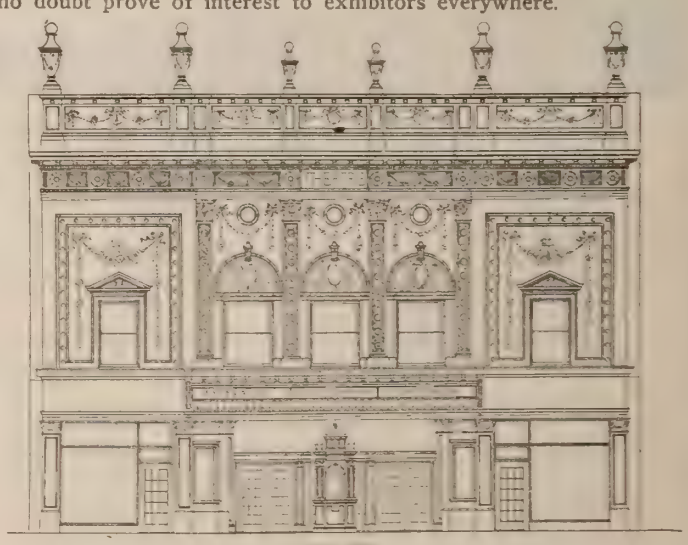
The illumination must be arranged for brilliancy, for stage productions for pictures. To dwell upon these subjects in detail would extend our article further than space will permit. We will say a word about the house when the pictures are running.

Dimming Lamps for Interior Use

It is absolutely essential that no ray of light shall reach the screen, other than that projected by the machines. Every ray of light, no matter how far away, and no matter of what color, will affect the picture adversely. The writer does not mean to advocate a dark house. To the contrary the house must be as light as possible, but all lamps must be so shaded that their rays will not reach the screen.

To dim the lamps used in the interior, dip them while hot in amber liquid made for that purpose, and purchased from any electrical supply house.

Likewise keep the picture booth as dark as possible. Only too often pictures are dimmed by indirect reflection of light from the booth through the various openings.



Aisles, stairways and exits must be well lighted. Since there is always an existent danger of a temporary interruption in the electrical service, it is very well to provide gas for such emergencies. These gas lights should burn at all times that they be effective in time of need. The error should not be made to wait until the time comes when the house is dark and then light them.

Many houses are bothered by the loss of electric lamps through theft in toilets and places where help are not in constant attendance. This annoyance can be overcome by the installation of a lamp socket that can be locked. They are inexpensive and easily installed.

OMAHA TO ADD PICTURE THEATRE TO ITS BIG LIST

PLANS have been completed for a highly modern, expensive motion picture house at 1412-14-16 Farnam street, Omaha, Neb. A Omaha syndicate is backing the project. Building will begin on March 1, and the opening will be several months later.

An idea of the building, with the drawing of the front plan, will no doubt prove of interest to exhibitors everywhere.

Architect Harry Lawrie, before proceeding with the design, took an extended Eastern trip to view theatre buildings and get ideas. Beauty, comfort and convenience were considered primarily in the plans. Safety was ensured by conforming with the rigid ordinance restrictions of the city.

Vestibules on the Farnam street front, with a large foyer immediately behind, is an arrangement to accommodate a large number of people after admission has been purchased at the ticket office. Generous retiring rooms for women and men is a new idea.

A ventilating system for the propulsion of fresh filtered air, cooled in summer and warmed in winter, is provided, with a separate system to extract the foul air from the building. In addition, large ventilators in the ceiling will clear out the superheated air.

Sight lines have been given careful consideration, and not one person in the entire seating will have an obstructed view. The seating plan is based upon lines of ancient Greek theatres.

The exterior, as shown in the drawing, is designed in Italian Renaissance, and the entire front will be of terra cotta or a light cream color. The ornaments will be in pale pinks, sage greens and delicate blues. A splendid system of illumination is planned.

UNITS AND STANDARDS OF LIGHT

THE intensity of a source of light is expressed in terms of that of some specified unit or standard of reference. As yet there is not a standard satisfactory for all purposes—each country has its standards for comparisons.

The British standard candle is a spermaceti candle seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and weighing one-sixth of a pound, burning at the rate of 120 grams per hour.

In case the burning rate does not equal 120 grams per hour and is within the limits of 114-126 grams per hour, the value of its light is determined by simple proportions. It is assumed the intensity of the candle light varies in proportion to the rate of consumption of sperm. Despite its many defects it is extensively used and is also the standard for the United States and many other countries.

Another lamp used as a standard and is of modern design is the Harcourt 10 candle pentane standard. Its source of fuel is a gas composed of a mixture of pentane vapor and air. The pentane is a light distillate of petroleum passing over at a temperature between 25 to 40 degrees C.

The lamp is to be used in a room free from draughts. The flame burned is an Argand type of burner. A metal chimney is accurately adjusted so that its base is 47 mm. above the top of the burner, and it is only the portion of the flame which comes between the burner and base of the chimney that is used with the photometer. The flame has to be also adjusted to an exact height observed through a mica window in the metal chimney.

The Carcel lamp is the principal French standard. It burns a purified colza oil at a rate of 42 grams per hour, the flame being accurately adjusted to a height of 40 mm. When burned at this rate of oil consumption, it has been proven the light is in direct proportion to the oil burned.

Germany's legal standard is the Hefner unit, which is the light given by the Hefner-Alteneck amylacetate lamp. Its intensity is about 10 per cent, less than the English candle and its normal flame is 40 mm. high.

It is very uniform and reproducible, and owing to the fact that lamps of certified value can be so readily obtained, it has an extensive use not only in Germany but elsewhere. The color is somewhat against this unit, being a distinctly reddish-orange and for a working standard is a rather serious objection.

Even with this fault it is probably the best primary standard that we have, as it can be reproduced accurately to a most unusual degree.

DIRECT VERSUS ALTERNATING CURRENT

THE development of the moving picture business in the last few years has made necessary a careful study of the electrical equipment for the projection of the pictures. The novelty of movement in the pictures, which was originally the principal drawing card, was short lived and pictures having greater dramatic interest were soon required.

The light from the so-called three, four, or five thousand candle-power alternating current arc lamps was found inadequate, and this, together with the hissing, flickering, and dark-spots, or ghosts, on the screen rendered alternating current used in these lamps unadapted to moving picture machines.

Great improvements were then had by the introduction of the static economizers and these are still used, but, not in the higher priced theatres as the standard of projection for the four and five-reel feaure films require a better source of light.

In these films the facial expressions have to carry the theme of the play and any flickering or interruption of the light "kills" these minute movements. Comedy films, where action of the figures carry the ideas, are not so exacting.

For these reasons managers, whose theatres were supplied with alternating current, began making inquiries as to the best method of changing alternating to direct current.

As 60 amperes is the maximum current that can be safely used on most of the arc lamps, alternating current is primarily not considered good for projection in any way.

A comparison of the following methods will show the great superiority of using direct current from the basis of energy consumed and greater candle-power obtained. It is regretable the quality of the light from the direct current cannot be shown in this table of comparative results from the two sources of energy.

Comparison of candle-powers obtained from alternating and direct current circuits with a given current consumption:

Arc Amperes	Candle-power Using A-C.	Candle-power Using D-C.

The Empire theatre in Providence, under Keith direction, has been remodelled and reopened with a feature film program.

TEXAS

Work will start immediately on a new modern motion picture house in Denison. The new theatre will be known as the Star, and will be under the management of L. M. Ridout, manager of the present Star theatre. The plans are that the building now occupied by the Star, and the one just east of it, shall be entirely remodeled and a thoroughly modern show house made of the two buildings which constitute the L. B. Moore block.

Cuero has another moving picture theatre. S. C. Dodge, of Waxahachie, is proprietor and manager.

MILLION DOLLAR THEATRE FOR SAN FRANCISCO ON MASON AND ELLIS STREETS

WORK is being rushed by Architect B. G. McDougall on the plans for a theatre to be erected at once by the Ellis Street Improvement Company on the former W. B. Bourn site, at Ellis and Mason streets, San Francisco.

This building and site will represent an investment of one million dollars, and the theatre will be the largest, as well as among the finest in that city. The site has a frontage on Ellis street of eighty-seven and a half feet. The entrance will be on this side. The Mason street frontage is one hundred and eighty-seven and a half feet, and there is an abutting lot in the rear which will provide for a stage.

The seating capacity of the house will be at least three thousand, divided between the main floor and a spacious balcony. The design is in the Florentine treatment of the Italian Renaissance, and ornate decorations are planned for the entrance lobby and foyer and the interior.

The new theatre is being planned for vaudeville and moving pictures, and full attention will be given to the arrangements for the showing of the latter, as it is desired by the owners to be in readiness to conduct the house as an exclusive moving picture theatre at any time such a step might seem desirable.

In fact, predictions are being freely made among San Francisco amusement experts that pictures will be shown exclusively within a comparatively short time following the completion of the house. A large cafe is to be fitted up in the basement of the new building and there will likewise be several small stores.

DIVINE LEASES LYCEUM, FORMERLY HOME OF MELODRAMA, IN INDIANAPOLIS

PRESIDENT E. C. DIVINE, of the Strand Theatre Company, Indianapolis and Chicago, which has leased the Lyceum theatre, formerly the home of melodrama in Indianapolis, which is to be remodeled as a photoplay theatre, says he is determined that the New Strand in Indianapolis shall surpass in decorations, appointments and details of luxury and comfort even its predecessors in New York and Chicago.

The stage setting will present a classic garden effect, according to Mr. Divine. In the center of the bower will sit the largest theatre orchestra ever assembled in Indianapolis, according to present plans. Overhead will stand a giant frame of massive design, within which velvet curtains will conceal the picture screen when it is not in use.

The stage lighting effects will be in harmony with the color scheme. "All in all," says Mr. Divine, "it will spell the end of irritations common to ordinary moving picture theatres. There will be nothing to mar the complete enjoyment of the spectator or to divert the wrapt attention to the photodramas and music.

"One feature of Strand management is especially unique. During the playing of overtures, or when a concert soloist occupies the center of the stage, patrons will not be permitted to walk down the aisles to their seats. Those not already seated will have to remain in the foyer until the musical number is finished. In this way no disturbance or annoyance will occur to distract the audience."

E. Q. Cordner, managing director of the company, says that the new theatre will be manned by the most polite and courteous box office men, ushers and other attendants that ever have graced a playhouse appealing to high class playgoers.

APPLEBY TAKES OVER MANAGEMENT OF STRAND, HAVERHILL, MASS.

GEORGE I. APPLEBY, who successfully managed the Empire theatre in Portland, Maine, for the past year, recently resigned to assume the management of the Strand theatre in Haverhill, Mass., where he has taken up his duties.

Mr. Appleby was formerly of the Portland office of the Mutual Film Corporation. He made many friends in Portland who wish him the best of success. While the Empire was under his management he secured for Portland theatregoers some of the best known photoplay masterpieces.

He is known as one of the most efficient film men in New England, and before going to Portland managed the Star theatre, Boston. The name of his successor has not yet been announced.

The One-Man Orchestra Possesses Many Advantages

By E. F. LICOME

A Mechanical Device Capable of Producing a Wide Range of Tones in Imitation of the Principal Instruments Takes the Place of Musicians, Rendering the Music with the Pictures at a Greatly Reduced Cost to a Manager Without Offending Critical Ears Accustomed to the Human Orchestra

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The article entitled "The One-Man Orchestra Possesses Many Advantages" was sent to MOTION PICTURE NEWS by Mr. Licome in response to a request for a statement of the points, as he sees them, recommending the one-man orchestra to the attention of exhibitors. The one-man orchestra is a factor in the picture theatre. The side of the instrument against the human orchestra is here presented with the hope by the editor of stimulating discussion on all matters pertaining to the subject of Music and the Picture.

Most of the points advocated in this article are well taken. The faults in picture playing cited by Mr. Licome will, it is hoped, be of assistance to the player in eradicating errors. Mr. Licome is evidently very well informed of the possibilities of the one-man orchestra. That the lone piano and the piano and the drum are no longer factors in the picture theatre has long been a conceded fact.

I SHOULD be very sorry were I to be blamed for advocating the original and human in music. This does not mean exclusively anything to the picture theatre, for as now, there ever will be among the thousands of existing theatres those who will find it impossible for many reasons to obtain good human musical results.

Music for pictures has always been more or less of a problem to the exhibitor; that is, if he thinks enough about it. It is generally agreed among exhibitors that a piano accompaniment or even a piano and drums with pictures is a thing of the past and particularly in the newer houses. The piano is not really capable of doing the work required because it does not give the proper atmosphere to the picture and as it so frequently happens the pianist many times plays the piano without regarding the action on the screen; because every piano player has not sufficient repertoire to change the mood of his playing to fit the photoplay as it is unfolded on the screen.

In the average picture house it has been found impractical to engage an orchestra of four or five men mainly on account of the expense, and also because they cannot in any possible way follow the pictures to give the proper atmosphere and the necessary emphasis, and also to meet the changing moods of the play.

Valuable in Hands of Experienced Player

If an orchestra is used you will notice that they frequently have to stop to change music and this is disconcerting to the average audience, and is almost as bad as a broken film. When the continuity of the picture is interrupted in any way, it takes a few minutes to get the audience interested again.

On account of these various circumstances there was a want for an instrument which could be controlled by one man who could give all the effects of an orchestra and also church organ tone, chimes, vox-humana, and other necessary tonal qualities which are needed to accompany a picture. Then was introduced the one-man orchestra.

Upon hearing one of these instruments one can readily understand how valuable they should prove in the hands of a competent player, and enhance the value of any photoplay. The player has absolute control of the various instruments and can make changes and combinations instantaneously to fit the picture. He can also play violins, flute, cornet, and cello solos with a piano accompaniment.

He can play church organ and chimes and he can also imitate the human voice with the vox-humana pipes. The vox-humana pipes are very necessary in pathetic scenes and when accompanied by the flute are very valuable in sentimental situations, because it delivers a certain message to the sense of hearing and when combined with the sense of sight the picture makes a performance and entertainment which is very near perfection.

On account of the large variety of instruments represented in this one instrument, the audience receives the benefit of a greater variety of musical tones and is not limited to four different qualities of music represented by an orchestra of four musicians. In this way it has its great advantage because there is not a continual sameness of the musical combinations.

When necessary for any martial situation, the drums, cymbals and piccolos are available. This immediately gives character to the picture which a pianist or an orchestra of four men could not give. An orchestra at its best can really only play tunes while a one-man orchestra can improvise suitable music to fit the photoplay.

The player upon one of these instruments plays continually without any stops or breaks while the subject is on the screen. In this way it is a distinct advantage over an orchestra. In comedies it is customary for the manager to allow a roll to be put on so the pianist gets a rest. When the roll is used all the effects and changes are made by the roll itself without the assistance of any player.

These instruments are a novelty and an attraction to any audience, for we know of certain houses that have increased their receipts as high as 50 per cent. We know of other unsuccessful houses that have been made successful through the use of one of these instruments.

Range of Sounds in One-Man Orchestra

The variety of sounds produced by a one-man orchestra exceeds that of any four or five-piece orchestra. There are instrumentally in its range legitimate orchestral reproductions of the violins, cellos, double bass, flute, cornet, snare, bass and kettle drums, cymbals, triangle, tambourine, castanet, xylophone and more effective than all is the exquisite vox-humana a series of pipes that come as near to imitating the human voice as is possible with a mechanical instrument of today.

In addition there is the effect of church organ; chimes and many other effects can be secured by combining the instru-

THE KIMBALL SOLO PLAYER

The Scottish Rite Temple of the Masonic Order in Washington, dedicated October 18-19, is one of the most notable edifices of the century.

The ritual is accompanied by a Kimball Organ of beautiful design, which, in addition to the usual keyboards, is equipped with the Kimball Solo Player.

This Kimball Solo Player, also applied to the instruments in Marcus Loew's New York Orpheum and Boston Globe Theatres, the Regent in Philadelphia and other Kimball theatre organs, plays solo and accompaniment throughout the compass of manuals and pedals, with or without automatic registration and expression, as desired.

"These organs have an improved automatic player equipment which is the last word in organ perfection." Motion Picture News.

ments in many ways. This instrument must be played by a pianist who has experience in motion picture playing. It is not possible for any piano player to sit down and play this instrument with satisfactory results.

The prospective player should familiarize himself with the instrument for at least a week. We know of one large corporation that has a regular incorporated school and makes a specialty of training players to play this instrument and they always want good piano players to fill renumerative positions.

These instruments are not very costly for the average picture house and they are certainly less expensive than musicians, and after the instrument is paid for it becomes a valuable asset to the theatre and thereafter the music does not cost very much. It reduces the constant overhead expense to the manager because it is really an investment and not a weekly outlay of money which is paid on anything of tangible value.

In pointing out these various effects of the one-man orchestra it must be quite easy for the exhibitor to realize that an instrument of this kind installed in a motion picture theatre would be the means of attracting considerable patronage and lovers of good music to say nothing of the wonderful help it would be to your pictures and the tremendous saving in salaries to musicians which can be applied to paying for the instrument.

The exhibitor who is first to introduce such an instrument into his theatre is the one who is going to have the most popular house in a very short time.

In purchasing one of these instruments the exhibitor should be careful that he gets the proper sized instrument for his place. In many instances a man purchases an instrument which is too small for his theatre, not taking into consideration the fact that the clothes of the audience, the draperies, hangings and carpets absorb tone, and when he hears the instrument played in the warerooms he might think it is loud enough, but he does not know much about acoustics.

The manufacturers of these instruments are always willing to advise a purchaser what instrument would be most suitable for his theatre and they are never anxious to oversell a customer because it results in the exhibitor being dissatisfied and not being able to meet his obligations.

WASHINGTON, D. C., FINDS THAT FILM PATRONS WANT GOOD MUSIC

THE mad rush for one show following the other is decreasing in Washington, D. C., and in the larger and more popular houses has disappeared entirely.

The chief cause of this is music—good music—and the patrons want to enjoy this music.

Several of the residential houses, as the Apollo, Lyric, Savoy, Princess, and Liberty use orchestras of varying sizes and these open each show with an overture. Started as an experiment and thrust upon the audience, the patrons took kindly to the interruption in projection.

It furnished a relaxation, gave friends an opportunity to exchange a few words, and offered time to note what sort of house they were in.

Tom Moore inaugurated incidental solos by the leaders of the orchestras in his large theatres, John Glick and Daniel Breeskin, both artistic violinists. Other exhibitors have found this worth imitating.

The organ of Crandall's forms a distinctive attraction and is especially effective in religious scenes.

At Loew's Columbia, while the full orchestra plays its overture the stage is effectively lighted, disclosing its wonderful Japanese garden and gradually the lights fade away as the orchestra completes its selection.

At Crandall's Apollo theatre, a different soloist from the orchestra is heard. These include Earl Church, violin; Leonard Lenhart, cello; and Ralph Garren, piano. The patrons show their appreciation of this good music. The Princess, also a residential house, is using Gerda Christiani, violinist, very effectively. A great deal more money is being spent on music here than formerly, but the exhibitors contend that the return is worth the outlay. The Leader, the Empress, Penn Gardens, the Washington, the Regent and the Olympic make a specialty of their music.

Washington exhibitors are using music most effectively as a delightful relaxation as overtures, much the same as the "legitimate" theatres use their orchestras.

22.	Waltz (Leg) XX	"Minor and Major" (Ricordi and Company)	To End.

Note.—In music plots each reel of film is divided into 10 units of time, each unit denoted by one X representing about 1½ minutes. Consequently when a number is designated by XX it plays about 3 minutes, XXXX about 6 minutes, etc. When no X appears after musical description it means that the number is very short and does not play a minute or more.

When cues to stop numbers are in quotation "———" it means that the cue is reading matter or subtitle. All other cues are action on screen. All segues should be made quietly and clean. When quick segues or abrupt stops are necessary it will be mentioned in cues or notes. When the time of each 1,000 feet of film is less than 15 minutes there will appear less than 10 X's in each reel. To get the correct time of projection for each reel, multiply the number of X's appearing in each reel by 1½.

Effect Notes.—During Nos. 9 and 10 thunder and wind imitations are positively necessary. During 13, 16 and 19 use tom-tom regardless of what is written in part, as this is the most effective way of creating the required character. During No. 17 the clashing of fighting clubs is very good. During the playing of No. 20 a cannon shot is very good.

Music Notes.—This picture affords wonderful opportunities for good musical effects. The storm scene, Nos. 9, 10 and 11, will be very effective. The scene is big and will help your music equally as much as your music will help the scene. Especial care should be taken to get good character effects for Nos. 13-16 and 19.

Nos. 1-8 and 21 should be slow numbers having a positive romantic appeal. No. 5 should be a medium slow number with a light romantic appeal. No. 2 should be a 2/4 intermezzo played lively. Nos. 3-14 and 17, galops with a hurried effect. No. 14 should have an uncommon theme. Nos. 4 and 6 should be concert waltzes with short introductions. Nos. 7, 9, 10 and 11 are dramatic numbers, as are published by the Photo Play Music Co., 1520 Broadway, New York City.

Nos. 12 and 15 should be slow waltzes known as oriental. They should be in minor key throughout. No. 8 must be a very slow heavy number, having a dramatic appeal and should have no positive sweet appeal. It must not detract from the character. A number with continued modulations, not staying in one definite key, is the best. Minor keys are good. No. 20 should be the national song "Hail Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," anticipating the United States battleship on screen. No. 22 should be a slow legato waltz, lightening slightly at end.

Mr. Wm. Smith,
Famous Players Exchange,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:

Cannot miss this opportunity to write the phenomenal success of George Beban's photo-drama production "AN ALIEN."

It was exhibited at the Stanley theatre all last week to enthusiastic audiences and I feel sure that anytone exploiting this picture properly will do well with it, as it received from the Philadelphia newspaper critics a remarkably favorable review.

Yours truly,

SVM:G

Here are a Few Excerpts from the Philadelphia Dailies:

Telegraph:—George Beban can make them laugh and George Beban can also make them cry—and then make them laugh again. If you doubt it, go and see "An Alien," in which the same Mr. Beban is appearing at the Stanley the current week. When Mr. Beban is not playing on the emotions with vividly expressing pantomime, Mr. Ince has provided a series of splendid pictures. The result is a film that fixes attention without wearying it, and is a splendid example of the skill of both artist and director.

Press:—George Beban, in "An Alien," is one of the masterly photoplays which demonstrate the art of the screen drama at its best. It interested the capacity audiences at the Stanley in its human story and moved them alike to smiles and tears with its kindly humor and sincere pathos. Mr. Beban has long been recognized as the most artistic delineator of Italian character on the American stage.

Record:—Beban is a fine character actor whose work in Italian roles is especially inspired. In this instance he manages by an excellence in pantomime to suggest the griefs and joys of the alien and to give full value to a story that is of strong human interest.

Inquirer:—Affording him even greater sway in his masterful picturization than he enjoyed in "The Sign of the Rose," George Beban yesterday scored a new success with the presentation of "An Alien" at the Stanley. The play is already familiar to many Philadelphians and with which Mr. Beban's name is always linked. The film is bound to be a great success.

Ledger:—If you liked George Beban in his famous vaudeville sketch, "The Sign of the Rose," you will care even more for him in the photoplay version which has been made of the story and which was placed on view for a week yesterday at the Stanley Theatre, under the title "An Alien."

Bulletin:—"An Alien," elaborated and made into a film play from "The Sign of the Rose," once used by George Beban as a vaudeville sketch, was given at the Stanley with Mr. Beban in the same role on the screen as he played on the speaking stage. Mr. Beban visualizes the character of the unfortunate Italian quite as potently as he acted it in vaudeville. But the purely melodramatic incidents fade before those simple scenes which depend upon the art of Mr. Beban. The play is acted and photographed in a manner that almost sets a new standard for the motion drama.

Evening Ledger:—In acting, lighting, production, in the whole technical side of film art, "An Alien" is well-nigh perfect. A strong cast, including the charming child-actress, Thelma Salter, seen last week at the Chestnut Street Opera House, is set off against admirably realistic scenery. Mr. Beban is easily the star of the production, outshining cast and production by the vivid and vital play of sensitive Italian features.

North American:—"The Sign of the Rose" is successfully given in motion pictures in "An Alien," which featured the program at the Stanley Theatre yesterday. George Beban takes the principal role and is capably supported. The photography of the film is excellent and the settings are as picturesque as the most ardent motion-picture devotee could desire. Beban himself contributes another striking portrait of the Italian type.

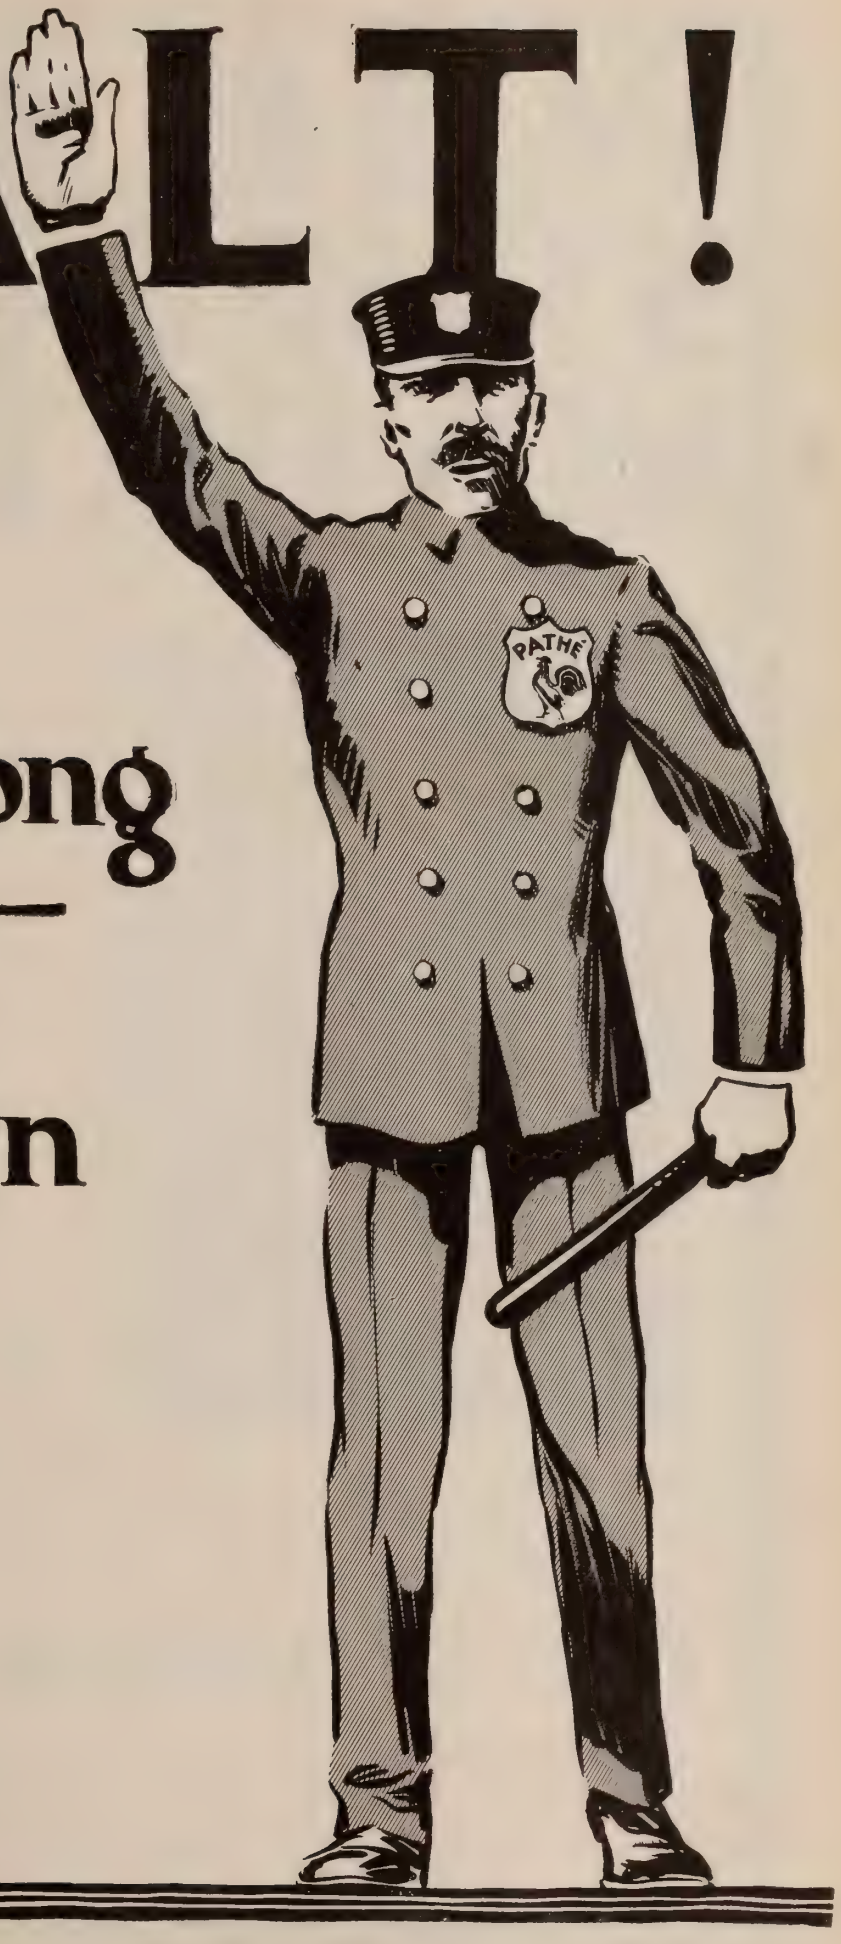
Dear Sir:-



I had the pleasure recently of seeing at your theatre Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen." I write to say that it was the best picture play that I have ever seen. It was simply superb, and while your admission was only .25¢ I said to you, upon leaving the theatre, that it was well worth one dollar to see such a play.

Very truly yours,

It has been with great interest that I have watched the Metro program. Not only have I noticed splendid improvement in each release, but the great satisfaction it has given the Exhibitors throughout this territory. It has given them a uniform program; one of a steady meritorious quality.

I consider the Metro Program a strong competitor for first honors..

AN APPEAL FOR FAIR PLAY

Because of letters of protest received from numerous exhibitors who secured from so-called film exchanges the conglomerations entitled Charles Chaplin in "The Mix-Up," "Ambition" and "The Review," Mr. Chaplin again wishes to warn the public in general and the exhibitors in particular that neither he nor the Essanay company is responsible for these patched-up films.

The films in question are not complete Chaplin pictures. They are merely a rehash of some of the earlier efforts in which Mr. Chaplin did appear. Fragmentary bits have been strung together—without regard to sequence or story.

Mr. Chaplin asks for fair play.

A great injustice is done to Mr. Chaplin, who undoubtedly is the central figure about which these films revolve. Charles Chaplin—as the reputable exchanges know—is producing exclusively for ESSANAY complete pictures that merit the keen popularity they receive everywhere.

ESSANAY asks fair play. Not alone for Mr. Chaplin—who undoubtedly is greatly injured—but for the great public which is anxiously awaiting every new ESSANAY-CHAPLIN release.

If you are an exhibitor, certainly you do not want to delude your patrons. Only in fair play can you derive profits. Just remember that you can only fool the people once.

The Story of a Little Girl With a Heartache

"Go away, little Ragamuffin!"

With hands thrust deep in ragged pockets, his face blazing resentment, the boy turned from the hard-faced woman.

But a pair of blues eyes followed him wistfully.

Day after day a golden-haired girl looked longingly after the boy she might not play with.

Years passed and her heart ached with a great yearning.

One day the Golden Path her mother had sought for her, opened. For a rich man had noticed her beauty.

The little girl faced the glaring lights of the city and they blinded her eyes. She was pitifully alone and her footsteps wavered when the man offered her all the beautiful things that wealth could buy.

But the "little Ragamuffin" had watched and waited. He knew the perils of the Golden Path and he placed his arm about her protectingly. Then he whispered that he loved her, and she was happy at last.

This fascinating story is portrayed in Essanay's five act photodrama, "A Daughter of the City," written by H. S. Sheldon and directed by E. H. Calvert. It is a powerful drama, pointing out a great present-day evil.

Marguerite Clayton is the little "Daughter of the City" and E. H. Calvert represents the vampire of society.

Out of the Fog

IT is frequently stated that the picture business is in a chaotic state.

Chaotic is a wrong term, since it implies utter disorganization. Unorganization is a much truer expression, and rather than stating the industry is in chaos, let us say it is in a fog.

THE fog is rather comprehensive in its envelopment of the field; but out of it some very broad and steady shafts of light are shining, so steadily in fact that pretty soon they are going to dispel a good deal of the general mist.

These shafts of light emanate from those producers and distributors who have picture policies, first of all, definite policies of production and then in addition definite policies of, distribution, advertising and service—definite in that they are all directed toward one and the same end, namely of reaching a certain percentage of the public with a certain kind of pictures.

TAKE any successful producer today and you will find him a specialist, or fast becoming one. He is not producing merely pictures. He is not producing numerous kinds of pictures. He is producing a certain kind of standard of pictures better than any one else is producing them. You know his kind of pictures by his name. His script policy, his studio policy, his every unit of organization and effort is centered upon this specialization and standardization of his product.

And so his light is shining out of the fog—and toward greater success.

THE fog of today is the fog of heterogeneous production and therefore heterogeneous distribution.

You cannot make one kind of a picture with one hand and another with another hand and do them so well as the single-handed specialist. Neither can you distribute successfully when you go before the exhibitor with pictures that actually sell against each other, let alone against the same kind of pictures which some one else is producing better.

THE exhibitor today doesn't want quantities of pictures. He wants specialties—big and little.

He wants fewer pictures of a definite kind and quality, and not a hodge-podge quantity of hodge-podge quality.

He can afford to pay for these fewer, better pictures because he can advertise them and run them from two days to two weeks, dependent upon the drawing power of the picture and his population.

He cannot afford to pay for quantity pictures, and he should not be expected to.

Specialization in production is going to result in specialization in theatres, and that is what the exhibitor wants and what the public wants.

YOU and I will want to go tonight to some picture theatre which exhibits a certain kind of pictures, the kind that meets our particular taste. We don't want to take pot-luck. We want to know in advance just as we know our newspapers, our magazines, our restaurants.

Just so that particular theatre will acquire through the definite standard and kind of its pictures a definite reputation and a clientele upon which it can base its business and its business cost.

IT is not to be expected that all theatres will show exceedingly artistic pictures, and that all producers should make these very artistic pictures.

Just because we prefer Thackeray as an author is no reason why we should condemn the Laura Jean Libby novel over which the servant girl weeps. Some very successful publishers are engaged today in turning out what we term "cheap" literature. But they specialize in this particular field.

THE point is simply this: if the picture producer decides to turn out cheap pictures, all well and good. But if so, let him specialize. Let him be content to appeal to the theatre audiences who really want this grade of pictures. Let him not expect to turn out through the same producing and distributing organization classics and cheap comics. It can't be done. It is illogical. In the production and in the selling of such diverse pictures the two standards fight with and disable each other.

Let him not expect ever to distribute cheap pictures to the theatres which appeal to intelligent people. They simply will not tolerate them.

THE time has utterly gone by when any one can produce mere pictures and expect liberal distribution to result just because they are pictures. Distribution is primarily dependent upon the kind and quality of pictures, and it is high time to differentiate production and distribution accordingly.

Specialization is the order of the day.

Vol. XII November 27, 1915. No. 21

Why Some Exhibitors Believe Censorship Is Necessary

"WE exhibitors don't want censorship. But we do not feel that we can get along without it."

This was the somewhat startling statement made, a day or two ago, by an exhibitor who is entitled to be regarded as the spokesman for the exhibitors of his vicinity.

CENSORSHIP, this exhibitor believes, has cleared the motion picture field, to a great degree, of the type of states-right man who dealt in ultra-lurid and super-sensational pictures. More particularly, it has kept them out of this exhibitor's state and city.

And his endorsement of censorship takes this form—that if censorship were abolished in his state, the sensational picture dealers would swarm in, his struggling competitors would book them, the public would demand their withdrawal, the police would descend on these houses, the newspapers would feature such raids—and his own house would suffer, as the innocent are supposed to suffer with the guilty.

NOTE very carefully the chain of reasoning. No matter how clean this exhibitor might keep his own house and screen, no matter how dignified and refined a theatre he might conduct—all this would count for nothing, would not save him from public damnation, because some unprincipled exhibitor, in another part of the city, chose to conduct his house in such a manner as to precipitate a clash with the authorities!

CONSIDER for a moment what that means and, with it, consider this:

A few days ago, the Commissioner of Licenses of the City of New York revoked the licenses of two burlesque theatres in Manhattan for what he described as "conditions of almost incredible indecency."

Do you suppose for a moment that the manager of the Belasco or the Empire, the home of Charles Frohman's productions, trembled lest the public would also suspect their theatres of "almost incredible indecency"?

Do you suppose for a moment that any theatregoer imagines that what happened at those burlesque theatres could, to any degree, occur at the Empire or the Belasco?

Certainly not. And the reason is, that the theatregoing public knows precisely what sort of shows to expect at the Empire and the Belasco, and precisely what to expect of the other two theatres.

NOW, so far as there is any truth in the reasoning of the exhibitor who believes that his worst competitor can dictate to the public what it shall think of that exhibitor's theatre, it lies in the fact that the public does not know and, with few exceptions, cannot know what to expect or what they are going to find at any motion picture theatre.

To them all motion picture theatres are alike—they are just motion picture theatres and nothing more. The names of pictures, or the names of companies, with a few notable exceptions, tell them nothing.

The result is that the theatregoer does not have any reason to believe that what might happen at one picture theatre could not happen at another. He does not know, unless he is intimately acquainted with picture programs as few are, where to find the kind of pictures he does want, and how to avoid the kind he doesn't want.

And the blame for this unsystematized, unstandardized hodge-podge of a situation is entirely upon the producers of pictures.

IT arises out of the attempt of various manufacturers to produce every possible kind of a picture, every possible kind of a story, regardless of the nature of his equipment, the limitations of his stock company, or the fitness of his directors. As a result, neither his actors nor his directors have time to learn how to produce any special sort of picture well, and, in fact, have only time to turn out more or less unsatisfactory experiments in every class.

TODAY a director may be working on a "thriller"; next week on a rural, home-like play; a month from now engaged in making an historical feature, or a war spectacle—all for the same company.

While the company is turning out comedies, society dramas, underworld stories, westerns, historicals, classics, allegorical subjects, rural plays, high moralities, sex studies, and delicate psychological presentments, with no other aim than to catch every kind of a theatregoer with every kind of a picture.

THE exhibitor's program cannot help reflecting this conglomerate condition. Without spending what is often to him a ruinous sum of money, he can hardly arrange a program that does not contain discords, that is not more or less miscellaneous and unassorted. To do this, he would have to have absolute independence of booking, regardless of programs, and this does not exist.

Meanwhile, his patrons can never be quite sure what they are going to find at his theatre.

And, meanwhile, the new convert to motion pictures, who has been used to well-defined lines of demarkation in the legitimate theatre and in his magazines, is in a state of bewilderment and disgust at the jumbled, mixed, unassorted programs he encounters at the various theatres he visits.

"The only reason I keep on going," said one of them the other day, "is because I never can tell when I am going to see a good picture."

Pathé Secures Rights to Woods' Play Collection

General Manager Gasnier Puts Through Deal, Which Gives Motion Picture Producer Opportunity to Bring Out Stage Successes Holding Boards Many Seasons—Some of the Hits of the Last Five Years Include "Madame Sherry," "Gypsy Love," and "The Girl in the Taxi"

AN announcement of interest in both theatrical and motion picture circles is made by Pathé and A. H. Woods. Arrangements have just been perfected whereby Pathé receives the motion picture rights to all the plays that have been and will be produced by Mr. Woods. Thus one of the largest theatrical producers of the day becomes allied with the oldest of the motion picture concerns. The list of plays which thus becomes available for motion picture purposes is a large one, embracing many of the greatest theatrical successes of recent years.

At the time the papers were signed there were three large immediate cash offers lying upon Mr. Woods' desk. With the acquisition of the plays Pathé becomes the possessor of a splendid stock of picture material which will add prestige to the Gold Rooster program, on which they will be placed.

George Fitzmaurice, who because of his great ability has been entrusted by Pathé with the production of adaptations from famous dramatic successes, will produce many of these A. H. Woods plays. In his casts will be used so far as possible, the actors who appeared in the original productions, among whom are many of the leading players of the day, such as Florence Reed and Robert Edeson.

The pictures will be made in the very best manner, regardless of expense. George Brackett Seitz, the Pathé scenario editor, and Ouida Bergere, both well known playwrights, will make the adaptations. The first play to be filmed will be "New York," with Florence Reed. Work on this picture will be started at once by Mr. Fitzmaurice.

General Manager Louis J. Gasnier of Pathé put through the deal with Mr. Woods, assisted by George F. Miller and G. Van Werveke of the Pathé forces. Mr. Woods was represented by Martin Herman, his general manager, and Ralph I. Kohn, his private secretary.

The rise of A. H. Woods from the domain of ten cent melodrama to a position in the front rank of theatrical producers is one of the most spectacular in the history of the American theatre. In a comparatively few years he has established himself as a successful, original and daring manager. Looking over the list of "hits" in the past five years, we find the name of A. H. Woods associated with many emphatic ones.

For instance, it was Mr. Woods who gave us that international music success, "Madame Sherry," to be followed later in the operatic field by the melodious "Gypsy Love," which enchanted two continents. It was A. H. Woods who staged the well remembered laughable farce "The Girl in the Taxi," which was also subsequently played abroad.

It remained for the same manager to make a star of Julian Eltinge, the famous impersonator. When it came time to dedicate the new Eltinge theatre in New York, it was A. H. Woods who picked "Within the Law" for the initial atraction. The phenomenal success of this drama of the shop girl is too widely known to need added comment. And who has not heard of or laughed at the greatest tribute to Woods' ability to give the public what it wants, namely "Potash and Perlmutter."

Even more recently Mr. Woods has given the public such pronounced successes as "The Song of Songs," "Kick In," "Innocent," "The High Cost of Loving," "The Yellow Ticket," "Common Clay" and "Abe and Mawruss," the last two the most notable successes of the current season.

Mr. Woods has assembled under his banner such prominent players as John Mason, Jane Cowl, Dorothy Donnelly, Florence Reed, Richard Bennett, Julian Eltinge, Barney Bernard, Madame Cottrelly, Irene Fenwick, Cyril Keightley, Thos. A. Wise, Forrest Winant, Pauline Frederick, Lew Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore, Josephine Victor, Jane Grey, Emmett Corrigan, Macy Harlan, Marguerite Sylva, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Bernard Granville, Adele Ritchie, Sam Bernard, Louise Dresser, and a host of others.

Mr. Woods is owner of the Eltinge theatre, and lessee and manager of the Republic theatre in New York. He personally selected Pathé to be the medium by which his plays are to be presented to the public in picture form.

Essanay's Studio Building to Have Gymnasium

Running Track, Indoor Tennis Court, Handball and Squash Courts, Beside Ordinary Apparatus, Will Be Installed for Actors and Actresses

ONE of the features of Essanay's new studio building, which now is rapidly going up will be a completely equipped gymnasium. There will be a running track, an indoor tennis court, handball and squash courts and all the ordinary apparatus used in gymnasiums.

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, ordered this addition to the studio because he believes that the way to get the best work out of his players is to have them in the finest of physical condition. Every actor and actress will be encouraged to take regular physical exercise, though it will not be compulsory.

There will be a man and a woman instructor, certain hours being set off for the men and others for the women to use the gymnasium. Several large shower baths will be constructed on each side of the gymnasium which will be open at all hours.

There also will be a library and reading rooms as a general lounging place for players when not at work so that they will not be confined to the necessarily limited space of a dressing room.

The main offices and directors' rooms will be on the second floor of the studio, most of the first floor beng given to a gigantic studio where several directors can work at the same time. Its proportions will be large enough for the staging of Essanay's great feature plays, many of which called for scenes of such magnitude as to cramp a 100 x 100 foot studio.

The floor space of the new studio will be 350 x 175 feet or 61,250 square feet. The building will be fireproof, being constructed of brick and steel, the only possible inflamable part being the furniture.

It is expected that the new quarters will be ready for occupancy by January 1.

Walter, Successful Dramatist, with Equitable

Author of Some of Biggest Hits on American Stage, "Paid in Full" and "Easiest Way," About to Conclude Arrangements to Furnish Six Scripts a Year

THREE STARS WHO HAVE RECENTLY JOINED THE EQUITABLE FORCES

GENERAL MANAGER FELIX F. FEIST, of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, this week announced the completion of all equipping at the Equitable's Fifty-second street studio, and the commencing of work there by three Equitable directors.

When Frank Powell, Charles Seay and John Ince begin their productions, Equitable hopes that by February 1 they will have at least fifteen finished productions on the shelf, and thereby be enabled to diversify their releases as they have planned to do.

In addition to Powell, Ince, S. E. V. Taylor and Seay, E. Mason Hopper, Webster Cullison, Edmund Lawrence, Joseph Golden and Harry A. Pollard are busily engaged on production at Flushing, L. I.; Fifty-second street, or the Triumph studios in the Bronx.

Three permanent stars, Muriel Ostriche, Gail Kane and Margarita Fischer, are either at work or awaiting their next vehicle. Miss Kane has finished "The Labyrinth," Margarita Fischer is in the final scenes of "The Dragon," and Muriel Ostriche has just completed her first Equitable release, "A Daughter of the Sea."

Now Brandon Tynan, Frank Sheridan, Molly McIntyre, Emmett Corrigan, Henry Kolker and Gail Kane are to begin work at once at one of the three Equitable producing headquarters.

Equitable, through an arrangement now being made, expects to have twelve of the most noted writers of the day writing for its studios.

Eugene Walters, author of "Paid in Full," "The Wolf," "The Easiest Way," "The Wife," and "Homeward Bound," is about to conclude arrangements with the Equitable, to furnish them with six original virile stories a year; Rachel Crothers, whose numerous plays and novels have established her as a factor in fictiondom; Harriet Ford, author of "The Argyle Case," "The Dummy" and other plays; and Edwin Milton Royle, author of a large number of big stories and plays, including "The Squaw Man."

Eight other noted writers are under contract with the Equitable to produce a certain number of stories and plots, and it is thought that work will begin on this material within a few weeks.

William Stoermer, until recently studio manager for Thomas Ince, with Triangle, has assumed a similar position at Equitable's Fifty-second street studio, in New York, and under the general direction of Isidor Bernstein will handle the material side of all productions at that place.

For Frank Sheridan's production of "The Man Higher Up," a mixed cast of players has been assembled. In addition to Mr. Sheridan the cast will include Clara Whipple and Mary Charleson, two regular screen players who are members of the Equitable regular stock cast.

Charles Gleason, Frank Beamish, Henry Spengler, George Arbine and William H. Tooker, all of whom have appeared in principal parts in feature productions, and have proven their worth, will have important roles in Sheridan's picture. Marie Booth, Myrtis Coney and Mary Weston also appear.

TWO "CARMENS" DRAW BIG IN MASSACHUSETTS

This is what Sam Goldstein of the Broadway theatre, Springfield, Mass., thinks of the Lasky "Carmen" film, as expressed in a telegram to Harry Asher of the Famous Players Film Company:

"Can we hold 'Carmen' an additional week at additional price? Turning away thousands. Wire answer."

Manager Campbell of the Fox film exchange is having the same experience with the Theda Bara version of the opera. All over the territory motion picture fans have gone wild over the two "Carmens."

War Helps American Pictures in Great Britain

Representative of Hauff, a London House, Now in New York to Complete Arrangements for Marketing New Kriterion Prints, Declares That Business Is Better in England

THE war in England, instead of affecting the American photoplay market adversely, as was originally feared, has really greatly aided to increase its popularity, according to the statement of a representative of the English house of C. H. Hauff, Ltd., 62 Great Russell street, London, England, when interviewed at the offices of the New Kriterion Sales Corporation.

The representative of Messrs. Hauff, who was here to complete the final arrangements for the marketing of a large number of prints of the New Kriterion productions, said:

"Business is better than ever in spite of the war. This is due to the fact that there is more than enough work for everybody at salaries greater than ordinary, and as a result more working people frequent the moving picture theatres. It is also due to the fact that many women are receiving the pay of their soldier husbands and have more money to spend and more freedom to spend it.

"The arrangements of the renters and importers has also helped to make the situation much better. The announcement of the new tariff that went into effect on September 29 of one pence, two cents, a foot on positives, and half pence, 1 cent, per foot on raw stock caused considerable disturbance in selling conditions, which was finally settled by the agreement of the various film interests to charge five pence as formerly.

"Both features and small stuff sell well, although two-reelers are hard to sell. Educationals and comics in one reel are the best sellers. It is very difficult to sell films over 4,000 feet. The five and six-reelers are not popular unless they are very exceptional. American pictures go very well at present. We like the clear photography and clever direction. Of course the situation is aided, too, by the fact that we are not getting continental pictures.

"Although your pictures are exceptionally good, your posters are not of the quality used by many of the films here. One firm here has paid as much as one hundred pounds for the work of well-known artists. Of course, we sell our posters, while you give yours away generally."

The Kriterion Sales Corporation, who bought all of the assets of the Kriterion, sent a complete sample program to England, and the contract from the English firm is the result.

In their letter confirming the contract their expert wrote: "I may say that if your future productions are as good as the ones you sent us you may look forward with every confidence to a good sale for your films in Great Britain and her colonies."

The contract was for the prints far in excess of what had been figured as possible for England.

Vogue Makes the Sixth Comedy Brand for Mutual

This Gives the Program Each Week Nine Releases with Comic Element in Plot—At Thanhouser Studios Four Directors Are Busy Turning Out Funny-Films—The Cub Pictures Made by Horsley with George Ovey in the Lead Continue to Be Regular Part of Friday's Output

WITH the introduction of Vogue films to the Mutual's program in December, there will be six distinct brands of straight comedy and nine comedy releases weekly which will go to the public through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Vogue films are being produced by the newly organized Vogue Films, Inc., in Los Angeles, under the direction of Charles H. France. In the cast will be Priscilla Dean, Russ Powell and Lillian Brown Leighton. They will be supported by William Scott, Wilton Welch, Arthur B. Lamb and M. Morante.

There are four directors of comedies busily at work at the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle, since two funny pictures are released by that company under the brand name of Falstaff every week in the Mutual's program. Monday and Thursday are the days on which they appear.

William A. Howells, who is an actor as well as a director, and appeared in the Falstaff release of November 11, "Hannah's Henpecked Husbands," is already engaged in producing a comedy every two weeks. Arthur Ellery, William Parke and Howard Mitchell are the other directors among the Thanhouser forces, who turn out at least one funny picture every two weeks. Louise Emerald Bates, the beautiful star of many Winter Garden shows and of other Broadway productions, is the newest acquisition to the fold. She has appeared in "The Film Favorite's Finish," on the Mutual Program, November 11.

Other Falstaff Members

Frances Keyes, Carey L. Hastings, Barbara Gilroy, Janet Henry, Winifred Lane, Riley Chamberlain, Frank McNish, Colin Campbell, John Lehnberg, Lindsay Morrison, Burnett Barker, Charlie Emerson, Boyd Marshall, Claude Cooper and Arthur Cunningham are other members of the Falstaff companies.

Among the Falstaff comedies soon to appear are "A Cunning Canal Boat Cupid," in which Winifred Lane and Claude Cooper are featured; "Lulu's Lost Lotharios," featuring Barbara Gilroy and Claude Cooper; "The Postmaster of Pineapple Plains," starring Janet Henry and Charlie Emerson; and "Hannah's Henpecked Husbands," in which Carey L. Hastings and Boyd Marshall play the leads. These will all appear during November.

Then, there are the comedies, in which George Ovey is the head liner, and which are a regular part of the Friday's output in the Mutual Program. The Cub pictures are directed by Milton Fahrney, who was one of the first of Mr. Horsley's staff when he first commenced to produce pictures, several years ago.

George Ovey is supported by George George, the popular comedian who joined the Horsley contingent about six weeks ago, after motion picture experience with Pathé and Biograph. Also in the company are Louis Fitz Roy, Gordon MacGregor and Janet Sully.

Goldie Colwell, who has played comedy leads with Mr. Ovey for some time, has been transferred, and at present a permanent successor to her place has not been appointed. Mary St. Aubour has appeared in several Cub releases since Miss Colwell's departure from the comedy ranks.

Three Cubs in November

Three Cub comedies are scheduled for release in November. "The Double Cross" will appear November 12, "The Fighting Four" is scheduled for November 19, and "A Deal in Indians" comes on November 26.

Cissy Fitzgerald, the English comedienne, who appeared recently in two Casino star comedies in the Mutual Program, "A Corner in Cats," and "Zablitsky's Waterloo," has been re-engaged for four additional comedies with the Gaumont Company, which are being especially written for her. Miss Fitzgerald will commence work next week.

Casino Star Comedies are produced at the Gaumont studios at Flushing, L. I., under the direction of Edwin Middleton, an old comedian and comedy director. Budd Ross is the only regularly engaged actor who appears in all the pictures. The star is chosen from among Broadway players, and supporting casts are picked anew for each production.

Among the comedy players who have been featured in these one reel productions are George Spencer, W. C. Fields, Fayette Perry, Alice Dovey, Tom Waters and Harry Vokes.

"Beauty in Distress" and "The House Party," in which Harry Vokes, supported by Dorothy Rogers, and then by Eleanor Fairbanks, will be released November 14 and 21. Cissy Fitzgerald in "Nearly Famous" will appear November 28.

The Novelty comedies, which are released regularly Mondays and Wednesdays, are produced by different companies. Some of them, including the three burlesques, "Rip Van Winkle Badly Ripped," "Miss Trilly's Big Feet" and "The Corsican Brothers Up-to-Date," are the output of the Crystal Film Corporation, directed by W. A. Hutchinson. Edith Thornton plays the leads in these, usually supported by W. E. Browning.

Edward McWade in Novelty Film

The Novelty release of November 24 is entitled "Taming a Grouch," and was written and produced by Edward McWade, the writer and actor. In the leading role is William Sloan, whose appearance in such productions as "The Governor's Son," "1492," "Little Christopher," "The Girl from Paris" and the "French Maid," has established him as an actor of more than usual ability. He is supported by Margaret McWade, who is also well known on the legitimate stage.

In addition to these, there are the American Beauty releases on Tuesdays and Saturdays. In the American companies are Neva Gerber, Carol Holloway, Beatrice Van, Frank Borsage, John Sheehan, Estelle Allen and Jack Dillon. "Her Adopted Father," "The Drummer's Trunk," and "Cupid Beats Father," are soon to be shown on the Mutual Program.

Of a different type of comedy is the "Buck Parvin in the Movies" series, produced from the stories by Charles E. Van Loan, which were published in the Saturday Evening Post. Under the title of Mustang brand, these pictures appear every fourth week. Arthur Acord plays the lead.

Another comedy, of still a different character is the weekly Gaumont animated cartoon "Keeping Up with the Joneses," drawn by Harry Palmer, which occupies one-half of the Gaumont scenic "See America First."

Miriam Nesbitt and McDermott Together Again

Leading Woman, Back at Studio After Visit to 'Frisco Fair, Will Make Re-appearance in a Three Reeler, "Life's Pitfalls," Directed by Ridgwell

MIRIAM NESBITT, Edison leading woman, has returned to the studio after about a two months' trip and rest during which she took a cross-country tour, leisurely, to the Pacific Coast and the San Francisco fair. In a number of cities in which she appeared she received unplanned, but enthusiastic receptions. Her first re-appearance will be in a three-reel feature, "Life's Pitfalls," directed by a new Edison director, George Ridgwell.

After that Miss Nesbitt will be assigned a special director and will again appear with Marc MacDermott. This return to the older order is in response to a pronounced demand upon the part of exhibitors and patrons that these two appear together again.

The director in charge will be George Wright, newly appointed from the acting ranks of the Edison company. Mr. Wright first went to the Edison company with the intention of becoming a director, backed by a wide experience as a stage manager.

While standing about getting familiar with the difference in motion picture direction, he was asked to play a part. The splendid way he did it marked him, unanimously, as too good an actor to lose from the screen.

Mr. Wright has appeared in "My Friend from India," with Walter E. Perkins; the title role in "Chimmie Fadden;" in the all star cast of "Shenandoah" with Otis Skinner; as player and director with

STARS AND SCENES OF THREE FINE ARTS PHOTOPLAYS SOON TO FLASH ON SCREEN FOR TRIANGLE PATRONS

DE WOLF HOPPER IN "DON QUIXOTE"; MARIE DORO IN "THE WOOD NYMPH"; RALPH LEWIS IN "THE MOTHER OF SEVEN"

the Charles Klein productions, in "Bobby Burnit," "The Country Boy;" the London presentation of "The Third Degree," and "Bought and Paid for."

Hereafter it is probable that Miss Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott will appear only in features.

Paul Postler, formerly with Essanay and Pathé, has joined the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, Cal., to play juvenile leads opposite Beatriz Michelena.

Laemmle to Try Out Osborne Convict Welfare Plan

Two Inmates on Release from Sing Sing in Next Thirty Days Will Be Sent to Universal City for Employment, with Chances for Advancement if Deserving

PRESIDENT Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is so much in accord with Warden Osborne's plan of giving the Sing Sing convicts a chance that he intends to put that plan to a test and find out whether it works out as well in fact as it does in theory.

Mr. Laemmle has arranged with the warden to take two inmates to be released within the next thirty days, send them to Universal City, Cal., where the Universal has a whole municipality given over to the manufacture of motion pictures, and will there give the two men employment, with opportunities for advancement, and thus give Warden Osborne's plan a thorough trial.

It will be remembered that Mr. Laemmle was the first to introduce motion pictures in Sing Sing. In the early part of last

CARL LAEMMLE

September, Oscar Cartaya, an inmate of Sing Sing, won the fifty-dollar prize offered by the Universal for suggesting a title to "The Photoplay Without a Name." Cartaya saw the picture when it was shown in the prison projection room, and sent in as a fitting title, "Folly's Crucible," which was chosen as the most appropriate title from a list of over 44,000 titles submitted.

When Cartaya was handed a check for fifty dollars by Manager Joe Brandt of the Universal home office, he immediately turned around to Mr. Osborne and said that he wished to contribute ten dollars from that amount to the Mutual Welfare League fund. "I would like to give more," said Cartaya, "but I am a foreigner, alone in this country and this is all the money I will have when I leave the prison eighteen months from now."

Rights of All Ella Wheeler Wilcox Books for Metro

Prose and Verse of Famous American Author Will Furnish Material for 6 Pictures a Year, and She Will Assist in Direction and Making of Each Subject

METRO has just completed a contract with Ella Wheeler Wilcox, one of the foremost living women writers in America, for her entire works, poetry and prose, which will be utilized in the picturization of Metro feature productions. The feature pictures will be made at the rate of six a year, and Miss Wilcox has agreed to supervise personally and assist in the direction and the making of each picture.

The Ella Wheeler Wilcox series of pictures will be produced by the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., for release on the regular Metro program. Max Karger, general manager of the Rolfe forces, arranged the contract with Miss Wilcox, and it was considered of such moment that a moving picture was made in the Rolfe studio of Miss Wilcox signing the contract.

Afterward, when the film was shown in the projecting room at the studio, Miss Wilcox manifested keen delight.

In the Wilcox collection there are more than five hundred poems and several volumes of prose. Most of them are known throughout the civilized world. In the seven volumes of verse perhaps the best known are "Poems of Passion," "Poems of Pleasure," "Poems of Power" and "Poems of Problems." Among her notable books of prose are "Three Women" and "Maurine."

The most powerful and suitable poems will be chosen for picturization. Metro has done this sort of work in the past by adapting poems of Robert W. Service, the "Kipling of the North," notably "My Madonna," "The Song of the Wage Slave," and "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." These features were produced by the Popular Plays and Players, for release on the regular Metro program.

The first Wilcox picture will be put in production immediately.

MARY MOORE, SISTER OF OWEN, TOM AND MATT, WHO, AS A NEW LUBIN PLAYER, WILL BE SEEN IN "THE GREAT DIVIDE"

Berst Elected President of General Film Company

At Meeting Held in New York Last Week Frank L. Marion, President of Kalem, Was Made Vice-President—J. J. Kennedy and C. H. Wilson Resign—New Policy Will Be One of Increased Efficiency, and Is Said to Meet Full Approval of All the Producers

At an adjourned regular meeting of the General Film Company, held in New York last week, J. A. Berst was elected president, and Frank L. Marion, president of the Kalem Company, was elected vice-president to fill the vacancies made by the resignations of J. J. Kennedy and C. H. Wilson, vice-president of the Edison Company, as president and vice-president respectively. Percy L. Waters resigned as general manager, and his office will be filled by Mr. Berst.

Previously, at the regular meeting, Messrs. Kennedy and Wilson had suggested their resignations, stating that in their belief their close affiliation with the Motion Picture Patents Company might be detrimental to the General Film Company, because of the latter's present status in the courts and the litigation that may possibly follow the decree in the present Government case. Both resignations were accepted with regret, as was also the resignation of Mr. Waters, whose efficiency has been highly recognized. Mr. Berst as acting president and devoting his entire time to his duties makes unnecessary the separate office of general manager.

Mr. Kennedy, as is well known, had numerous construction and booking interests in addition to his General Film executive duties.

Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Wilson continue as directors of the General Film Company, and the new executive committee will consist of Messrs. J. A. Berst, George Kleine and Albert E. Smith. Mr. Smith continues as treasurer.

The election of Mr. Berst and Mr. Marion was unanimous.

A new and important policy has been decided upon with respect to the production and distribution of General Film releases. The weekly releases have been reduced in number to forty-two. This has been done to increase efficiency in production and to do away with similarity in character of subjects. Each producing company will now specialize more clearly, furnishing subjects to make a program complete and varied, but not overlapping in character of subjects.

Production by merit will also supersede the former policy of standing orders from the General Film Company to the producers. The program will now be placed upon an open booking basis. Exhibitors will be allowed to select subjects, and production will naturally be directed by their trend of selection. Branch managers will be given more latitude in the conduct of their offices.

"The new policy," said Vice-President Marion, "is simply one of increased efficiency. It meets with the full approval of all the producers. We feel that the outlook is very bright. The General Film producers are, and have been within the year past, in closer harmony than ever before. As for the Government suit, the point at issue, that of a monopoly, has utterly ceased to be an issue, as every one knows. The court decree has not as yet been handed down. If it should be adverse to our present organization we will of course appeal and our lawyers feel more than confident of a favorable outcome.

"The new officers and executive committee have the utmost confidence of all the directors."

Mr. Berst, who has been vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company is leaving Chicago for New York to take up his new duties.

Judge Tugwell Dismissed by Los Angeles Mayor

President of Censor Body Charged with Soliciting and Receiving Special Favors from Film Exchanges in Form of Reduced Rentals for Pictures at His Theatres

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 11.

THE action of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Board of Censorship in not permitting "Damaged Goods" to be shown, brought out a number of complaints in affidavit form which were filed with the city council, and resulted in the request by the acting mayor for the resignation of Judge A. P. Tugwell, president of the board, and E. T. Jorgensen, secretary.

The latter complied with the request, but President Tugwell demanded a public hearing, and was given until noon of Tuesday, November 9, to file his resignation or be dismissed. He failed to comply and was dismissed by Mayor Charles Sebastian. The city council upheld the action. The resignation of Jorgensen becomes effective immediately as does the dismissal of Tugwell.

The principal complaint against Jorgensen was that he accepted seventy-five dollars from J. A. Quinn, manager of the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, early this year. Quinn maintains that the money was to influence the vote of Jorgensen with regard to a picture Quinn had booked and advertised, and which was condemned by the censors. Jorgensen is a member of the Los Angeles Evening Herald staff, and accepted the money as payment for publicity work.

There were several charges filed against Tugwell. One was that he solicited, and received special favors from Los Angeles film exchanges in the form of reduced rental rates for films exhibited at his Globe theatre, at Central avenue and Jefferson street, Los Angeles. Another charge made by more than one film exchange was that Tugwell collected two dollars weekly from film exchanges in payment for calling at exchanges, taking films to the censors' projecting room and returning them to the exchanges. In affidavits filed which bear the date of November 8, statements made by film exchanges are quoted.

This shake-up will in all probability cause a complete change in the board of censors, with new ordinances which will provide that anyone connected with the motion picture industry will not be eligible as a member of the board. Councilwoman Lindsay has been active in investigating charges of misconduct, and statements made by her is to the effect that new ordinances will in all probability become effective January 1.

Film exchangemen here have been active in this matter to the extent that a majority of the managers signed a petition which was filed with the city council, Monday, asking for the abolishment of the present board of censors on the plea that they were incompetent.

The belief of a number of members of the city council is that there should be a censor board.

Premier Program in New Quarters; Opens Suite in the Leavitt Building

THE Premier Program Corporation, announcement of which was made last week, has moved into its permanent quarters and now occupies the entire second floor of the Leavitt Building, 126-8-30-2-4 West Forty-sixth street. This location is in the heart of the uptown film district.

Before moving in, the Premier Program entirely renovated and re-equipped these offices. The equipment throughout is mahogany, and although simple and dignified is rich and serviceable. The main entrance is through an outer office, space in which is reserved for the use of stenographers and clerks. Opening directly from this room are the offices of the sales department advertising and publicity, and such other departments as come into direct contact with the largest number of daily visitors. Also opening into this office is an enclosed reception room for the use of visitors not actually engaged in one of the other offices.

A corridor leading from the main entrance room communicates with the offices of the corporation. Along this same corridor, also, separate offices are provided for each of the five producing companies, whose features will be releases on the Premier Program. Beyond the offices of the producing companies are the offices of the accounting department and the scenario department.

The projection room has every modern convenience. A small writing-table, equipped with desk light, enables the viewer of a picture to make such notes or memoranda as he may desire.

The equipment in the booth includes two projection machines and all other appurtenances requisite for high grade projection.

WARDES, FATHER AND SON, NOW WITH EDWIN THANHOUSER

That eminent tragedian and Shakespearian authority, Frederick Warde, has at last succumbed to what he jokingly terms "the film inevitable." He has just been engaged by Edwin Thanhouser, for work at the New

ERNEST WARDE AND FREDERICK WARDE
(Thanhouser)

Rochelle studios, and will first be seen as Silas Marner.

Mr. Warde is practically the sole survivor of the Shakespearian actors of another day.

Of moving pictures he says:

"A wonderful art to which I am a total stranger but an ardent admirer. Little did I think that I would ever take part in a studio production, but the spirit of the times and Mr. Thanhouser's proposal bade me give ear to the 'film inevitable.' My initiation into the mysteries of the film studio proves to me that I am not too old for new tricks."

Mr. Warde's initiation will be at the hands of his son, Ernest, who is a Thanhouser director.

MABEL TALIAFERRO WITH STRONG CAST FOR ROLFE

Mabel Taliaferro, the beautiful and talented star of the speaking drama, who played the stellar role in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Polly of the Circus," and other notable productions of the legitimate stage, has been signed by the Metro Pictures Corporation to appear in a series of big Metro feature pictures produced by Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc.

She will be surrounded by an adequate supporting cast, including many artists of considerable experience on both the stage and screen.

Miss Taliaferro is counted one of the most fascinating and charming young actresses of the stage. The arrangement with Miss Taliaferro was made by Max Karger, general manager of the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., for her appearance in productions of that company, which will be released exclusively under the Metro banner.

American Film Trade Asked to Help Red Cross Work

Film Men Requested to Contribute Toward Ambulance Unit, Contemplated Gift From British Industry for the One Service Recognizing No Prejudices in Wartime

A COMPLETE ambulance unit for service with British troops at the front will be provided by members of the British film industry, if a project now under way is carried through to success. The American picture trade is also urged to contribute to the fund.

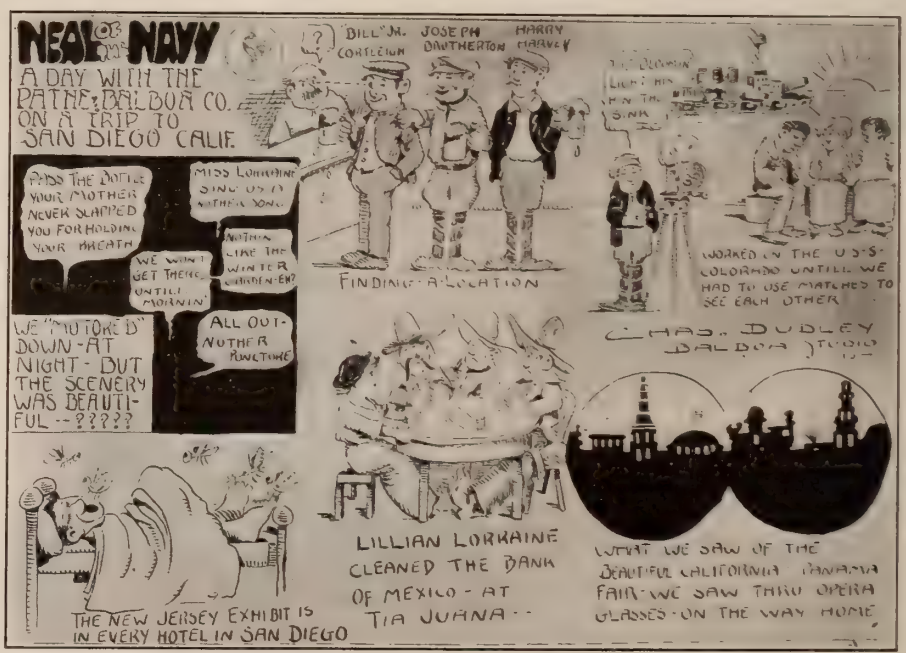
The scheme calls for the raising of $150,000, the cost of fifty motor ambulances, with various supplementary vehicles, including a store car, a repair wagon, ten motorcycles and four ordinary cars.

Already the whole motion picture trade in England is rallying to the support of this praiseworthy cause. At a big mass meeting in London recently, representatives of all sides of the industry passed the following resolution:

"That, as a thank offering for the success of moving pictures in the British Isles, and to show appreciation of the patriotic devotion displayed by a large number of cinema patrons and members of the trade now serving with His Majesty's forces, this mass meeting of the kinematograph and allied trades pledges itself to present the British Red Cross Society a convoy of fifty motor ambulances for the use of the army in Flanders or elsewhere."

Several hundred British theatres observed November 9 as Cinema Ambulance Day, donating their whole receipts that day to the fund. In addition a matinee is to be given November 16 at the London Opera House, under the patronage of the King, the Queen, and the Prince of Wales. A number of the most prominent actors and actresses in England (all of whom had appeared in pictures), gave their services, and British exhibitors aided by promoting the sale of tickets. W. A. Northam, as secretary of the matinee entertainment committee, was one of those chiefly responsible for the success of the benefit.

The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly reports Ireland and Scotland working in line with the rest of the British film trade. The country has been divided into twenty-seven districts, and the campaign for contributions thoroughly organized by the Cinematograph Trade Ambulance Fund, with Dr. R. T. Jupp, president; J. Frank Brockliss, chairman of executive committee; W. F. Jury, hon. treasurer; William Barnetson, secretary. Ninety members of the trade are serving as vice-presidents.



The Sub-Committee for the American Press and Trade, of which Paul Kimberley is chairman, with headquarters at 166 Shaftesbury avenue, London, W. C., is made up of the following, besides Mr. Kimberley: A. F. Wagner (director and manager Thomas A. Edison, Ltd.); W. C. Scott (director American Company, Ltd.); H. A. Spoor (Essanay); J. D. Tippett (Trans Atlantic Film Company); A. E. Mainwaring (Western Import Company).

This committee will be glad to receive contributions from any member of the American motion picture industry. From considerations of humanity alone, the project is most worthy. An ambulance corps knows no nationality. They labor with but one object in view—the assuagement of pain and the saving of life.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS believes many manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors in the United States will be glad to share in this movement.

Press Agents Who Deluge Theatres or Newspapers with Press Copy About Pictures as They Are Filmed and Fail to Send Out Matter When Subjects Are Actually Released Are Defeating Purpose of Publicity—Copy for Current Attractions Should Reach an Exhibitor in Time for His Showings

Editor's Note.—This analysis of film publicity men was written by Fred T. Grenell, a Detroit newspaper man, connected with the Free Press, who also is publicity man for the Majestic, Orpheum, Knickerbocker and other Detroit theatres. Mr. Grenell had five years' experience with various road attractions, was one of the early members of the Friars and knows what the newspapers and the theatres should have because he is on both sides of the fence.

A FEW years ago an imaginative official of an Eastern film corporation happening to read a magazine devoted to better business in which efficiency and other ideals are idolized happened to come across the word "co-operation."

A few weeks later he told the world in the trade journals the important fact that henceforth and forever after his company would co-operate with the exhibitor. Great was the rejoicing on the part of the poor exhibitor. No more, it was said, would he have to beg a few facts about the film plays he was renting. The manufacturer would get to him everything—everything.

Of course, this company could not copyright the word and it was not long before every other company harped on it. They are harping still. Many of them have paid press agents to whom they pay regular salaries. They get out mimeograph matter, press sheets, copies of advertising for the daily or weekly papers and, possibly, in the eyes of the company managers, their efforts are remarkable.

It is the purpose of this little article to show their shortcomings in the hope that some of the companies will really use the word correctly. For instance:

Shortcomings of a Good Press Agent

There is one big Eastern corporation which gets out very fine pictures and which has a pretty good press agent, one who writes copy that can be used. But he deluges the theatres or papers with press copy about attractions as they are filmed and is very, very silent when the pictures actually are released.

The copy goes to the theatre so far ahead they throw it away. The newspapers, when they use it, do not help the local exhibitor, because it is mostly forgotten. If all the feature matter and data on the attraction was released a few days before the picture is ready for release the results would be better. Further, the local exhibitor could link it with his theatre.

Please note that the above criticism refers to the only film company, in the writer's mind, that really gets out regular press copy. Most of the copy that is sent out is absolutely not usable unless it is rewritten. It may not be palatable to many of these press agents, but this is a fact.

Some companies employ men at high prices, men who have had experience on the road with big producing companies, and the management cannot understand why these men "fall down." They do for a simple reason.

Much of the press copy sent out with road shows is given to the agent at the start of the season. He "plants" it in city after city. Ask him to give you copy written, perhaps, from a different angle, and he cannot. But if he is a good mixer, has a personality, he can get the copy in that has been furnished.

Failure to Comply with Request

There is a Western film company, for instance, to whom a letter was addressed by a manager, not many weeks ago, asking for seven photographs of a certain production for the newspaper. The desire for the particular pictures requested was explained in detail.

They were wanted for five newspapers in which this theatre advertises very heavily. It took two letters to get the five pictures and three of these photographs were for other attractions—not the particular one desired.

There is another film press agent who gets out what he calls a "press sheet" for each attraction. He lays out several styles of display copy, gives the exhibitor a price on each for mats or electrotypes, not knowing, of course, that column widths vary, and he is very particular to explain just how to put it together.

Three little press notices that accompany it are not usable in their written form, but on some of the sheets one notice can be extracted from the three. This press sheet is designed for a five-cent picture house, while the feature film subjects are sold only to regular theatres in the large cities because they are the only ones able to pay the price. This press agent does not know a solitary thing about publicity, though he may be very affable personally.

I have a letter from a man who stands high in the ranks of a producing company in which he says that his corporation can only permit one set of pictures to go to each theatre. He sees no reason for furnishing other pictures for the newspapers.

This man has been in the film business for many years, so many he cannot today see the difference between a theatre that charges five cents and one that charges fifty. I personally tried to explain to him in ordinary English that publicity given his pictures in the Detroit newspapers would enable him to sell his film all through the state.

Local Advertising Helps Picture Makers

This is a fact. The man who is now selling this particular brand of film finds his mission in Michigan much easier because in every Detroit paper that goes to every city or hamlet in the state his films are being advertised.

I might say in this connection that some of these experiences relate to the Majestic theatre, which has a seating capacity of 2,160, plays to capacity every day, spends about four hundred dollars weekly in advertising—sometimes as much as six hundred dollars—and does a gross business of from four thousand to five thousand dollars weekly. The advertising helps to create this business. But it is a far greater help to the film makers.

With another theatre in Detroit the film company that supplies part of its program has the happy faculty of sending press matter and pictures from two to four weeks after the films have been presented. It does this stunt quite regularly. Sometimes we send the pictures back and sometimes we do not. Why run a correspondence school?

Some day, let us hope, the film companies will employ newspaper men who have had road experience, regular newspaper men who can write a dozen notices about the same production, and write them differently; who can dig up a half dozen or more feature stories for each film and who will be on the job when the exhibitor wants—co-operation.

Variety of Short Items and News Style Characterize Metro Picture News

METRO PICTURE NEWS, the press sheet issued weekly by Metro Pictures Corporation, confines the presentation of publicity to one large page, the greater part of the sheet being devoted to stories of average length. Four or five single and two column cuts are carried, and there are a few short items.

Although the Metro sheet is not so elaborate typographically as some others and the illustrations are somewhat dark, still the material offers possibilities of adaptation to newspaper use, first, because of its variety, and second, because of the excellent style in which it is written. That is to say, all the stories have points, contain facts and are interesting.

In variety, the Metro sheet is really superior. For example, issue No. 9 carried the following range of matter:

Brief synopsis of "One Million Dollars," with two column cut of scene, and a description of what the scene is. Director buys library of Civil War books to aid him in producing "Barbara Fritchie;" sketch of Paul Gilmore, a new Quality-Metro star; narrow escape of an actor from death in fire while "Rosemary" was being filmed (with cut); Emily Stevens divides her time 'twixt stage and studio, and has a strenuous time in the process; director finds a union card useful; two column cut of Grace Elliston, with a brief story about the new Metro play upon which she is at work; Bushman takes his daily exercise on hotel top (with cut of Bushman); Lionel Barrymore is arrested for trespassing during the production of "The Yellow Streak;" and several short stories.

Another commendable thing about this press sheet is the absence of any wild yarns, such as falls from cliffs, etc. And we imagine photoplay editors who receive it are also grateful for the knowledge of correct, but vivid English, it displays. The phrasing of the articles is much above the average.

Considering the brief space used the sheet is well arranged, live, and—what is vital in all motion picture publicity—built from the news angle.

SCENE FROM "THE FINAL JUDGMENT" STARRING ETHEL BARRYMORE

In "The Final Judgment," the Rolfe-Metro screen version of the play by George Scarborough, starring Ethel Barrymore, this famous actress records one of the notable artistic triumphs of her career. Her interpretation of the role of Jane Carleson, the beautiful prima donna, around whose marriage the daring plot is woven, is at once brilliant and highly effective. Miss Barrymore is ably supported by H. Cooper Cliffe, and an exceptional cast.

"The Final Judgment," while scheduled for release in its motion picture form some time this month, will not be given its stage premiere until nearly Christmas, when it will be put on at a Broadway theatre. This is a reversal of the usual procedure, and a distinct compliment to the enterprise of the officials of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNE FOR "YELLOW DOVE"

Famous Stars to be Featured in Elaborate Metro Pictures

Francis X. Bushman, the Quality-Metro star, will begin work this week in the picturization of "The Yellow Dove," the big novel which George Gibbs has just completed for D. Appleton & Co., publishers, and which the Metro Pictures Corporation accepted from manuscript for the screen production. It is expected by the producers that "The Yellow Dove" will be one of the sensations of the year, and preparations are under way to give it an elaborate production.

The story is one of international politics concerning the present European situation, in which the hero plays the difficult role of spy. While the story deals with circumstances surrounding the war it is not a war picture. The novel by Mr. Gibbs was considered in manuscript before it was seen by the publishers of the book, and was accepted by the Metro scenario department immediately after it was read.

Beverly Bayne will be seen in "The Yellow Dove" as Mr. Bushman's leading woman, and an exceptionally strong cast has been engaged for the production. The picture will be made in California by the Quality Pictures Corporation, where they have just finished "Pennington's Choice," in which Mr. Bushman was starred with Miss Bayne as his leading woman.

"NOT GUILTY" OFFERS CYRIL SCOTT IN STELLAR ROLE

Although born in Ireland, Cyril Scott, the star of the Triumph-Equitable's five-part production of "Not Guilty," is to all intents and purposes an American, as his first appearance on the stage was in Paterson, N. J., in 1883, in "The Girl I Love, or the Diamond Mystery," following that by joining Minnie Maddern's company, and later Richard Mansfield's.

His Lieutenant Robert Telfair in "The Heart of Maryland," with Leslie Carter, added to his fame, and the list of plays in which he has appeared since then is too long to be given here.

In the part of Edward Andrews, who spends the best years of his life in prison on a false charge, in "Not Guilty," he has a role which exactly fits his dramatic talents, under the guidance of Joseph A. Golden.

Raver Film Corporation Disposes of English Rights

Betts of International Cinematograph Corporation, a London Firm, Gets British and Continental Control of the Twenty-nine Augustus Thomas Film Dramas.

WALTER C. BETTS, of the International Cinematograph Corporation, Ltd., London, arrived in the United States with the intention of securing the British and Continental rights of high-class motion picture productions made in this country.

Three weeks ago he investigated the Raver Film Corporation, upon learning that it was engaged in the manufacture of twenty-nine different plays from the pen of Augustus Thomas, author of many stage successes.

Harry R. Raver, president of the concern, which bears his name, gave Mr. Betts a full opportunity of investigating the Raver supply for British territory before entering into a contract and the English representative devoted three weeks to an analysis not only of the company's policy, but its facilities for securing talent, its producing staff and its financial resources.

He satisfied himself as to the standing of the Raver corporation. The result is a contract covering a long period for Mr. Raver's forthcoming productions.

In England as in the United States the Raver plays will be shown in the better standard of picture theatres and converted legitimate houses in Great Britain.

Territorial distribution will be selected with care, high-class men being given the preference. Nearly fifty applications from different sections of the United States are on file at the present time, several of which will, no doubt, receive favorable consideration, since the inaugural release will be ready for the market the forehalf of next month.

"Battle Cry of Peace" Will Soon Open on West Coast

Blackton Patriotic Subject Now Playing to Capacity in Boston and Chicago, and Entering Its Tenth Week in New York, Was Originally Suggested by Legion Members

WITH "The Battle Cry of Peace" running to capacity houses in New York at the Vitagraph theatre, where it begins its tenth successful week on Sunday, November 14; in Boston, at the Majestic theatre; in Chicago, at the Olympic theatre, and soon to open in San Francisco, J. Stuart Blackton's dramatic presentation of what invasion in our present condition of unpreparedness would mean, has begun in earnest its appeal to all Americans to be up and doing in defense of their country.

It was originally suggested by members of the American Legion, a society formed for the purpose of providing the country with a third line of defense consisting of men who are ready and willing to serve the government at any time in the various capacities for which they are fitted by training, military or otherwise.

Several members of the Legion, convinced that the motion picture is today the greatest medium for the transmission of ideas to the people, undertook to find someone who would tell, in a picture story form, the dramatic truth of our unreadiness. Mr. Blackton, head of the Vitagraph Company, was a ready listener.

More Photoplays With Modern Themes From Lasky

Next Few Weeks Will Bring, on Paramount Program, "Armstrong's Wife," with Edna Goodrich; Another Chimmie Fadden Subject, with Victor Moore; a Phillips Oppenheim Story Picturized, with Theodore Roberts; "The Cheat," Featuring Fanny Ward, and "The Unknown," Starring Lou-Tellegen

As the results of months of investigation and a close study of motion pictures exhibiting and the photoplaygoing public, the Lasky Feature Play Company by reason of its findings will concentrate for the present on photoplays of modern theme and tense dramatic action.

It is stated from the Lasky New York office that forthcoming releases through Paramount Pictures Corporation will sustain this announcement. At the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal., nearly all the plays at present in course of production under the supervision of Cecil B. DeMille come within the classification of tense, modern dramas.

"Armstrong's Wife," in which Edna Goodrich appears as the star on November 18, for her debut on the screen, is said to be an excellent example of the kind of subject material for photodramas which the Lasky Feature Play Company believes is in most demand at the present time. It is modern, its story is the narrative of a woman who chooses unfortunately between two men. Unhappiness becomes her lot; she is befriended by her disappointed suitor, given by him a new opportunity for happiness and eventually becomes his wife.

Following "Armstrong's Wife" the Lasky Company will release through Paramount on November 22 a comedy entitled, "Chimmie Fadden Out West," produced by Cecil B. DeMille, the theme of which also is entirely modern. It is the second of a series of photo comedies in which Chimmie Fadden as played by Victor Moore appears in the leading role.

Four December Releases

The releases announced for December, of which there are four, will mark the first month of the second quarter year of the Paramount Program.

The productions are Theodore Roberts in a picturization of E. Phillips Oppenheim's "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo"; Fannie Ward in "The Cheat," by Hector Turnbull; Lou-Tellegen in "The Unknown," founded on I. A. R. Wylie's famous novel, "The Red Mirage," and Valeska Suratt in Marion Fairfax's original play, "The Immigrant."

Theodore Roberts in "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" appears as a Russian grand duke who goes incognito to Monte Carlo with his daughter to meet with unofficial representatives of France and Germany.

One of the interesting features of this production will be a replica of the big gaming casino at Monte Carlo—a scene in which more than five hundred persons appear. Carlyle Blackwell and Dorothy Davenport have leading roles in support of Mr. Roberts.

Lou-Tellegen's second appearance in a Lasky photoplay, "The Unknown," following "The Explorer," will bring again to Paramount theatres the young romantic actor who became famous as leading man at twenty-seven years of age with Sarah Bernhardt.

Fanny Ward in "The Cheat"

"The Unknown" is a production of adventure and romance with the scenes laid in Algiers and on the Sahara Desert; Lou-Tellegen appearing as a young Englishman left penniless, who joins the army.

Fanny Ward is to be seen in a dramatic part in "The Cheat," by Hector Turnbull. Miss Ward portrays a young woman, socially ambitious, who steals charitable funds left in her charge, but who is able to make timely restitutions.

Unlike anything she heretofore has ever attempted on the legitimate or variety stages is the first Lasky production in which Valeska Suratt will star.

It is entitled, "The Immigrant," and American audiences that have become accustomed to associate the stunning Miss Suratt with butterfly roles, will have a surprise when they see her in the garb of a Russian immigrant walking the after decks of a great liner with her fellow passengers of the steerage.

"The Immigrant" tells of the struggles and triumphs after many hardships, of the young Russian girl until she occupies a place of prominence. Then, but not until then, will Miss Suratt be seen in her beautiful costumes.

Los Angeles Picked as Center of Selig Production

Studios in Chicago Are Closed and the Players Sent to California—Laboratories Will Remain Open, and Tom Mix Company Will Remain in Southwest

It has been decided by the Selig Polyscope Company to make Los Angeles the center for the production of Selig picture-plays, and, consequently, the Selig studio at Chicago has been closed.

Several offers have already been made the Selig company by concerns wishing to lease the Chicago studio, but the Selig company has as yet taken no action along these lines. The Selig laboratories, among the most complete in this country, will continue to be operated in Chicago.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, recently completed the Selig Jungle-Zoo at Los Angeles. This wonderful institution has every facility for artistic work, and there the majority of the members of the Selig producing staff, together with Selig stock companies, are employed.

With the approach of winter, the Selig company has deemed it advisable to send the Chicago producing staff and stars to the land of perpetual sunshine. This new policy will not apply to the Tom Mix Company, which will continue working on various productions in the Southwest.

Grace Darmond, T. N. Heffron and family, and James Bradburry, left Chicago recently for the Pacific coast ,where they will join the Selig stock companies at the Selig zoo, Los Angeles.

Miss Darmond, a Chicago girl, not yet eighteen years of age, has achieved an enviable record as an actress, having supported as leading lady such stars as Tyrone Power, Harry Mestayer and Otis Harlan. She has never worked elsewhere but in the Selig Chicago studios.

James Bradburry, the veteran comedian, who scored such a hit as the maanger of the burlesque troupe in the Selig Red Seal play, 'A Black Sheep," has become a regular Selig player. He is among the well known comedians of the American stage, and in the past has supported such stars as Booth, Barret, Lester Wallack and others.

T. N. Heffron has been directing productions at the Selig Chicago studio. He has been responsible for the filming of "The House of a Thousand Candles" and "A Black Sheep."

Good Music Is Necessary at All Times, Says Rowland

President of Metro Declares That Appropriate Musical Accompaniment Makes a Fair Subject Better and Inappropriate Selections Kill the Best Picture

"GOOD music makes a fair picture and bad music makes a good picture a nightmare." This is the way President Richard A. Rowland, of the Metro Pictures Corporation, prefaced a straight-from-the-shoulder talk on a subject which he regards as absolutely vital to motion picture exhibitors everywhere. Speaking as an exhibitor, for Mr. Rowland is the Rowland of the Rowland and Clarke chain of theatres, he said:

"Much has been written about music and pictures and still more has been said, but either the point has been missed or the words have fallen on unheeding ears.

"I want very much to impress upon Metro exhibitors especially, and on the other exhibitors who will be Metro exhibitors later on, the vital need for the most painstaking care with the musical setting that is given each picture.

"After good projection music is the thing that stages a picture for the audience.

"Under present conditions I believe there is too much speed, so much in fact that there is no musical rehearsal with a picture before it is shown to the theatre audience. As a result the orchestra or the pianist does the best possible under the circumstances, and the result is that not one ten per cent. of our theatres have music that fits the elaborate and expensive feature pictures that are being shown.

"The Strand theatre of New York is one which demonstrates what good music can do for pictures. Without the Strand musical settings I venture to say that the patronage would be affected very materially.

"I have seen mediocre features projected to good music and I have been entertained almost as much as with better pictures, because the music registered all the things which the screen did not. It helped on the atmosphere, it made weak points strong and cast such a spell over the audience that the faults of the pictures were overlooked.

"Recently I saw one of our strong pictures projected to the accompaniment by a volunteer musician who was a master of the organ. I say master, because he could make it growl or laugh or cry by using various effects which his nimble fingers and the possibilities of the organ provided.

"Whenever a dog appeared on the screen the organ barked, when a suggestion of a smile crept into the face of one of the actors, the organ laughed, chuckled and gurgled until I forgot all about the screen, and with eyes turned upwards listened to the noise.

"The organist had other abilities. He knew everything that had been written, both popular and classical. Nobody on the screen took a drink that there were not a few bars of 'It's always fair weather when good fellows get together,' and all the love scenes were greeted with 'By the Old Mill Stream,' especially the interiors where the nearest stream was from the faucets in the kitchen.

"As a result the comedy effects came at the serious moments and it was as though a humorist with a loud voice were lecturing with the picture with the fixed idea that it should have no solemnity, no power, no anything except humor.

"I cite this experience as an example of what the wrong sort of music can do. If the organist had played quiet themes, music that lost itself in the exhibition of the pictures and that harmonized with the theme so well as not to call attention to the fact that there was any music at all, this great, big, splendid picture would have risen to the dignity of a masterpiece.

"No producer of pictures and no renter of pictures can make them succeed with the public unless they are given the right musical settings and good pictures are certainly entitled to and must be given a proper presentation."

V-L-S-E 24 Sheets May Be Used in Whole or in Part

Plan Starts with "Cave Man," When Company Will Issue Poster of This Size Made Up of Three Separate 8-Sheets, Each Unit Formed by Bottom Strip

THE latest innovation in the general movement for better posters is the division of twenty-four sheets into units, so that any part or the whole of the sheet, may be used by the exhibitor as he chooses.

The new idea was conceived by Albert E. Smith, treasurer and general manager of the Vitagraph Company, for the Blue Ribbon Feature released through the V-L-S-E, and was executed by John W. Grey, assistant to Mr. Smith.

Commencing with "The Cave Man," which is scheduled for release on the 29th of the month, this company will put out a twenty-four-sheet, made up of three separate eight-sheets, and lithographed in such a way that the exhibitor can utilize any one of the three by simply pasting a strip across the top or the bottom.

The number of units of the twenty-four-sheets may vary, but they will all be devised in a form permitting different sizes of the paper to be used at the discretion of the exhibitor.

For instance, on "A Price for Folly," which will be released on December 13, the twenty-four-sheet is arranged in such a way that there are two threes and six-sheet available for separate use. This gives the exhibitor three threes, two sixes, a one, half and twenty-four-sheet on the same release.

The scheme permits a variety in paper which cannot be secured by any other means, as the expense of getting three or four different subjects on the different sizes of paper would be too great. Furthermore, the exhibitor can use these units on separate eight-sheet boards—or any other size he may desire—instead of twenty-four sheet stands, and thereby reduce the cost of his billboard charges.

In other words, he gets three posters for the price of one.

Balboa Pictures on 3 Leading Programs This Month

Producers Issue "Should a Woman Forgive?" Through Equitable-World; "Comrade John," "The Shrine of Happiness," "The Adventure of a Madcap," Pathe; and One on Kalem

NOVEMBER has seen photoplay productions made by the Horkheimer Brothers, released on three of the leading programs before the public. It promises to be the biggest month in the history of the Long Beach, Cal., studio.

One of the month's releases is a five-reel production entitled "Should a Wife Forgive," by the Equitable Company, on the World Film Program. This features Lillian Lorraine and Henry King. The piece was adapted by Will M. Ritchey, from Joseph Howard's stage success, "The Lady of Perfume."

"Comrade John," a Pathé Gold Rooster release, is another silent drama staged by Balboa. It stars William Elliott, the well-known Broadway actor and producer, and Ruth Roland.

Jackie Saunders is being seen in three appealing pieces. Pathé offers her under the Pathé emblem in "The Shrine of Happiness," supported by William Conklin. So artistic is the production that it has been hand-colored in France, the first time a five-reeler has ever been subjected to such costly treatment. Miss Saunders is also seen in "The Adventures of a Madcap," another hand-colored Pathé feature.

Kalem has released the third Jackie Saunders piece, entitled "The Woman of the Sea." Another Horkheimer production to be given to the public by Kalem is "The Woman's Wiles," played by Philo McCullough and Alma Ruben. Besides all these offerings four more episodes of "Neal of the Navy," which Balboa is filming for Pathé, will be seen during November.

GAUMONT-MUTUAL SCENIC "BOSTON" RELEASED

The Mutual Scenic Series, "See America First," produced by the Gaumont Company, is now showing scenes in New England. Boston has been released, and the next reel will give interesting animated views of a trip through the Berkshires, including a trip to an immense paper manufacturing establishment.

Following this will come pictures of Portland, Me., and the White Mountains. On the same reel with these are animated cartoons by Harry Palmer, giving the adventures of Pa and his family in "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

Higher Prices Is Tendency in Milwaukee Theatres

Competition Increases Expenses of Programs, Music and Incidentals in Management of First Class Houses, Compelling Exhibitors to Charge More for Admission

Special to Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 10.

A GRADUAL tendency toward higher prices is beginning to assert itself among the down-town exhibitors. Milwaukee has long been known as the cheapest motion picture town in the country as far as admission prices are concerned and the quantity and quality of programs are taken into consideration.

Eight and even ten reels with a large orchestra, organ and all the various refinements have been given the public for ten cents. This same quality program given under similar conditions in any other city would probably have drawn twice the admission price.

Competition has made the pressure greater and greater, and the local exhibitor has been facing a mounting expense with no increase in revenue possible.

This fact and the opening of the Toy theatre as a twenty-five-cent house seem to have forced the issue, and from present indications Milwaukee will soon have two or even three down-town houses charging more than ten cents. The Alhambra will take a flyer in the twenty-five-cent sphere of admission, commencing Sunday, with Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

The Alhambra with its ten-cent admission and 2,000 capacity has long been the stumbling block that has prevented the other houses from raising prices, as it was possible with the large capacity to give a splendid show with the very best features at ten cents.

But even here the constantly increasing price of service and features, as well as orchestra expenses, is being felt, and it is said that if the "Carmen" experiment is a success the Alhambra will abandon the ten-cent price forever.

The management of the new Merrill theatre, which is now building, is reported to be considering very seriously the charging of at least a fifteen-cent admission fee, and possibly twenty cents. In fact, it is common talk that the Merrill will not be a ten-cent house.

Then there is the talk of the Triangle program coming into one of the local houses.

This, with the fact that the Toy is reporting a gradual increase in business, lead those on the inside to predict that before long the ten-cent houses would be in the minority in the down-town section.

And with the raise in price down town will come a like increase in the neighborhood houses. Many of even the better class of suburban theatres are having a hard fight to get ten cents, some finding it impossible, and it is almost impossible to give the quality of show demanded at a five-cent admission fee without a matinee performance.

Over 300 Theatres Now Use Triangle Film Features

Moss Chain of Houses in New York City Arranges to Take Service, and Capacity Rules Showings at the Spooner in the Bronx and Triangle in Brooklyn

LARGE business and favorable comments from the press have characterized the entry of the Triangle Film Corporation into the service field beginning the week of November 7. The list of theatres using the service now reaches three hundred, and it is growing every week. The Eighty-first Street in Manhattan, the Spooner in the Bronx, and the Triangle in Brooklyn are all playing to gratifying receipts—in fact, capacity is the rule most matinees and nights.

The B. S. Moss chain of theatres in New York will take up the service beginning November 15. Particular interest attaches to the experiment at the Regent, 116th street and Seventh avenue, which is one of the principal uptown playhouses. Other Moss houses where the service will be shown include the Jefferson theatre, Fourteenth street and Third avenue; Eighty-sixth street theatre, Eighty-sixth street and Third avenue; and the Hamilton theatre, 146th street and Broadway.

Most of these houses will split the bill offering "The Lamb" and "A Game Old Knight" the first half week, and "My Valet" and "The Iron Strain" the second half week. Clippings from newspapers in Cleveland, Chicago, Baltimore, Nashville, Houston, Denver, Minneapolis and other cities show that enthusiastic crowds and big applause for the plays and stars have marked the general inauguration of exhibitor's releases.

A picture of decided news interest is "A Submarine Pirate," which the Triangle-Keystone offers at the New York, Chicago and Philadelphia model theatres week of November 14, with releases to the country four weeks later.

This novel four-reeler has been officially passed by Secretary Daniels and the United States Bureau of Navigation.

The Chief of the Bureau was in New York last week to arrange with Kessel and Baumann for showing the play in all the naval recruiting stations.

MOVING WEEK FOR SELIG IN LOS ANGELES

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 10.

This has been moving week for the Selig producing companies heretofore working at the Mission studio at 1900 Allesandro street, Edendale, a suburb of Los Angeles, and beginning with the first of the coming week all filming, with the exception of exteriors, will be done at the zoo studio.

All the technical department, together with props and scenery, have been taken to the zoo plant, and the only part of the production work that is to be carried on at the Mission studio will be that in the laboratories.

It is believed this change will make it more convenient, and production can be carried on more economically.

Director and Technical Expert Join Horsley

Ulysses Davis, Formerly with Centaur, Returns, and Frank Compton, a "Shark" on Making Sets, Goes to West Coast Studio of Bayonne Producer

DAVID HORSLEY has added to his staff at the studio in Los Angeles, Ulysses Davis, director, and Frank Crompton, technical director.

Mr. Davis was with Mr. Horsley before. Six years ago, in the early days of the Centaur Film Company, of which Mr. Horsley is the head, Mr. Davis was a member of the staff, first as a player and later as a director. He remained with Mr. Horsley for twelve months and then became associated with another organization.

Mr. Davis was born in South Amboy, N. J., in 1872. He was educated in the public schools of Chicago, to which city his family had moved, and later took up elocution. His first public appearance was in 1889, as a member of the Boston Concert Company.

Following this he joined the Gifford Comedy Company, and then for eight years following was identified with dramatic productions, playing "heavies" and juvenile leads in traveling and permanent stock companies, such as the Holden Brothers' Players, Maude Atkinson, Louis Morrison and the Aubrey stock company, the latter company having him on the salary list for four seasons.

In 1900 he took out his own company in "Faust," Mr. Davis playing Mephisto, continuing for two years. Following this he was engaged by the Mittenthal Brothers. In 1907 he put out a sketch in vaudeville entitled "The Devil," playing it over the Keith time.

His introduction to film work was made in 1909 at the Centaur Studios in Bayonne, N. J.

Mr. Davis is now at work on his first picture for Mr. Horsley. It is to be a two-reel Centaur Feature entitled "The Hindoo's Way," and was written by Theodosia Harris, co-author of "The Martyrs of the Alamo" and other successes, who is now a member of Mr. Horsley's scenario staff. The picture, which will be played by a large cast of principals and the Bostock animals, will be released in December.

Frank Crompton, Mr. Horsley's other acquisition, has for the past eight years been accepted as one of the best authorities on technical construction in the motion picture business.

He will supervise the technical direction of all the Horsley productions made in Los Angeles.

Mr. Crompton was born in Manchester, England, in 1859. At the age of three his parents moved with him to Australia, where he was educated. After mastering the profession of architecture and upon acquiring a practical experience as a contractor, he went to Africa in 1901.

In 1906 he returned to London, and three months later came to the United States. After traveling throughout the United States to perfect him for the course he had mapped out, he presented himself to the Edison company and was engaged. There he supervised the construction of sets for many pictures, and when it was decided to produce in Cuba, Mr. Crompton was sent along with the company.

He made two trips to Cuba with Edison, and upon the return from the second he was approached by the Imp Company with a most flattering offer, which he accepted. For three years he remained with the Imp Company.

In 1911 he was sent to the Universal plant in Los Angeles and remained there for some time, giving splendid service. Later he was with Keystone and the L-Ko studios.

Mr. Crompton's first effort with Mr. Horsley is in the construction of sets used in "Could a Man Do More?" a three reel Centaur Star Feature, with Crane Wilbur, which is to be released on November 24 on the Mutual program.

THE AMERICAN AND THE KING FOR TRIANGLES IN ST. LOUIS

The American theatre, Seventh and Market streets, St. Louis, and the King's theatre, Delmar and Kingshighway, have been chosen for the two Triangle theatres in Sa. Louis.

The American opened on November 7 with the same policy as that maintained in New York at the Knickerbocker theatre, in Philadelphia at the Chestnut Street Opera House, and in Chicago at the Studebaker, with the exception that a scale of prices from ten to twenty-five cents will prevail in St. Louis.

The two theatres will be under the control of Louis A. Cella and Frank R. Tate, who are widely known in the theatrical circles in St. Louis, and will have the exclusive production of Triangle features there.

Morosco Signs 2-Year Contract with Lenore Ulrich

Actress Who Made Stage Hit in "Bird of Paradise" and Found Favor with Film Public by Her Work in "Kilmeny," Will Appear in His Pictures Exclusively

JUST prior to her departure for her home in Milwaukee, Wis., Lenore Ulrich confirmed the rumor that she had signed a contract with Oliver Morosco, which calls for her exclusive film services for a period of two years.

Miss Ulrich, whose characterization of the title role in Oliver Morosco's "The Bird of Paradise" has gained a name for her among the favorites of the speaking stage, also won the favor of the motion picture public through her portrayal in Mr. Morosco's current film success on the Paramount program, "Kilmeny."

LENORE ULRICH

In her suite at the Astor Hotel, just before leaving New York for her trip West, Miss Ulrich said:

"I am most happy to say that I have signed with Mr. Morosco for two years. There is no one for whom I should rather appear in films than he. His photoplays clearly indicate why I am proud of this new association.

"He insists upon a high class production regardless of cost and his entire plant is run with but one idea in mind—merit. In playing 'Kilmeny' I adored the work. Everyone was so kind and appreciative of one's efforts. I just lived the character. I have many pleasant recollections connected with the production of my first film and the people with whom I became associated, and it is only natural that I am anxious to return to the many good friends and the pleasant work at the studio."

Miss Ulrich will spend the next few weeks at her home in Milwaukee to enjoy a well-deserved rest, after which she will go to the Oliver Morosco studios in Los Angeles for her first motion picture subject under the new agreement. The little star has won thousands of new friends because of her charming personality in "Kilmeny."

HELEN GILMORE ENGAGED FOR VIM COMEDIES

Vim comedies have secured the services of Helen Gilmore. She comes to the Vim Players fresh from Universal Comedies. Prior to that time she was for three seasons with the New York Hippodrome and on the road with the "Count of Luxemburg."

Miss Gilmore will now appear regularly with the Vim funmakers.

KALEM STAR SUSTAINS BRUISES IN DARING LEAP

One of the thrilling scenes in this production shows the blowing up of the car following its derailment.

VARIETY FILM OPENS OFFICES IN DETROIT

The Metro Film branch in Detroit has reported to the police department the theft of a film entitled "Song of the Wage Slave," valued at five hundred dollars. It was stolen on November 3.

TWO GEORGE KLEINE PRODUCTIONS FOR TRADE SHOWING NOVEMBER 14

Two George Kleine productions, recently completed at the big Bronx studios, will be shown at a private exhibition at the Candler theatre Sunday evening, November 14. One is a drama, "The Danger Signal," featuring Arthur Hoops and Ruby Hoffman and founded on the Saturday Evening Post story by Rupert Hughes, "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way."

The other is a comedy entitled "Keep Moving," which, in the opinion of those privileged to witness advance showings, has absolutely no equal in the history of film comedies. Harry Watson, of Bickel and Watson, is the star of "Keep Moving," and he is supported by a galaxy of comedians, which includes his famous partner, George Bickel, Cissy Fitzgerald, Snitz Edwards, Maxfield Moree, Tom Nawn, and the vaudeville team of Crimmons and Gore.

"Keep Moving," according to advance reports, contains hearty roars of laughter.

Bushman and Bayne in Two-Reel Series for 10 Weeks

Metro Stars Will Appear in a Five-Reel Feature Concluding the Serial in Which the Mystery of the Preceding Episodes Will Be Solved

THE Metro Pictures Corporation announces a departure and an enlargement of its program by the addition of two-reel subjects and one-reel comedy subjects for early release, together with a continued and connected series of two-reel pictures in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will be starred.

The latter series will be made by the Quality Pictures Corporation and released through the Metro exchanges throughout the United States, Eastern and Western Canada and Europe.

There will be a run of ten consecutive weeks for this Bushman and Bayne series, and it will be concluded with a five-reel feature in which will be solved the mystery which predominates in the series of two-reelers.

These stories will be distinct and complete in themselves so that the patron of a theatre can see the tenth story, understand and enjoy it without having seen any other story of the series. At the same time there is a master mystery which runs through them all and which is not disclosed until the five-reel finish.

The name of the series has been chosen, but this will not be made public until shortly before the date of the first release. A special and widespread advertising campaign will be inaugurated and the plans for this have been completed within the last ten days.

It is pointed out that these pictures will constitute a series as against a serial, and that it will be different in handling and treatment from all pictures of the same general character that have gone before. Mr. Bushman will appear in a role new to him, but admirably suited to his talents.

His popularity, coupled with the character of the stories that constitute the series, is expected to give the new offering a widespread and immediate popularity. Miss Bayne will be a central figure in a distinguished cast and her role is only less important than Mr. Bushman's.

The new two-real Metro pictures will be a departure from precedent also in that they will be star features. These will be released one each week, in addition to the present larger Metro features, and will have in leading roles other stars following the Bushman two-reelers.

Work has been going forward on these two-reel star features and more than forty subjects have been chosen for production. Those already completed with Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are of exceptional merit, and they will be released at an early date.

The importance of this new departure to Metro exhibitors lies in their being able to present a double bill of star attractions and greatly increase the drawing power of an already strong program.

The one-reel comedies have been given especial attention, and no subject will be released that is not of extraordinary merit. More than eighty subjects have been selected out of more than two thousand that have been examined, and a later and more detailed announcement is promised.

President Rowland, when seen at the Metro's executive offices in the Heidelberg Building, said: "The two-reel star features were arranged for early in August, but we preferred to complete our plans fully before announcing this new departure.

"Personally I believe they will be received with enthusiasm by the exhibitors and the public. The Bushman series is the strongest and the most appealing that I have ever encountered in all my experience in motion pictures, and we all believe that it will set a new high mark for Metro quality.

"The comedies have been a definite need, but until recently we had not been able to secure material that fully satisfied us. I shall have more to say about our new plans at a later date."

Twain's "Prince and Pauper" Coming from Famous

Marguerite Clark, Who Appears in Film Version of Story by America's Great Humorist for Famous Players, Will Appear on Screen in Two Characters Simultaneously

FOR the first time in its history the motion picture screen is to reflect the humor and pathos of Mark Twain, when the Famous Players Film Company stars Marguerite Clark in its adaptation of "The Prince and the Pauper," through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, on November 29.

Though "The Prince and the Pauper" has frequently been seen on the stage, the limitations of the theatre made it always necessary to so construct the story that only each of the characters—either the prince or the pauper—should appear on the scene at one time, as both roles were invariably played by the same person, due to the necessity for the resemblance between the two characters.

In the film version this difficulty is entirely obviated by the use of the double exposure, Miss Clark appearing on the screen in both characters simultaneously. Realizing that the double exposure, merely for its own sake, has long since ceased to interest the public, Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who collaborated in the screen production, have introduced the trick camera work only where Mark Twain's story makes it absolutely essential.

In support of Miss Clark there appear Robert Broderick, William Sorelle, William Barrows, William Frederick and other well-known players.

METRO WRITER, FREDERIC KUMMER, TRAINS DOGS FOR SCENARIO EPISODE

Frederic Arnold Kummer, the well-known playwright and novelist, whose book "One Million Francs" was picturized by the Rolfe-Metro forces as a starring vehicle for William Faversham, and renamed "One Million Dollars," is now spending his leisure time training a group of Airedale dogs for a scene he has written in an original scenario. Mr. Kummer lives on a small farm in Maryland, where the principal products are dogs and fiction.

PARAMOUNT ORGAN EXAMPLE OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN MANUFACTURER AND EXHIBITOR

CO-OPERATION of manufacturer with exhibitor and exchange is an important item in any large motion picture organization, and one that the Paramount Pictures Corporation is handling successfully in Paramount Progress, its house organ. Cuts on this page show the general excellent layout of the publication, as well as some of the aids Paramount supplies exhibitors.

Especially commendable is the campaign conducted by Paramount to get exhibitors to advertise in newspapers, using the cuts supplied free by the manufacturer. In this way the exhibitor links his own advertising to the national advertising campaign which the company is itself conducting.

Shortly after the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, President W. W. Hodkinson decided that the time had come for a house organ. Paramount Progress then came into being.

Its aims were recently expounded by Mr. Hodkinson to a representative of this paper.

"The purpose of Paramount Progress," Mr. Hodkinson said, "is primarily to assist each Paramount exhibitor and exchange. We intend it to be an alert house organ that shall carry out not only the news of the operations at this office, but as well we desire its columns to be a meeting place for all Paramount affiliations where the exhibitors east and west and north and south, may meet and become acquainted; where one will discuss with the other their plans and ideas for the promotion of their interests in exhibiting Paramount Pictures; where each will help the other to develop better theatres, better advertising, and, most important, a better class of patronage. In other words, Paramount Progress will endeavor to give impartially news gathered from the whole field of Paramount activities. In addition we record weekly the movements going forward in this office so that our associates in theatre and exchange may co-operate more quickly and intelligently with our plans, and utilize to their best advantage any ideas that they may glean from the columns of this service journal.

"Our policy is that the contents of Paramount Progress shall be entirely constructive and upbuilding in nature. Briefly, our desire is to assist every one who may read but to injure none. Criticism or condemnation or invidious comparisons either of individual or of company, we consider incompatible with the Paramount idea.

"Upon this principle of fair dealing we invite the Paramount exhibitor and exchange to write us about any matter in connection with Paramount Pictures in which they think we can assist them. We shall always agree if he is right and co-operate to help him. We shall not agree with him if we consider his practises are not in keeping with his present or ultimate prosperity.

"We wish especially to emphasize the department devoted to advertising for Paramount Pictures. Every Paramount exhibitor throughout the United States is spending money for advertising in various forms. Every exhibitor desires to spend his money to the best possible advantage and secure therefor the greatest returns. We wish to help him to make his advertising effective and note with pleasure that many exhibitors avail themselves of the co-operation afforded by the advertising department of Paramount Progress."

Paramount Progress is under the editorship of H. I. Day. All departments of the Paramount organization, home office, producers, exchanges and exhibitors contribute regularly.

WIRELESS DISPLAY BRINGS CROWDS TO SEE PICTURE

W. J. Burgess, manager of the Boyd, Omaha, Neb., was showing "Via Wireless," recently. Besides stringing a miniature wireless apparatus across the street in front of his theatre, he constructed the dynamos, drums, coils and other equipment and had an elaborate display in the lobby of his theatre.

TWO MILWAUKEE PAPERS STILL REFUSE TO REVIEW PHOTOPLAYS

There is a merry war being waged in Milwaukee between the exhibitors and some of the papers there who can not bring themselves around to review a photoplay. The papers have been handling the photoplay houses as straight dramatic attractions, running theatres and photoplays all together on the same page.

DES MOINES PAPERS AND EXHIBITOR CONDUCT NOVEL CONTEST

The Des Moines Register and Leader and Evening Tribune recently conducted, in co-operation with the Garden theatre and commercial advertisers, a contest that proved remarkably successful.

In reality, it was a "live wire" stunt, with the newspaper taking the initiative. Without names, pictures of Paramount stars were run in the two papers, and prizes given those persons who identified the greatest number of players. In each case, the player's picture was inserted in an advertisement of a business house, or the theatre itself. Then the answers were displayed in a window on the main business street of Des Moines.

After the contest was ended, the Register and Tribune supplied matrices of the cuts to some fifteen newspapers over the country.

Harry T. Watts, advertising manager of the papers, reports a heavy increase in motion picture advertising in the last six months, with the prospect of a still greater increase.

POPULARITY CONTESTS HOLD SWAY IN THREE INDIANA TOWNS

The Zenith Motion Picture Company of Chicago, has signed a contract with the Marion Chronicle to stage "A Marion Romance" from talent in Marion, Ind. Prizes are to be offered those receiving the highest number of votes, vote coupons appearing in each issue of the paper and votes are to be given for new subscribers.

The popularity contest conducted by the Victoria Film Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, at Connersville, Ind., was won by Miss Dorothy Volz. The film was shown at the Auditorium theatre at Connersville October 11-12-13, under the title of "Ruth's Romance."

A popularity contest with film stardom in a local production is being conducted by the Crystal theatre at Decatur, Ind.

ILLUSTRATES VALUE OF "FOLLOW-UP" ADVERTISING

Three weeks before the exhibition date of "Mottmain," the Grand Opera House, Titusville, Pa., sent out an imprint of the human hand on a plain sheet of paper to each of the "leading lights" of the town.

The imprint was made with carbon dust, giving it a ghastly appearance. One week later a second notice was sent to the same people. The third week, one day before the exhibition, the same imprint was sent again, but the sheet carried full information as to what it all meant.

The two first notices created a vast amount of comment, and received a large amount of newspaper publicity.

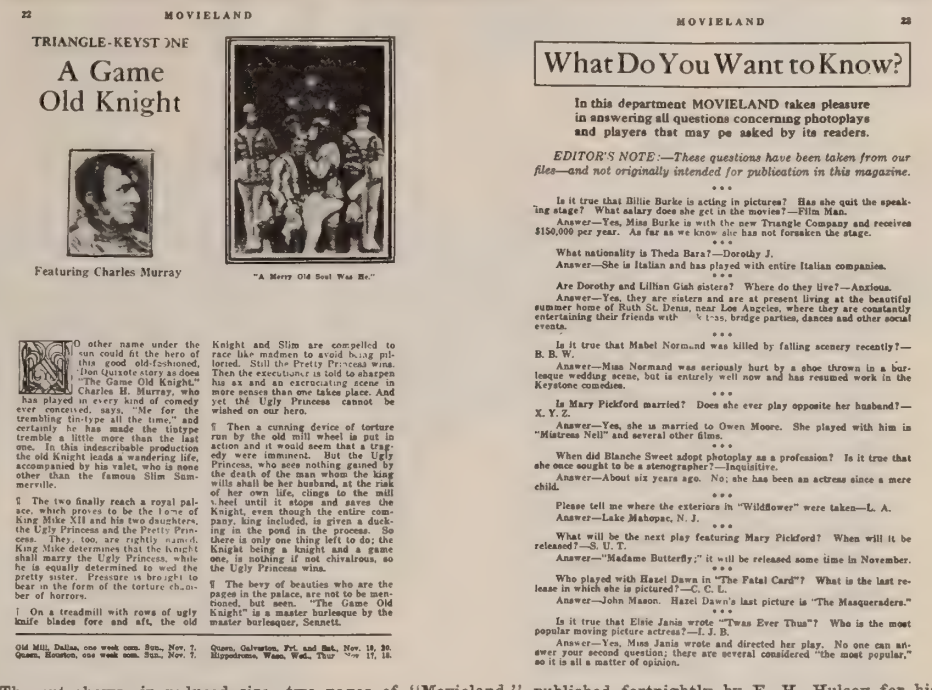
NEBRASKA EXHIBITOR HAS BOOTH AT STATE FAIR

A. W. Ballenger, proprietor of the Dean theatre at York, Neb., pulled an entirely new idea for his part of the country when he had a display booth at the State Fair. On the booth was a sign directing the sightseer where he could find the Dean.

Ph. Goldstone, manager of the World Exchange in Omaha, sent him special posters for decorating the booth. These posters, with hand bills and other advertising matter, made an attraction, not to add that there was a pretty girl in charge of the ticket office.

COMPLETE MAILING LIST BUILDS UP STEADY BUSINESS

E. C. McKee, who recently leased and reopened the Creation theatre at 2010 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, has been successful in building up a good steady business in a house that heretofore was unprofitable, by means of a complete mailing list of every one in the vicinity of the theatre. Mr. McKee employed a woman to solicit every home and learn the names and number of members of each family. Every one was mailed a post card which admitted them to the theatre once. He then put on a good program, and saw that everyone who visited the theatre was courteously treated and went home pleased with the entire program.



With his reopening of the house, he began issuing a four-page folder weekly at the door, and in this connected the advertising campaign of the Mutual corporation with his theatre.

SPECTACULAR ADVERTISING USED BY LOS ANGELES THEATRE

The most spectacular advertising of any Los Angeles theatre was that used by the Superba in advertising the Julia Dean Universal Broadway Feature, "Judge Not." Fifty twenty-four sheet billboard stands were used in connection with a half-page ad in each of the morning newspapers, and the two leading afternoon publications.

The business has been exceptionally good, and every evening the theatre has had a line extending from fifty to two hundred feet from the main entrance until after the beginning of the nine o'clock showing.

TRIANGLE-KEYSTONE

A Game Old Knight

Featuring Charles Murray

"A Merry Old Soul Was He."

NO other name under the sun could fit the hero of this good old-fashioned, Don Quixote story as does "The Game Old Knight," Charles H. Murray, who has played in every kind of comedy ever conceived, says, "Me for the trembling tin-type all the time," and certainly he has made the tintype tremble a little more than the last one. In this indescribable production the old Knight leads a wandering life, accompanied by his valet, who is none other than the famous Slim Summerville.

¶ The two finally reach a royal palace, which proves to be the home of King Mike XII and his two daughters, the Ugly Princess and the Pretty Princess. They, too, are rightly named. King Mike determines that the knight shall marry the Ugly Princess, while he is equally determined to wed the pretty sister. Pressure is brought to bear in the form of the torture chamber of horrors.

¶ On a treadmill with rows of ugly knife blades fore and aft, the old Knight and Slim are compelled to race like madmen to avoid being pilloried. Still the Pretty Princess wins. Then the executioner is told to sharpen his ax and an excruciating scene in more senses than one takes place. And yet the Ugly Princess cannot be wished on our hero.

¶ Then a cunning device of torture run by the old mill wheel is put in action and it would seem that a tragedy were imminent. But the Ugly Princess, who sees nothing gained by the death of the man whom the king wills shall be her husband, at the risk of her own life, clings to the mill wheel until it stops and saves the Knight, even though the entire company, king included, is given a ducking in the pond in the process. So there is only one thing left to do; the Knight being a knight and a game one, is nothing if not chivalrous, so the Ugly Princess wins.

GHENT, NORFOLK, RUNS A NOVEL QUESTION CONTEST

The Ghent theatre of Norfolk, Va., a Paramount House, recently ran a question contest which, it has been announced, was won by F. L. Russell, of 908 Redgate avenue.

The question was: What is the greatest advantage of the neighborhood house? and Mr. Russell's answer follows:

Good, pure, fresh air;
Clean, comfortable seats;
And the people one meets
Make the Ghent Picture Show
The Best Place to go."

NO more important serial announcement has ever been made to Exhibitors than this great achievement of the Universal in presenting a live, red blooded series-serial of modern American life.

Another huge scoop is scored by the Universal in securing the collaboration of EIGHTEEN of the most popular writers of the day. Heretofore it has been considered well worth a pot of money to secure the services of one well known writer, or two at the most, because Exhibitors and producers alike know the tremendous drawing power of a popular author's name.

Think then what it means to you to be able to show a serial by EIGHTEEN writers whose names are known to every fan in the land. Each and every one of them has a tremendous following as author of "best selling" books and as contributors to our greatest

Special to Motion Picture News

Paris, Nov. 8.

"WE can do without American films." This has been the cry of a good many trade journals in England, France and even in Italy for the last few months. Our contemporary, The Cinema, reprints an article which appeared in The Motion Picture News, in which this paper strongly appeals to the American producers to take advantage of the present situation in Europe, not to wait until the war is over, but to do their utmost by gaining a strong footing in the European film markets, where the production at the present time amounts nearly to nothing. In answer to this appeal, The Cinema gives the following answer:

"Our American friends are greatly mistaken if they really believe that we are not producing any films since the beginning of the war. We are producing, and not much less than before the war. What we do is to keep our good films and we will not release them until the war is over. We are showing now a great number of American films. Our reason for doing it is "to feed our audiences with so many American films, until they get disgusted." This is what The Cinema thinks of American films.

Cine-Journal Praises American Films

In answer to this, I can do no better than reproduce a letter which is published this week in another of our trade journals, Ciné-Journal. It runs this way: "I have heard so many recriminations and complaints raised lately about showing so many American films at our kinemas, and beg to ask you to kindly insert a few lines in answer to these recriminations. Let us have a look at this week's program of the general showrooms. We find that twelve American films have been shown to the exhibitors. Everybody will agree with me that nine out of the twelve were absolutely first rate; the three others may be quoted 'passable.' Of the nine very good ones, there were three comic films, and surely no one will contradict me, when I say they are comics. They are absolutely irresistible if not extravagant. One was a most interesting documentary film. Three were highly interesting dramas, and the two last ones very nice sentimental stories.

"Out of 13,678 meters of novelty films exhibited to the tradespeople, 5,459 meters were American imported. This means more than a third of the production. Why is it, and whose fault is it? There is no doubt that of foreign films shown in France, the American ones are in forefront. Before the war the import of American films was much bigger than it is now. Why? Well, let us see the reason.

"In my opinion there are many reasons. I will enumerate only a few.

"1. Their big advantage is in having an ideal light, endless space, some wonderful sites and landscapes that can not be found in the neighborhood of Paris.

"2. Their artists know how to handle a horse, how to mount it and how to ride.

"3. When trains and steamers are seen on the American films, they are real, imposing Pullman trains and real Transatlantics.

"4. The children seen on their films, are beautiful looking, playing like artists. They are gracious and don't look all the time at the operator for the sign as to what they are next to do.

"5. The women they have in their films, are fine looking and real artists.

"Are we doing the same thing in our films? In most of our films an artist can not manage a horse, does not know how to mount it, and as to the riding, we had better say nothing about this. Trains in our films look like miserable vehicles and as to Transatlantics I have not seen any yet on any of our films. Children in our films are seldom to be seen, and those that are shown are children and ought not to be shown at all.

French Actors Criticized

"With regard to our artists, we see Mlle. X, who is rather bad looking; Mlle. Y, who has no figure at all, and Mlle. Z, who dresses very badly, and the kinema being a spectacle for the eyes only, it is a big mistake to film women who ought never to show themselves on a screen. I will admit that some of the comic scenarios are often lacking in interest, but the excellence of their artists, is absolutely above criticism, their humor is irresistible, their tricks are astonishing, they are genuinely comic and no one can imitate them.

"Our great comic artists look like gentlemen, but more like manikins on the screen. They believe that people ought to laugh looking at them, but really they are not comic and can not make us laugh any more. But what about the American comics? Are not their costumes enough to make one laugh? Every movement of theirs is funny and eccentric and besides they may be termed 'first rate acrobats.'

"I will conclude, that in my opinion the American films are an absolute necessity to us; we could not do without them. Before talking of 'no American films,' get our producers to do what they do, and our artists to imitate the Americans. I am afraid that we shall have to wait a long time yet."

As seen by these two articles in two different trade journals, opinion about American films is divided.

A most interesting judgment has been rendered this week by the Paris courts concerning the film trade.

Some time ago, Mr. Harry, one of our film dealers, bought a Keystone film called "Caught in a Cabaret" from the Western Import Company, Inc., London. He rented the film, and when it was first exhibited at one of our kinemas, Mr. Haik, the French representative of the Western Import Co., had it stopped, pretending that no one had a right to sell, rent or exhibit a film belonging to his firm unless it was bought through him. He took proceedings against Harry for heavy damages. Mr. Harry objected to the claim, saying that he bought this film in London, and as there was no restriction on the bill, he was entitled to dispose of the same, and he naturally claimed counter damages.

The court decided that Mr. Haik is nothing but a buyer of the films from the Western Import Co.; that he is not the editor nor the author of this film; that he has not been able to prove that he had secured the exclusive rights of exhibiting this very film in France, and that he had no right to stop the film. He was compelled to pay Harry 500 francs damages and all costs.

Current Films in Paris

I have had an opportunity to see a good many interesting films this week. One of the best was "Les Flambeaus," from the well known play of Henry Bataille. It was screened with prominent artists like Me. Lara of the Comedie, Mlle. Cormon of the Gymnase, Leitner and Dumeny.

Everybody is anxious to see the war topicals of this week. They are undoubtedly the best yet seen. They show most vividly the last battle of the Champagne. Thousands of shells can be seen bursting over the trenches, and at the finish over 20,000 prisoners and hundreds of guns taken from the Germans are seen.

Last night saw the opening of the new kinema installed by Mr. Lordier at the Folies Dramatiques. Only two films made up the program. One was called "Para dis" (no one could make out why). I am surprised that such a film was shown by this clever manager. The other one was "Fille du Boche." This is certainly very good and most interesting. It was greatly appreciated by the large audience. I feel sure that a "Charlot" was greatly missed by the public.

SAUNDERS, METRO, TOURS NEW YORK

After making a whirlwind tour of New York State in an automobile, E. M. Saunders, general manager of the New York Metro Film Service, Inc., distributors of Metro feature productions, says he was surprised to find such a universal demand for big feature pictures, even in the smaller towns. Mr. Saunders went by train to Buffalo, where he was joined by C. A. Taylor, manager of the Metro branch in that city, and together they spent two weeks in the tour before returning to New York City.

E. M. SAUNDERS, NEW YORK METRO MANAGER

"There is no doubt that the feature production is to be the big thing in motion pictures," Mr. Saunders said. "Everywhere I went I found a demand for the good feature, a demand almost equal to a plea. Even in towns as small as nine hundred inhabitants I found they wanted five and six-reel pictures, and that they can show them at a profit to appreciative patrons. I was really surprised to find this condition.

"As a result of my tour, which was made not only to meet the exhibitors personally, but to become acquainted, at first hand, with local conditions, I closed a number of attractive contracts for Metro pictures.

TAUBE LEAVES THE UNIVERSAL VANCOUVER OFFICE FOR EAST

S. B. Taube, former manager of the Universal exchange in Vancouver, left with his family last week for the East.

After visiting with his parents in Toronto, Mr. Taube will proceed to New York, where it is said he will be assigned to one of the Eastern Universal offices.

R. M. Watkins is managing the Metro Branch of Chattanooga, Tenn., and is doing good business.

WITH THOSE V-L-S-E STANDARDIZED SALES TALKS ANYBODY CAN SELL FILM

ONE of the features of the sales system of the V-L-S-E—or of "The new religion," as it is more generally known in that organization—is a standardized sales talk, whereby any member of the force, down literally, to the office boy, is in a position to apply the same arguments as the highest priced salesman.

The advantage of such a system was interestingly demonstrated the other day when Miss J. Blair, a bookkeeper in the Washington Branch office of the Big Four, completed one of the most difficult sales with which that office has had to deal.

Its manager and his co-workers had been hammering for a long time, upon an exhibitor in a small Maryland town. The exhibitor wanted V-L-S-E features, but he was not willing to give the rental asked.

Recently, the exhibitor telephoned to the Washington office, for the purpose of making another effort to get that exchange to meet his figures. In the absence of the V-L-S-E representative, the young lady bookkeeper accepted the call.

There ensued a very spirited and intelligent argument, during which the bookkeeper marshalled the principal points of the organization's standardized sales talks in her support, with the result that she succeeded in inducing the man to pay the full price, and in addition, booked him for a regular run of V-L-S-E features at that price.

TRIANGLE BUILDING ERECTED FOR DEPARTMENT TO A FLOOR IN QUAKER CITY

THE Triangle Film Corporation is now comfortably installed in its new Philadelphia home.

Its offices at 1227-29 Vine street mark a new departure in film quarters for Philadelphia, being the first large firm to acquire a building erected for them, with every department on one floor.

The building occupies a space 40 x 100 feet and is well equipped with every up to date appliance in reel efficiency, including a large vault for the fireproof storing of films.

There are four offices beautifully furnished with neat rugs and mahogany furniture and white brass fittings set off the whole. The buff walls and green floor coverings complete the harmony of triangle coloring.

These are featured also in the large plate glass doors and windows, on which the well known Triangle trade mark is painted in its proper colors.

The large poster room and booking department are in the rear of the offices.

No projection room is needed, as the Chestnut street Opera House productions give all exhibitors a chance to see the Triangle releases in good time.

J. H. Butner, manager of the Triangle office, reports an auspicious opening of the new program in this territory.

FAMOUS PLAYERS IN NEW ENGLAND EXPLOITING "AN ALIEN," "HYPOCRITES" AND "ETERNAL CITY"

THE Famous Players Film Company of New England, in addition to being distributors of Paramount Pictures in that district, has taken on four special master productions which are not Paramount. These four are being advertised by the company on a special blue sheet entitled "Hot Shot."

The features are George Beban in "An Alien," produced by Thomas H. Ince; "Hypocrites," the four reel film by Lois Weber; Pauline Frederick in "The Eternal City," by Hall Caine, and Aylesworth's motion pictures of wild animal life and hunting big game.

To carry out the idea of giving the Paramount news picture exhibitors from two to three hundred feet each week of picture news of events of importance in New England, F. S. Dart, an expert camera man, has been engaged.

The exhibitors using Paramount throughout New England are urged to give the Famous Players Company in Boston advance notice of all events of interest in their localities, so that Mr. Dart may be on the job. There is a good demand for the new Paramount news pictures, and the new form in which they are put out is receiving compliments from all parts of that territory.

"DAMAGED GOODS" CONTRACT HOLDS RECORD IN MUTUAL OFFICE

Manager Miller of the Indianapolis Mutual Film Corporation, has announced that the largest contract has been signed in the history of the Indianapolis office for "Damaged Goods," which has been booked solid for fifty days at $100 a day. He is delighted with his success.

BALSDON LENDS FILMS TO RHODE ISLAND PRISON

Manager Balsdon of the Big Four exchange in Boston has become a friend of the men in prisons. Several times lately he has sent films to the Rhode Island state prison for the entertainment of the men. Recently he attended one of these entertainments in person.

"I believe I will take up this sort of work," he said to the NEWS man, "as a hobby. Think of the satisfaction you could get out of helping those men. It would smooth over all the little rough places in the day if you could think that you were giving an evening now and then to making the lot of unfortunate fellow beings a bit easier, a bit happier, a bit more cheerful as to the future."

Not that Mr. Balsdon has not enough to do now. An addition is being built to his private office. The big force at the V-L-S-E headquarters on Church street is always on the jump, and always with work ahead. Recently the office entertained Capt. Jack Crawford, the poet scout who figures in "The Battle Cry of Peace," which continues to do good business at the Majestic theatre.

ROSENTHAL IS WITH ALL-FEATURE BOOKING AGENCY

After seven years of activity in the motion picture affairs of Chicago, Al Rosenthal has yielded to the call of Broadway and joined the forces of the All Feature Booking Agency at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York.

Starting with the Virginia Amusement Company of Chicago in 1908, Mr. Rosenthal was connected with the successful establishment of the Jefferson, Arch and Virginia theatres, later managing the Apollo theatre for the Louise Amusement Company.

When Warner's Features came into being, he joined forces with the Chicago branch of that organization, being one of the first feature roadmen to cover the territory of the Middle West.

From the Warner Exchange Al Rosenthal moved to the World Film, later becoming identified with Metro. He is now receiving a royal welcome from his many friends in New York and meeting for the first time scores of business associates with whom he has had only a 'phone, wire and mail acquaintance for many years.

MUTUAL "COMRADES" HOLD MEETING AT SEATTLE

C. S. Woody, who was recently appointed overseeing manager of Portland, Spokane and Seattle offices for the Mutual, called a meeting of the Mutual comrades at Seattle to talk over advertising and distribution of the program. Among those present were: M. E. Paulson, auditor for the Mutual; W. J. Drummond, manager of the Spokane office, J. E. Reed, local manager; C. S. Woody, overseeing manager; L. Kirkpatrick, salesman out of Portland, Ore., and Jay Harrington, salesman out of Seattle.

Jay Harrington and L. Kirkpatrick left for the Spokane territory, where they will remain for several weeks under Manager Drummond.

M. E. Paulson, Mutual auditor, left for Vancouver, B. C., where he will remain for two weeks.

The Mutual has 84 32-sheet stands of paper on the billboards of Seattle.

QUALITY ESTABLISHES BRANCH IN CHARLESTON, W. VA.

Max W. Herring, of the Quality Film Company, 404 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, returned from a ten-days' trip in West Virginia and while away established a branch office at Charleston, W. Va., leaving M. H. Horowitz in charge.

Exhibitors of West Virginia will find the many subjects handled by the Quality within easy reach.

TRIANGLE OPENS OFFICES IN PITTSBURGH

The Triangle Company has opened its offices in the Penn avenue district, Pittsburgh, Pa., and has been getting a large amount of business. The company is not located in the regular Film Row section, but is a little off the beaten trail, and yet it is drawing the exhibitors to its offices.

The Triangle films are shown at the Grand Opera House, which is the largest and best equipped theatre in this section for the showing of photoplays. The theatre until several months ago was running nothing but vaudeville, but decided that it was time to get into the motion picture business, and Harry Davis made the change.

PARAMOUNT'S ATLANTA MANAGER REPORTS BIG GROWTH IN PICTURES SALES BY HIS OFFICE

C. E. TANDY, head of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company of Atlanta, whose territory embraces North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Florida, paid a visit to New York the past week. He came to make arrangements for an additional print of Paramount pictures in order to meet the increase in business which has developed in his territory.

"I attribute this condition," Mr. Tandy said, "to three things. First, the wonderfully consistent merit of Paramount pictures. They are the keynote to the success of all Paramount exchanges. Second, to the fact that there has been a great change in business conditions in the South of late. Cotton is now being sold in large quantities; Money is easy and people are beginning to spend. I have never seen a more promising situation in the Southern States than that in which I find myself at present. Third, the great Paramount national advertising and publicity campaigns. To the latter I attribute 25 per cent. of the great increase of business done by our office.

"Such pictures as 'Carmen' are bound to raise the standard of motion picture production and to increase the regard in which the Paramount program is held by photoplay fans."

Mr. Tandy has now succeeded in closing up all the available towns in his territory except those of five thousand population and under, and he is signing them up rapidly.

"As I said before," he continued, "I attribute this to better business conditions in the South and an increasing appreciation on the part of both exhibitors and motion picture patrons of the true aims of the producers and distributors of Paramount pictures. The close co-operation between all the departments at the home office and the exchange is also largely responsible for the growing efficiency of all branches."

Arriving on Friday morning, Mr. Tandy left New York for Atlanta on Saturday afternoon.

"NEWS" REVIEWS AND AD PAGES GUIDE EXHIBITORS

Manager Ferd Adler of the Exclusive Film Exchange in Omaha was remarking the other day on how the exhibitors are coming to depend more and more on the film reviews and advertisements in the trade papers for advice on how and what to book.

"Here is a letter from Manager C. C. Vehrens of the Family theatre at Davenport, Ia., ordering 'The Mother's Confession,'" he said, by way of proof. "In this letter he sends a full-page advertisement clipped from MOTION PICTURE NEWS and says if it is as good as that, send it. That manager had certainly read the reviews as well as the advertisements.

"Knowing the company, the trade paper and the picture, as I did, I did not hesitate to book him for the film. It is getting so the exhibitor does not buy hit or miss, he buys with the intention of each and every picture having a lasting effect upon his reputation, upon his profits.

"If the trade paper advises him correctly, if the exchange manager advises him correctly, if the salesman advises him correctly, he will come to them again for advice. If they do not, they will not be considered the next time he seeks advice. It behooves every one of us to be straight with the exhibitor, and I am glad when I see a trade paper that is straight with them as well as with us.

"I have had occasion to notice the increasing number of exhibitors who send in pages clipped from MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

PICTURE PLAYHOUSE MAKES ENTRY INTO FRISCO FIELD

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., plans to establish Pacific Coast headquarters at San Francisco at an early date, and a suitable location is now being sought by its representative, E. H. Emmick, who arrived there this week on that mission.

Quarters will be opened in what is considered the best exchange district in the city.

UNITED PROMOTES MOORE TO DENVER MANAGERSHIP

R. C. Moore, assistant in the Denver office of the United Film Service, has been promoted to manager in the Denver office, succeeding Carl Stern. Mr. Moore has a wide acquaintance in his territory.

SELZNICK CONFERS WITH RATZ IN INDIANAPOLIS

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, who was in Chicago last week to attend a meeting of the branch managers of the company, stopped off in Indianapolis last Saturday on his way from Chicago to New York. He had a conference with W. A. Ratz, the local manager of the World Film Corporation.

The World Company's Indianapolis office is being remodeled. The company has leased the whole third floor of the Willoughby building, in North Meridian street, and the company is enlarging its quarters. The shipping room will be right in front of the elevator.

At the right of the shipping room will be the poster room. New shelving and a new method of handling posters is being put in, in order to keep the posters in the best possible shape. The cashier's room will be at the left of the shipping room, with a small reception room in front.

The main office, in front and Mr. Ratz's private office in the rear, also will be at at the left. The walls are being redecorated and new furniture put in. When completed the offices will be one of the most up-to-date film exchanges in the city.

POPE OF CONTINENTAL MAKES PENNSYLVANIA TRIP

J. W. Pope, Jr., is taking a trip to Pottsville, Wilkes-Barre and other Pennsylvania towns on business connected with the Continental Feature Film, of which he is Philadelphia manager.

The latest release of Mutual Masterpieces, handled by the Continental here, "Inspiration," with Audrey Munson and Thomas Curran, will be given a private screening in a few days, at which the press representatives will be asked to give frank expressions of opinion.

C. G. Powell, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has just returned from a business trip to Harrisburg, where a branch office under his control is located. In "The Brink" and "The House with Nobody in It," are two Mutual pictures which had narrow escapes at the censors' hands, the first adverse judgment having been reversed on an appeal, and a second review by the board.

METRO ENLARGES ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT IN PITTSBURGH

Advertising help for exhibitors has been one of the big features of the Metro service in Pittsburgh, and as a result the company has found it necessary to enlarge the space occupied by the advertising department. Joseph S. Skirboll, the general manager, has devised a number of ingenious devices for attracting the attention of the public and has added them to the Metro service, with the result that the business of the company has materially increased during the past few months.

The second floor of the Metro building has been taken over at 212 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, and will be used exclusively for the advertising department. It is said the company plans a national campaign in advertising and will use magazines, newspapers and outside advertising, and the result will be that the various Metro offices throughout the country will find more room needed for the additional advertising matter coming into the offices.

Mr. Skirboll's idea is to play the game a little ahead of time instead of waiting until the last minute, and he therefore has added the additional space to his exchange before the rush was felt.

V-L-S-E PALS INCREASES SIZE TO EIGHT PAGES

V-L-S-E Pals, published weekly at Seattle for exhibitors using Big Four productions in Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho and western Canada, began on August 14, 1915, as a small four-page sheet, 6x9. Three weeks later it was necessary to increase the size, and now another increase has brought the publication up to eight pages, ten and one-half by fourteen inches.

Since Motion Picture News first reviewed this enterprising exchange magazine, it has been greatly improved both in contents and in make-up. It is as live as ever, crammed with all sorts of publicity hints, letters from managers and publicity men in the territory, good illustrations and editorials written in a practical vein on some phase of the picture business.

Managing Editor Tom North gives originality first place in selecting material for his publication. This is a winning policy. The growth of the paper shows it.

IN VANCOUVER FILM CIRCLES

C. H. Montgomery, traveling representative of V-L-S-E, Inc., visited Vancouver recently.

George L. Broy and Sam W. Whitehead have arrived in Vancouver with "The Spoilers," which they are handling throughout Canada. Good business is reported, especially in the Western provinces.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

"FORBIDDEN CITY" AND "BUZZARD'S SHADOW," BOTH 5 REEL MASTERPICTURES, READY IN DECEMBER

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Mutual Film Corporation of two important screen productions scheduled for release the first two weeks in December. Each will be comprised of five reels and will be released as Mutual Masterpictures. These productions, one of which was screened by the American Film Company, will present a galaxy of noted screen players, prominent among them being Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Louise Glaum, Hershall Mayall, Charles Ray, J. Frank Burke, Harry Von Meter, William Stowell, Dick La Reno, Alice Ann Rooney and various others.

In addition to these two exceptional productions the Mutual also announces the release for December 8, in the regular Mutual program, of a three-reel feature, presenting Dorothy Gish in the title role.

First of the two masterpicture releases referred to in the opening paragraph, "The Forbidden City" will go to the public December 2. Louise Glaum will be presented in the leading role. "The Forbidden City," in five parts, is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, gifted writer of scenarios and the author of several Masterpictures, notably "The Reward," "The Toast of Death," "The Mating," and "The Cup of Life."

Second of the Mutual Masterpictures for release early in December is "The Buzzard's Shadow," in five parts, featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison. This Masterpicture will go to the public December 9. The piece deals with army life at one of the frontier posts.

Aside from the exceptionally novel theme of the piece, "The Buzzard's Shadow" is important for the reason that it presents Mr. Lockwood in the role of a Western character, that of an army scout. It is Mr. Lockwood's first appearance in a character of this type. Thomas Ricketts directed.

Miss Allison as Alice Corbett, a daughter of the plains, also makes her initial appearance in a role of this type, in support of Mr. Lockwood.

Miss Gish is the star of "Her Mother's Daughter," a feature release on the regular Mutual program, December 8.

"ROSE OF THE ALLEY," METRO, FOR MARY MILES MINTER

Little Mary Miles Minter, the youngest of stars on either the stage or screen, who is appearing in Metro feature pictures, has begun work on another big production in five parts, called "The Rose of the Alley." It is being produced by Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., for release on the Metro program. Charles Horan is directing the new Minter picture.

Miss Minter has just completed the wonderful five-part production of "Barbara Frietchie," another Metro feature, produced by the Popular Plays and Players.

BETTY GRAY IN A "PEG O' MY HEART" THEME FOR UNIVERSAL

"Sunshine and Shadow" is the name of an Imp-Universal picture soon to be released in which Betty Gray is starred. It was written by her director, Brinsley Shaw, who produced the picture.

It is in two reels and Miss Gray reveals a sort of "Peg o' My Heart" type with an original portrayal. Harry Spingler plays opposite Miss Gray in this picture.

COOMBS, METRO STAR, KNOWS WAR ON AND OFF STAGE

Guy Coombs, the well-known dramatic actor, has been playing soldier parts for more than four years, and probably knows more real war stuff than any artist of the screen or stage. He has just completed the big part of Captain Trumbull in "Barbara Frietchie," a five-part feature produced by the Popular Plays and Players, for release on the Metro program.

COMEDY SUBJECTS PREDOMINATE IN VITAGRAPHS FOR THIRD WEEK OF NOVEMBER

COMEDY subjects will predominate during the third week of November in the releases as announced by the Vitagraph Company.

On Monday there will be two pictures released, a Cyrus Townsend Brady story, "Heights of Hazard," and one of the Sonny Jim series, by Elaine Sterne. "Heights of Hazard" is a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature introducing Charles Richman in a cast that includes Eleanor Woodruff, Charles Kent and Frank Holland in the principal characters. Dr. Brady has given several unusual twists to his story. Taking as his theme the lack of romance in American life. He has his leading characters portray scenes in the so-called age of chivalry, and later re-enact them in a modern setting, using the advantages of later-day inventions to accentuate with telling effect that human nature has not changed since the days of Adam and Eve.

Bobby Connelly, Mabel Kelly, Edwina Robbins and Logan Paul enact the principal characters under the direction of Tefft Johnson, in the second Monday release, "Sonny Jim and the Great American Game."

Tuesday, November 16, a two-part feature is announced in "The Gypsy Trail," presenting Antonio Moreno, Frankie Mann, Donald Hall, Josephine Earle and Nellie Anderson in contrasting characterizations. It is a story of gypsy life, redolent of the atmosphere of that freedom characteristic of the wandering tribes.

Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will appear in the Wednesday release in their presentation of "The Counts," a one-part comedy written and produced by Ralph W. Ince. In "The Counts" Mr. Ince uses as his theme American wives for American husbands, and by burlesquing the arrival of a distinguished nobleman, who aspires to the hand of a wealthy American girl, not only extracts comedy situations, but introduces Miss Stewart and Mr. Williams in characters that are congenial. Albert Roccardi, Hughie Mack, William Dangman and Donald MacBride are the chief assistants of the two Vitagraph stars in the funmaking.

A new star in filmdom, Jewell Hunt, will make her initial bow to moving picture fans in "A Motorcycle Elopement," a one-part comedy, announced for Thursday, November 18. Miss Hunt in her portrayal of the love-sick maiden is assisted by Arthur Cozine in the enactment of the story, which was produced under the direction of C. Jay Williams.

Another interesting announcement included in the week's program is the regular "Sidney Drew Day" release, "Diplomatic Henry," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are cast as a pair of newlyweds. Florence Natol assists materially in the development of the story.

The program is further enriched on Saturday by a Broadway star feature, entitled "Heredity," by Seymour Galland and produced under the direction of William Humphrey. It is a dramatic story that tells of a child, a girl, adopted by a wealthy couple, who presents a remarkable study for criminologists. Carolyn Birch, Rose Tapley, Thomas Mills, Templer Saxe, Jay Dwiggins and Denton Vane are the Vitagraph players prominent in its enactment.

KALEM TO OFFER FOUR NEW COMEDIES FEATURING ETHEL TEARE AND BUD DUNCAN

AMONG the comedies which Kalem Company is to issue during the latter part of November and the first two weeks in December are four which merit a word. Although Lloyd V. Hamilton is still on the sick list and hence was unable to take part in these productions, no comedies which have borne the Kalem trade mark have been more replete with genuine humor, say advance reports.

SCENE FROM "OH! DOCTOR" (Kalem Comedy)

The first is "Oh Doctor!" a burlesque released Tuesday, November 23, which features Ethel Teare and Bud Duncan. It tells of how a couple of plumbers called to repair some leaky pipes in a physician's house, masquerade as physicians when fair Pansy, a patient, enters. The fact that the real doctor is away at the time enables the mechanics to carry on their deception. The medico's return, however, exposes the plumbers.

"Only a Country Girl," to be issued on November 30, also features Miss Teare and diminutive Bud. In it a rivalry is waged between two shiftless swains for Ethel's hand. The rivals forget all about their love when an opportunity to steal a bankroll belonging to Ethel's father presents itself. In the end after many thrilling situations, they lose both girl and money.

In "Minnie the Tiger" photoplay patrons and exhibitors will find one of the most original comedies of the year, it is said. This laugh-bringer, the first of the new comedies produced under the direction of William Beaudine, is to be released Tuesday, December 7.

"Almost a King" is said to be one of the most magnificently-staged comedies ever issued by the Kalem Company. Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare once more show their laugh-creating abilities, the former as a hobo who finds his pal elevated to a kingship, while Miss Teare enacts the role of the ruler's favorite dancer. A jealous queen and some unruly subjects who desire to see his majesty shuffle off this mortal coil, help the fun along. This subject is scheduled for release Tuesday, December 14.

WITH "PRIMROSE PATH" FEATURES GLADYS HANSON, HAL FORDE, COOPER WILLIS, WILLIAM WELSH AND NINA BLAKE

"THE PRIMROSE PATH," by Bayard Veiller, has been adapted to motion picture by M. B. Havey, and filmed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company as a five-reel Broadway Universal Feature in which Gladys Hanson is featured, supported by Hal Forde, H. Cooper Willis, William J. Welsh and Nina Blake.

The story is that of a young country girl who elopes with an artist, gets married and goes to Paris, where they are happy for a time, when poverty overtakes them and the young husband falls ill. Joan, the wife, cannot make any money while her husband is dying for the lack of food and medicine.

SCENE FROM "THE PRIMROSE PATH"
(Universal)

An art dealer has seen Joan and has fallen in love with her, much to her disgust. He offers her money to come to his rooms, which she refuses, but later, driven by love for her husband and the great need they are both in, goes to the art dealer. Ned gets better, and Joan suggests that they come to America. In this new land success comes to them through Cartwright, a millionaiare, and his daughter, Helen, who has become attracted to the good looking young artist.

Joan realizes that Ned is being led away from her, but prays that he may yet see his error. Cartwright buys a picture from Ned called "The Primrose Path," for which Joan was the model. Cartwright later installs Ned in a fine studio, and realizing that Joan would be out of place there, he suggest that she remain in their cheap flat for a time. This almost breaks her heart, but she bows to his decision.

Refusing Ned's support, she poses for a livelihood. In an art school in which Ned has been made director, she comes face to face with her husband. He upbraids her for being a model, and she turns on him saying that it is the only thing she could do.

Helen arrives on the scene to take Ned away to a dance. He slips out and the women face each other. "Why, aren't you the girl in "The Primrose Path," says Helen. "Yes—and I'm also Ned's wife," retorts Joan.

Cartwright, seeing that Helen is fond of Ned, decides to buy off Ned's wife, and has her come to his home. He tells Ned that his wife is coming to receive money for her divorce.

When Joan comes, the millionaire offers her $100,000.

Up to this time Ned had thought that the money she had procured while in Paris came from her father, but when he heard the truth, he rushed out and took her by the hand, pleading forgiveness. Joan realizes that he is sincere and together they leave the mansion to find happiness in each other's love.

MARQUERITE SNOW, FROM COAST, IN NEW YORK FOR WORK IN EAST

Marguerite Snow, the Metro star, has arrived in New York from Hollywood, Cal., accompanied by the Quality Pictures Corporation company of players, which she will head in future Metro features.

Hereafter, Miss Snow will work in the East. "Rosemary," a five-part picturization of the play of the same name, has just been finished at the Quality-Metro studio in Hollywood, and Miss Snow appears in the stellar role.

Paul Gilmore is featured with her, and the supporting cast includes Frank Bacon. Previous to her appearance in "Rosemary," Miss Snow was co-starred with Francis X. Bushman in Quality-Metro features, the last picture they made together being "The Silent Voice."

THRILLING ELEPHANT AND LION STUNTS IN TWO "STANLEY" PICTURES, HORSLEY

TWO SCENES FROM "STANLEY AMONG THE VOODOO WORSHIPPERS" RELEASED DECEMBER 2
(Centaur-Mutual)

AN instance of the thrills provided in the Centaur Features, which are animal subjects in an advanced form, is shown from the two accompanying reproductions of scenes from "Stanley Among the Voo Doo Worshippers," an episode of the "Stanley in Africa" series, which is founded on the Stanley expedition sent into Africa by the New York Herald to recover Livingston, the lost missionary, and which is to be released December 2, on the Mutual program.

The story, in brief, concerns the efforts of the Stanley party to rescue Ada, the sweetheart of Wilson, the reporter, who is a member of the expedition, from the slave traders into whose hands she has fallen.

A guide attempts to effect Ada's escape, but is caught by the king of the traders, who condemns him to die. A particularly savage elephant is brought forward and, encircling the man's body with his trunk, throws him into a tree.

Stunned and weakened the man falls to the ground and as he lies prostrate the elephant walks over his form as if to crush him.

Later in the story Jack causes Ada's release. With Ada and her companions, he makes into the jungle, which offers a degree of safety against discovery. Jack goes in search of food and during his absence a lion appears over a rocky ledge immediately in back of Ada. Before she has a chance to heed the warning cry of her companions the lion springs upon her, bearing her heavily to the ground.

FLORENCE TURNER TO IMPERSONATE FILM FAVORITES FOR MINA

The fact that Florence Turner is to appear in an MinA Comedy should prove of more than ordinary interest to the exhibitor. "Florence Turner Impersonates Film Favorites" will be the title of the MinA release of November 25.

A pioneer of the screen, Florence Turner, 14 years ago started to gain popularity as a Vitagraph player. In those bygone days Miss Turner held an executive position as well—on nice days posing before the camera and on cloudy days performing the duties of cashier of the Vitagraph company. The earliest multiple reelers projected featured Florence Turner and she will long be remembered for her work in such features as "A Queen for a Day," "Auld Lang Syne" and "A Tale of Two Cities."

Not long ago Miss Turner moved to London and, there, leading her own company, has gained popularity in England.

In "Florence Turner Impersonates Film Favorites" she demonstrates her versatility with the following impersonations: The old style Pathé heroine; Ford Sterling; the old Biograph style; Mabel Normand; Wild West Billy; the "Divine Sarah."

JACK PICKFORD IN THRILLING ROLE FOR SELIG

Jack Pickford will make his initial appearance under the Diamond S trade mark when he appears in the role of Toney, a pool shark, in the Selig Diamond Special in three reels, "The Making of Crooks," released Thursday, December 16. Mr. Pickford will be supported by an all-star cast.

"The making of Crooks" carries a strong moral lesson against the evils wrought by disreputable pool rooms. There are a number of tense situations and the methods by which young men are swindled by "pool sharks" are realistically shown. One of the most exciting scenes in the production is where Pickford and the daughter of the political boss escape from a cabaret in a stolen autobile. The car collides with a speeding locomotive, is shattered into a hundred pieces and the body of the girl is carried on the pilot of the engine.

EDNA ROLAND JOINS PIKE'S PEAK FOR ASSOCIATED PROGRAM PICTURES

Edna Roland, who last season played Mag Haggerty with Thos. J. Ryan, Ryan and Richfield, in the "Mag Haggerty" sketches, has signed with the Pike's Peak Photoplay Company of The Associated Program.

Miss Roland's characterization of Rita Tevis in A. H. Woods' production of the "Common Law" created a great deal of favorable comment in all the larger cities.

After leaving the employ of Mr. Woods she was engaged by Dave Lewis as leading woman, and remained with him for three seasons. She created the ingenue role for Edward E. Ross in "The Gray Hawk," and was starred in "The Weaker Sex," a vaudeville sketch, written for her by Mildred Considine Cherril, and in which she played the Orpheum circuit.

TERWILLIGER AT WORK ON A KELLY SCENARIO WITH MISS HANDWORTH FOR LUBIN

Director George Terwilliger, with Octavia Handworth in the leading role, is at work on a four-part dramatic subject from the pen of Anthony P. Kelly, "The City of Failing Light."

Mr. Kelly has contributed a novel script in this newest writing of his, calling for several novelties in lighting effects, the majority of which are to be taken in and about the lighting plants of one of Philadelphia's suburban towns.

Leslie Austin, a newcomer to the Lubin stock company, makes his first appearance as a Lubin player in support of Miss Handworth.

TWO SELIG RELEASES INSPIRED BY MELODIES

The Selig Polyscope Company has recently released two picture plays which were inspired by melodies. "Just as I Am," a Selig Special in two reels, was written by Lanier Bartlett after the famous old hymn, "Just as I Am Without One Plea."

The Selig Special will be released on Monday, November 29. It was produced by Colin Campbell, who directed such productions as "The Spoilers," "The Carpet from Bagdad," "The Rosary," etc. The other production is "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," which will be released December 13 as a Selig Red Seal Play through V-L-S-E.

The song hit, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier," inspired Gilson Willets to write the drama.

SIXTH EPISODE OF "STANLEY" SERIES RELEASED NOVEMBER 25

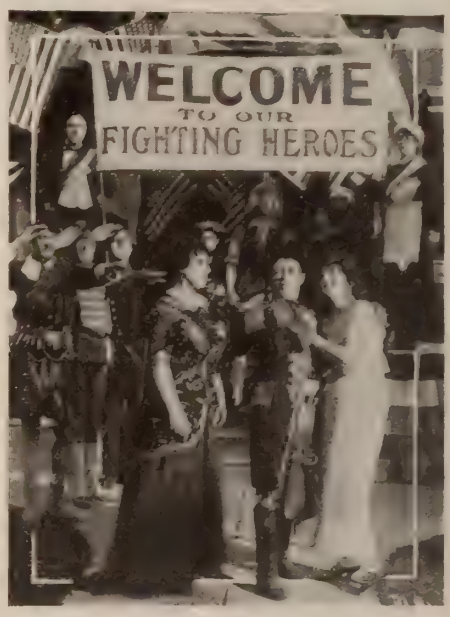
The sixth episode of the "Stanley Adventures in Africa" series, founded on the experiences of H. M. Stanley, sent by the New York Herald to recover Livingston, the missionary, who was lost in the African jungles, is entitled "Stanley and the Slave Traders," and will be released in two reels as a Centaur Feature on November 25.

As in previous episodes this release contains a wealth of action calculated to well satisfy any follower of the series. In addition the picture has interest from the standpoint of novelty and also from its educational side, since every effort has been made to accurately follow Stanley and his party as the incidents of the trip recorded at the time of the expedition.

TWO MINA RELEASES FOR DEC. 2 COMEDY SUBJECTS

The MinA release of December 2 will contain two comedy subjects, "The $50,000 Policy" and an animated cartoon entitled "Why Hubby Grows Bald."

"The $50,000 Policy" deals with the efforts of Mr. Henpeck to get rid of his mother-in-law, after taking out a $50,000 policy covering her. But she can't be killed off and circumstances are such that he is finally glad to let her live and proclaim her "the best mother-in-law on earth."



The cartoon is said to be particularly clever. Baby is kidnapped away from home and her hair-raising adventures would even make Captain Kidd sit up and take notice.

SEVERAL NEW HORSLEY PLAYERS IN "THE FIGHTING FOUR"

The release on Friday, November 19, of "The Fighting Four," marks the debut as members of the Cub Comedy company of several recent additions to David Horsley's staff of players. These are: Bob Kenyon, Harry Jackson and Belle Bennett, all of whom give excellent support to George Ovey, the featured comedian in this one-reel farce.

Besides George Ovey and the newcomers there are in the cast such popular Cub players as: Louis Fitzroy, George George, Arthur Mund, Janet Sully and Gordon McGregor. Milton Fahrney directed the production.

BETHLEHEM STEEL WORKS SHOWN IN "THE CAVE MAN"

When work on "The Cave Man," the latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, in five parts, to be released through the V-L-S-E, was completed, Director Theodore Marston found he had taken 328 scenes that involved situations in everything from a hovel to a Fifth Avenue club. Also that Robert Edeson, who appears as Haulick Smagg, had spanned the lapse of time between the cave man period and the twentieth century, portraying the reincarnation of a remarkable character.

Of the many scenes that make backgrounds for "The Cave Man," perhaps the most interesting are those taken in the steel works at South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, that furnish the setting for the climax of the story. While the action of "The Cave Man" requires this setting, additional scenes, that show the employees at work and the process of manufacture from the time the white hot stream of molten metal pours from the melting pot until it emerges from the various processes to become a sheet of the steel that furnishes the armor plate for huge battleships, add to the value of the picture.

The title role in "The Cave Man" is one of Mr. Edeson's favorite parts. It was written by Gelett Burgess.

REALISTIC "SCRAP" STAGED FOR "THE DRAGON," EQUITABLE

Those who doubt the genuineness of "scraps" on the films should have witnessed a scene being photographed for "The Dragon," a five-part Equitable feature which Harry A. Pollard is directing and in which Margarita Fischer is the star.

In front of a big department store a blind beggar carrying a little tin cup for alms, was approached by the star, who spoke to him and went through the motions of giving him some coin. A messenger comes from the store with a bag full of money to take to a bank. He is assaulted by a highwayman, who knocks him down, grabs the bag and makes a "getaway."

The first try was not satisfactory, and on the retake the director told the robber to "hit him good, he doesn't like to fall. Make him drop." The order was obeyed. The man went down, and the robber is resting now with a broken wrist.

HAL FORDE WILL STAR IN "LESSONS IN LOVE," RIALTO STAR FEATURE

The announcement that Hal Forde, of musical comedy and picture fame, had left for Jacksonville, Fla., to take the lead in a Rialto Star Feature of the Gaumont Company, brought prominently to the front in a new way the continuous development of this company's policy of having a new star in each of these multiple-reel releases.

The scenario chosen to exploit Mr. Forde is entitled "Lessons in Love." It has been written by Paul M. Bryan with this particular star in mind. Mr. Forde has many friends in Jacksonville, as his first work in pictures was done at a studio in that city. He enjoys picture work exceedingly, and has confessed that his ambition is to direct his own pictures. "Lessons in Love" is being directed by Richard Garrick.

THEDA BARA IN "GALLEY SLAVE" TO FOLLOW "WOMAN'S PAST"

Following the first presentation this week of Nance O'Neil in "A Woman's Past," William Fox will present Theda Bara, whose recent appearance in "Carmen" attracted wide attention, in "The Galley Slave." The photodrama was picturized from Bartley Campbell's drama, and was produced for Mr. Fox by J. Gordon Edwards.

Another William Fox release will soon introduce Ralph Kellard in "Her Mother's Secret." Miss Dorothy Green is in the cast. It was produced by Frederick Thomson.

"FRIENDS OF THE SEA," MUTUAL FOR NOVEMBER 28.

A strong story of the friendship between two men is "The Friends of the Sea," a Banner Feature in two reels, produced by the Reliance Company and announced for release on the regular Mutual Program November 28. Monroe Salisbury and Alfred Paget are starred in this Damon-Pythias drama, with Adoni Fovieri as the girl beloved of both. The scenes are laid in a primitive coast fishing village.

BOSWORTH AT HIS BEST IN "WHITE SCAR," A UNIVERSAL FEATURE DEPICTING LIFE IN HUDSON BAY COUNTRY

HOBART BOSWORTH IN A STRIKING SCENE FROM "THE WHITE SCAR"

HOBART BOSWORTH in the Universal Broadway Feature, "The White Scar," is at his best, while the play, which is of the Canadian woods, the Hudson Bay trading posts, Indians, hunters and trappers, is one in which all Mr. Bosworth's smooth acting ability can be displayed to the best of advantage, according to advance reports.

The story is a simple story of pure, honest love—and a villain. Love where all the world loves a lover, for the people of the North always look upon a loving couple as the most happy creatures on earth.

Mr. Bosworth is ably supported in "The White Scar" by Jane Novak, Anna Lehr, Frank Newburg, Norval McGregor and Ronald Bradbury. Mr. Bosworth plays Na-Ta-Wan-Gan, a white trader, which is the Indian for "great trapper" as he was known to all his Indian friends.

"The White Scar" will be released early in December as a Broadway Universal Feature.

A BARRYMORE, A PICKFORD AND RURAL CLASSIC FOR FAMOUS NEXT PARAMOUNT QUARTER

FOR the first month of the next Paramount quarterly, beginning December 1, the Famous Players Film Company will release three subjects of varying types, embracing a typical Barrymore comedy, a charterization of Mary Pickford, and including the adaptation of Denman Thompson's rural classic, "The Old Homestead."

On December 9, John Barrymore will return to the screen in a picturization of the celebrated comedy, "The Red Widow," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. In the role of Cicero Hannibal Butts, the distinguished corset salesman who seeks to combine his honeymoon with a business trip to Russia, John Barrymore possesses the greatest opportunity he has had since becoming a photoplay star. The Red Widow is portrayed by Flora Zabelle, who created the role in the original stage production.

Mary Pickford is represented in the month's releases by "The Foundling," an original and powerful drama of smiles and tears, to be issued December 20.

On December 30 "The Old Homestead," the great classic of the American stage, will be returned in its new form to the public that has made its popularity endure for more than thirty years. As the impersonator of Denman Thompson's immortal characterization, Frank Losee has succeeded in creating an exact duplicate of the costumes and mannerisms of his distinguished predecessor.

"BODY AND SOUL" WILL BE A WORLD RELEASE ON NOVEMBER 22.

World Film Corporation will on November 22 release the Frohman drama, "Body and Soul," by William Hurlbut, with Florence Rockwell in the leading role. George Irving directed the picture.

VITAGRAPH BUYS "JOAN THURSDAY" FOR PICTURIZATION

The Vitagraph Company has purchased from Louis Joseph Vance his dramatic story, "Joan Thursday," which will be produced for the screen in five parts.

KING BAGGOT IN SCREEN VERSION OF NOVEL

King Baggot will appear shortly in a three-reel drama produced by Director Webster, "The Law of Life," from Carl Werner's book of the same name.

New Laws And Court Decisions

PUBLIC AND DAILIES OPPOSE BAN OF "NATION" BY NEWARK AUTHORITIES

RECENT events in Newark, N. J., prove quite conclusively that anyone may be vested with official authority to censor motion picture productions in that city as long as he can be depended upon to furnish the police authorities with excuses to interfere with the exhibition of high class films in the playhouses of that vicinity.

On the report of two such censors, who were neither appointed or authorized to act in such a capacity, the Board of Police Commissioners decided recently to forbid the production of "The Birth of a Nation," scheduled at the Newark theatre for two weeks beginning Monday.

The "voluntary" censors who represented to the Police Board that "The Birth of a Nation" would be harmful to the good citizens of Newark are Fred C. Breidenbach, president of the board, and Spaulding Frazer, city attorney.

Usually it has been the procedure to entrust the powers of motion picture censorship in Newark to a committee appointed by the Mayor or the Chief of Police. However, when a committee of three colored citizens sought the Mayor a few days ago to register objections against the showing of the film in this city, the chief executive was not to be found at his desk at the City Hall. President Breidenbach saw no reason why the Mayor's presence was necessary and appointed himself a committee of one to entertain the colored delegation. After listening to the objections of the colored gentlemen, of whom not one had ever seen the "Birth of a Nation," against which they were raising their voices in protest, Breidenbach decided to again appoint himself a committee of one to act as a board of censor.

That the practical side of the objections raised by those who had never seen the film impressed Breidenbach is evidenced by the fact that on the following day he attended the "Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty theatre, New York City, in his role of official censor. In order that he might glean a little pleasure from so disagreeable a task he invited City Attorney Frazer to accompany him.

According to Mr. Breidenbach he found "The Birth of a Nation" all that his imaginative colored friends had declared it to be. "It will, in my opinion, benefit no person who might be interested in it," summarized Mr. Breidenbach upon his return from New York. "It has no education value, it is not uplifting," he continued. "Therefore I think the protests against its being shown in Newark are well founded."

President Breidenbach's report and the declaration of Chief of Police Long that "The Birth of a Nation" should not be shown in Newark were made two days before the time scheduled for its two weeks' run there.

The decision to ban the exhibition came after more than a month of advertising in all the local newspapers and in spite of the fact that the advance sale of seats totalled more than $3,000.

Newark exhibitors are more astounded than angry. To use a colloquialism, "They don't know where they're at." If after the leasing of expensive films and the added expenditure of heavy advertising, the report of non-appointive and unauthorized censors is going to prove sufficient grounds for an eleventh hour decision to prohibit high class productions, it is felt that something is decidedly wrong with local conditions.

But the exhibitors are not alone in their resentment. Hundreds of citizens of Newark who have seen "The Birth of a Nation" in New York have rallied to the support of the exhibitors. Among them are many ministers and school teachers, who declare that while President Breidenbach spoke in "generalities" about "educational value and uplifts," his experience and powers as a critic are neither great or gifted.

As a reflection of public opinion in Newark it might be added that there is not a newspaper in the city that supports the action of the Police Commission in placing its official ban on "The Birth of a Nation" there.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS PLAN NATION FIGHT ON SUNDAY OPENING

IT looks as if Washington, D. C., may have a formidable foe to battle with in Congress this season in the person of the co-operative organization of religious societies which has not given itself a name as yet. A recent meeting was called of these bodies in the Y. M. C. A. building to discuss the Sunday closing of the picture theatres and saloons, and making Sunday a day of rest.

With Robert D. Burbank, president of the Epworth League, as temporary president, and Earl Taggart, president of the Christian Endeavor Union, as temporary secretary, the new organization discussed ways and means of getting a hearing in Congress for the closing of motion picture theatres on Sunday along with some other reforms it wished to impose through the medium of national legislation.

Some strong sentiments were expressed the chief one coming from Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, who is reported to have stated that the motion picture shows were one of the most potent factors working against the church in that city, and he would welcome any movement against the present practices of the shows.

A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws to and formulate plans for the carrying out of the object of the organization. More definite ideas and permanent officers will develop at the next meeting.

Among the organizations represented in this movement was the Young Men's Christian Association, Women's Interdenominational Missionary Union, Methodist Protestant Union, Sunday School Association of the District of Columbia, Washington Civic Association, Disciples' Union, Christian Endeavor Union, and the Phi Mu Sigma fraternity.

Just what strength and influence such a body of citizens may have cannot be determined, but it is well for the Motion Picture Exhibitors League to be fully prepared for any issue which may arise as the result of this action by the religious bodies.

NINE O'CLOCK CURFEW FOR CLEVELAND CHILDREN

Cleveland motion picture theatres are enforcing the curfew that was suggested at the recent convention of the Ohio League. All theatres, acting in conjunction with Juvenile Judge Addams, every night flash this notice on the screen at 8:45:

"All elementary school children not accompanied by parent or guardian must go home at nine o'clock. By order of Judge George S. Addams, Juvenile Court. The police will enforce the rule."

At nine o'clock a policeman will visit every theatre and gather in all children who are in the show unaccompanied by either parent or guardian. No tickets are sold to children after 7:30 p. m. School teachers have indorsed the curfew.

OFFICIALS IN NORTHERN NEW JERSEY MAKE EFFORT TO FORCE BLUE LAWS AND EXHIBITORS SHOW FIGHT

MOTION picture patrons and exhibitors of Northern New Jersey are highly incensed at what they describe "the latest spasm" of officials of Hudson, Essex and Union counties to enforce the obsolete Jersey blue laws.

At least the enforcement of the blue laws is given as an excuse by the authorities of these counties for the closing of all motion picture playhouses in their territory on Sunday. Other business enterprises are allowed to operate and in many instances other playhouses have been permitted to remain open in the same cities where the motion picture theatres have been closed.

In Jersey City last Sunday four motion picture theatre managers were placed under arrest when they opened their theatres for a single show during the evening. They were charged with violating the vice and immorality act, but were late in the evening paroled by order of the chief of police.

As soon as the arrests had been made Sunday night, Frederick C. Henn, a prominent local lawyer, walked into a cigar store, bought a cigar and then had the proprietor arrested on the charge of violating the vice and immorality act.

"We are going to have Sunday pictures or else see the blue laws enforced strictly," he said.

"I represent the Motion Picture Theatre Interests Associations, and we have determined that if the blue laws are to be enforced against our business they must be enforced against every business to which they apply."

"We will either have it determined that it is legal to give shows on Sunday or that every store except a drug store must close," he continues.

The first arrest of a motion picture manager Sunday night was that of Isadore H. Schlessinger, manager of the Orpheum playhouse at the Five Corners. Schlessinger was arrested the week before, although the case had not been disposed of by the court. Along with Schlessinger the police arrested John Fells, an operator at the Orpheum.

There was a crowd of more than five hundred in the Orpheum when the police in obedience to an order from Chief of Police Frank Monahan swooped down on the theatre and arrested the two men. While this was happening at the Five Corners, two other arrests were made in the adjoining neighborhood.

Edward Kenny, manager of the Hippodrome, at 1023 Summit avenue, and Hiram Rosner, manager of the Academy, on Central avenue, were taken into custody. The same charge was made against them as was made against Fells and Schlessinger. Rolls of films were taken from the Academy and Hippodrome by the police as evidence.

Mr. Henn was very bitter against the action of the police which he characterized as unjust, discrimination against motion picture exhibitors and their patrons.

"People will say it is ridiculous to arrest a man for selling a cigar," declared Mr. Henn. "All right, let us have other legitimate business enterprises open on Sunday then. We will continue this fight until the principle we expound is established and the old blue laws are thrown into the discard."

The effort of Elizabeth exhibitors to arrange with the county and municipal authorities for Sunday opening was a failure. Exhibitors agreed to arrange a special program for Sunday presentation and to limit the operating schedule to one performance during the evening. They also offered to give a percentage of the receipts to local charity organizations.

THEATRE IN RESIDENCE DISTRICT DESPITE ATTEMPT TO BAR IT

Attempts to establish strictly residence neighborhoods in Omaha, Neb., where motion picture theatres will be barred, have passed the city commission, but in one pronounced instance they have failed.

Four petitions were filed and passed by the city commissioners. Several attempts to file them and have them passed were made before the right kind of a petition was decided upon.

One of the petitions was directly aimed to stop the construction of Hugh McCaffrey's new $10,000 theatre at Thirty-third and Leavenworth streets. By the time the final filing was made, and passed, the theatre was near completion. The city, at that stage of the game, dared do nothing for fear of incurring a well founded damage suit.

The other petitions passed, however, and are in full force. Exhibitors planning to build, are now considering court action to find whether the city can bar their houses in this manner, thus classing them with saloons, pool halls and other objectionable places.

AMERICAN FLAG AS CENTER PIECE CAUSES CENSOR RUMPUS

The American flag as a centerpiece was the cause of the Winnipeg moving picture censors deleting this section of film from a reel which they had under consideration last month.

The fact was made known today and caused considerable criticism to be levelled at the board of censors by local exhibitors, who, for political reasons, did not wish their names made known.

The picture censors passed 449 reels of pictures last month, and condemned twenty-five. One hundred and sixteen reels had 309 pieces cut out, the reasons for their deletion being given to the Winnipeg board of control as follows:

Forty-eight suggestive scenes, one desertion, ten letters, thirty-eight gruesome scenes, six theft, nineteen shooting, thirty-eight threatening with gun, five robbery, five stealing, nine gambling, forty-four subtitles, two kidnapping, two cruelty, one cutting telegraph wires, ten holdup, two lighting bomb, nine threatening with knife, one disgusting, three vulgar, seven assault, one suggesting suicide, one fighting, one suggesting murder, three German scenes, two opening safe, four burglary, three suggestive of suicide, two cheating at cards, one child desertion, one U. S. flag scene, one stealing letter, three rude scenes, two murder, nine torture, two infidelity, two placing bomb, two drugging, one attempted murder.

"I wonder if that lately appointed women's committee to act with the censors had anything to do with these 'rude scenes,' which have been cut out," said an exhibitor. "If this isn't about the fiercest list yet which the censors have put over on us, I don't know a 'movie' when I see one. I don't dare to say much, however."

SHELBURN, IND., CLOSED SUNDAYS BY MINISTER

The motion picture theatres in Shelburn, Ind., have been ordered closed on Sunday, until further notice, through the efforts of the Rev. Mr. Washburn, Methodist minister, of Terre Haute, Ind.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OVERRULES CENSOR'S DECREE AGAINST "SPOILERS" IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

"THE SPOILERS," the Selig feature which was rejected in Vancouver last week by the British Columbia censor, was finally passed on November 3 by Attorney-General Bowser, who was induced as a result of considerable agitation and adverse publicity to deviate from his policy of non-interference with the work of the censor.

George L. Broy and Sam W. Whitehead, who are handling the film in Canada, made two trips to Victoria last week to place the matter before the attorney general, and were accompanied by Manager Hector Quagliotti, of the Colonial theatre in Vancouver, where the picture was to have been shown this week.

The censor also went to Victoria to be present at the showing given for Mr. Bowser, but his presence did not deter the latter from giving a favorable decision with regard to the picture.

After the private view at the Variety theatre before these five men, the attorney general complimented Messrs. Broy and Whitehead on the excellence of the picture, and the following morning the subject was passed without the elimination of any of the scenes which were so objectionable to the censor. The picture will be shown at the Colonial theatre all of next week at twenty, thirty and fifty cents, and big business is anticipated.

The Universal Broadway Feature, "Just Jim," another film rejected last week, was also taken to Victoria by Mr. Quagliotti, but was not seen by Mr. Bowser. It was, however, run off before a party of leading citizens of Victoria, including members of the cabinet.

All united in pronouncing it an excellent picture, and it is considered likely that it will soon be submitted to the censor for reconsideration.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Nov. 11.

"THE GRINNING SKULL OF RESPECTABILITY" is a three-reel psychological drama being produced under the direction of George Nichols for the Selig Company. In this, Jack Pickford is featured with a supporting cast which includes Virginia Kirkley, Guy Oliver, George Demarest, George Nichols, C. C. Holland, Fred Hern, Viola Alberti and William Machin. This subject shows up the hypocrisy and shallowness of society, and is of an allegorical nature, having a great setting that shows the hall of humanity. The scenario is by William E. Wing.

A supporting cast composed of Earl Fox, Edward J. Peil, Lillian Hayward, Frank Clark and William Hutchinson has been selected for Fritzi Brunette, who is featured in the detective story "The False Alarm," now being directed by William Robert Daly.

The Selig Company has purchased from Willard Mack, author of "Kick In" and a number of other stage successes, a five-reel photoplay entitled "The Dragnet" which, like many of his famous plays, is a crook story, portraying the life of a convict after his release from prison. It has plenty of heart interest, is highly dramatic, and has a decidedly unexpected punch as a climax. Scenes are laid in a big American city and Rio de Janeiro. The production has been placed in the hands of Frank Beal and Harry Mestayer is to be featured in this subject, supported by Wheeler Oakman, Vivian Reed, Al W. Filson and Eugenie Besserer.

Big Shipwreck Staged Successfully

The making of the shipwreck scenes in which a prop boat more than four hundred feet in length is capsized in Los Angeles harbor, with more than three hundred on board were completed without an accident. These scenes are for the production of "My Neighbor's Wife," featuring Tyrone Power and Kathlyn Williams, and being made under the direction of Colin Campbell. Practically all of the producing staff of the Selig companies here took part in these scenes together with hundreds of extra people, all of whom were good swimmers.

The Keystone laboratories are now cutting "The Great Vacuum Robbery," a two-reel comedy which features Charles Murray, supported by Slim Summerville, Dixie Chene, Harry Booker, Ed Kennedy and Louise Fazenda which was made under the direction of Dick Jones, supervised by Mack Sennett.

The first subject in which Bert Clark, favorite of the New York Winter Garden show last season is taking part, is nearing completion, but as yet has not been named. Mr. Clark is supported in this by Anna Luther and Fred Mace.

Director General Mack Sennett is putting a lot of fun into a subject being made under the working title, "A Double Wedding," which features Ford Sterling. It is laid in the South, and opens with a fox chase in the Beverly Hills district, west of Los Angeles, in which thirty horsemen and horsewomen, about as many dogs and three foxes took part. The weddings were those of a pair of whites and a pair of blacks, and the mix-ups come fast and furious.

Sennett Acquires Another Aeroplane

Mack Sennett has added additional air equipment to the Keystone plant, a Wright Model "B" aeroplane which is in addition to the monoplane with a Rotary Motor made by Joe Murray of the Keystone publicity department. Both machines are being used in a subject now being filmed, but which has not been titled.

Sam Bernard has been cast for the part of a pawnshop keeper in his first subject, and is developing the habit of juggling the three balls, and Weber and Fields have secured a job as janitors in a beauty shop.

E. A. Barrymore, photoplay department of the Chicago Herald, is spending several weeks in Los Angeles securing atmosphere for his column.

It has been decided by members of the Motion Picture Directors Association to change the date of their first annual ball from February 14, St. Valentine's Day, to the evening of Thanksgiving, November 25. The ball is to be given in the Rose room of the Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles, which will accommodate approximately seven hundred couples. Committees for the arrangement of this ball have been selected, and details are being worked out to make it the most elaborate event of the kind so far given by any of the motion picture fraternity of the West coast. It will be of the nature of a buffet dansant, music will be furnished by an orchestra of twenty pieces, and the event will be strictly formal. Instead of the usual one dollar per couple price, which has been charged at balls given by photoplayers, the admission fee will be five dollars.

Balboa's New Serial Progressing

Work has been progressing for several weeks at the Balboa studio on another serial picture of twelve episodes each of two reels, under the direction of Sherwood Macdonald. This serial is being made for Pathé Exchange, Inc., and features Ruth Roland, supported by Frank Mayo, Andrew Arbuckle, and other well known Balboa players. The story deals with the heredity of crime, and the efforts of a family to eradicate the criminal instinct. The scenarios are by Will M. Ritchey and H. M. Horkheimer. All stationary from the Balboa now bears bright red marks of a circular nature, and it is hinted that the title may be "The Scarlet Circle"

GLIMPSES AT INTERESTING ACTIVITIES OF VARIOUS UNIVERSAL COMPANIES ON THE WEST COAST

WORTHINGTON COMPANY AT BEAR LAKE—DIRECTOR-GENERAL McRAE HANDING GRACE CUNARD AND FRANCIS FORD $10,000 CHECK—JACCARD'S "A KNIGHT OF THE RANGE" COMPANY

Musical Comedy Company on their tour over the Orient, has just arrived at the West coast, and has been engaged as second leading woman for the Nestor Comedy Company.

Anna Held was given a royal reception upon her arrival in Los Angeles direct from France, where she served as a war nurse for the past several months, by the members of the producing staff of Pallas Pictures and the Oliver Morosco Feature Play Company, as well as the dramatic editors and editoresses of the Los Angeles newspapers, and a very fair representation of trade paper men. Miss Held arrived in Los Angeles after a trip across the continent in a private car, and will immediately be starred in the film version of the French farce, "Madame La Presidente," appearing in the part of the leading woman of the "Pet of the Harem" company playing in Paris. The scenario for this photoplay is being prepared by Elliott Clawson, and the direction will be in charge of Frank Lloyd, who has just completed the filming of "The Hoosier Schoolmaster." Supporting Miss Held will be Forrest Stanley in the prominent part of the Minister of Justice of France, together with Herbert Standing, Howard Davies and others of the Morosco and Pallas Pictures companies.

Summerville with Fine Art Forces

Roy Summerville, author of numerous magazine stories and serials, and a former theatrical publication writer, has been added to the scenario department at the Fine Art Films studio. Another addition to the producing staff at the Fine Art is J. A. Raynes, who will aid in the preparation of incidental music for the films. He has written the music for a number of plays, including "Musical Town," "Politicians," "Playing the Ponies," and was musical and stage director for Henry Savage, the Shuberts, Charles Frohman, and at numerous theatres.

A new department created at the Fine Art Films is that of librarian, who will have charge of the thousands of books, and also do research work. This department has been placed in charge of R. E. Wales, former New York newspaper man, who has had considerable experience as a professional librarian.

The juvenile players at the Fine Art Films studio, all under six years of age, were given a Hallowe'en party by Vera Lewis. The dinner was served at the kiddies big dressing room, after which most of them took part in an impromptu program in which they recited little poems and did other stunts. Those taking part were George Stone, Carmen De Rue, Violet Radcliffe, Frances Carpenter, Thelma Burns, Ninon Foveri and Lloyd Perl, who support Jane Grey in "Mother of Seven." The party concluded with an auto ride and an evening at a vaudeville show.

Sir Herbert Tree Engaged

Director Jack Conway will during the week make the final scenes for the second Orrin Johnson Fine Art Films subject, "The Price of Power." Mr. Johnson is making arrangements to be in New York on the evening his first Triangle subject, "The Penitentes," is shown.

Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, London

LEW FIELDS, SAM BERNARD, JOE WEBER

actor-manager, has been engaged by the Fine Art Films Company for appearance in several dramas, which engagement at the studio is referred to as the most important yet made by any motion picture concern. The plays have not been selected for this English actor, nor is it definitely known the time he will take up the work at the studios. Mr. Tree is well known in America as the result of several visits to this side, and that he is prominent in theatrical circles in London is brought out by the fact that he was elected president of the London Theatrical Managers' Association on the death of Sir Henry Irving.

The fig tree gown of Biblical fame has been revived for the film, at least a gown composed entirely of leaves is worn by Marie Doro in "The Wood Nymph." The exterior scenes for this were made at Pine Crest, where a number of very pretty exterior scenes were made.

A yacht measuring one hundred and forty-five feet over all, and having a thirty-foot beam, was destroyed off Balboa Beach recently for scenes in the Fine Art Films subject, "Cross Currents," which features Helen Ware. This was set afire and wholly destroyed.

Wallace Kerrigan, superintendent of the Universal ranch, is the proud father of a baby girl, and to celebrate the occasion he used a small skirt as a flag, which he ran to the top of the highest flag pole at Universal City.

The Rolin Film Company has just completed another of the "Lonesome Luke" series, which has been given the name, "Luke Lugs Luggage," for release as a Pathé Phunphilm. All the scenes in this are laid around a railway station, and Luke has anything but a pleasant life as assistant to the baggage man, especially when patron of the line ship their goats, cats, geese and other pets.

The company is now filming an Egyptian comedy, and using for exterior locations a beautiful Grecian garden at one of the Wilshire homes of the wealthy at Los Angeles. The Rolin Phunphilms are gaining in poplarity in Los Angeles, which is shown by the fact of the increase in the number of prints which have been ordered for this exchange.

Ford Day at Universal City

Monday of the past week was "Ford Day" at Universal City, when Henry Ford and party were the guests. Mr. Ford spent all afternoon at the City, and found that it was far easier to crank a camera here than a "tin lizzie" of his own make.

By arrangements made by M. O. Jonas, of the Universal publicity department, five hundred feet of pictures of conditions at Douglas, Ariz., were secured by Beverly Griffith and cameraman. This film shows the location of the Mexican camp with regard to the American border and the activities there.

"The Ivory Box," a melodrama of American social and factory life, has been chosen as the next vehicle for Carter De Haven and Flora Parker De Haven, who recently returned to the Universal studio. The direction of this has been placed in the hands of Jay Hunt, a recent addition to the Universal directing staff, and in the cast will be Ernest Shields, Harry Schumm, Fred Church and others. The story is by Olga Printzlau, and shows the romance of a young man who inherits a factory from his father and falls in love with a chorus girl, who, when a child, was kidnapped.

A pleasant surprise was given Grace Cunard and Francis Ford just as they were leaving Universal City recently for a two weeks' vacation, when they were presented with a check for writing the scenarios for "The Broken Coin," which consists of twenty-two episodes and twice as many reels. The surprising part was the size of this check, which had been decided upon by President Carl Laemmle, the amount being ten thousand dollars.

The last scenes for the Broadway feature, "Father and the Boys," featuring Digby Bell, were made during the past week, and the trial showing at Universal City caused those who witnessed the projection to acclaim it one of the best from the Universal producing plant. Mr. Bell played the part of the father, with Harry Hamm and Colin Chase the boys, and Yona Landowska and May Gaston as the girls. Hayward Mack appears as the heavy, and other principal members are Lon Chaney and Louise Carbasse.

Quality Principals Go to New York

The principals of the second Quality Pictures Corporation Producing Company, Marguerite Snow, Bruce Weyman and Frank Bacon, departed during the past week for New York City, and were followed a few days later by Fred Balshofer, who will remain in New York for several months arranging for future productions, and may probably then return to the coast to establish a studio here, where the one company of the organization will work. The day before departing, Mr. Balshofer, accompanied by his chauffeur, entered a downtown bank to secure funds for the payroll, and when they returned to the street Mr. Balshofer's Stevens-Duryea limousine had disappeared. At the time he departed for New York the police had been unable to find any trace of the machine. In addition to the car, the Quality president is the loser of a number of expensive wigs and a great quantity of wardrobe, which was in the limousine.

F. J. Grandin, later producer of Fine Art Films, is now with the K and D Company filming "Glory," in eight reels.

"Sixteen, Sixty, and Twenty-three" is an unusual title given a photoplay being produced by William Dowlan at Universal City. It points out how very frequently the true character of a person is disguised. The instance here is that of a flirt attempting to beat a washerwoman out of her earnings because she scorched the tail of his shirt. It happens that the washerwoman recognizes the youth when he takes her daughter home from a cheap café, and there is plenty happening then. Lule Warrenton appears as the washerwoman, Gloria Fonda her daughter, with a supporting cast of Elise Mason, W. C. Dowlan, Ed. Walsh and William Quinn.

NEW ELECTRICAL STUDIO, 75 x 300, NOW BUILT AT U CITY

A five hundred dollar bet by two bachelors on the question of which will stay single the longest forms the basis for a lot of fun in "Those Bachelor Honeymooners," with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as the bachelors. Both fall at the same time, and the girls are Betty Compson and Jane Waller. Both go to the same place for their honeymoon, and Director Al. Christie sees that it all ends happily.

Filming Second "Lord John" Episode

Director E. J. Le Saint has taken up the filming of the second episode of the Universal serial, "The Journal of Lord John." This is entitled "The Grey Sisterhood," the title referring to an organization formed by an Egyptian hypnotist, who is leader of a band of crooks. The purpose of the organization is to induce an unhappy woman, the owner of a very valuable mummy case, to become a member that the leader may gain possession of this curiosity. The part of Lord John, that of an author detective, is taken by William Garwood, and in this episode he succeeds in aiding the escape of the woman with whom he is infatuated. Director E. J. Le Saint has a number of very artistic interiors for this, one being a metropolitan theatre on the first night. The entire supporting cast is composed of Ogden Crane, Stella Razeto, Laura Oakley, Albert MacQuarrie, Grace Benham, Carmen Phillips and Frank Crane.

"John O' the Mountains" is a Canadian northwest story in two or three reels and a prologue. This will depict life in the trading camps and mountains, and portrays the aim of a father, wronged by his wife, to prevent his son from meeting a woman. The cast includes Sydney Ayres, who will also do the directing, supporting members being Louella Maxame, Dixie Carr, L. M. Wells, T. V. Henderson, Doris Pawn, Harry Archer and Carmen Phillips.

The Joker Company, under the direction of Ray Clements, has just finished "Slim, Fat and Medium," featuring the "slim"—Victor Potel. The three name characters are suitors for the hand of Betty Boneface, and their trials at love making are numerous and painful. Lillian Hamilton is the recipient of the trio's caresses.

The reform of a Western criminal by kindness is the theme for "The Quarter Breed," a three-reel Western subject being filmed at Universal City by a cast composed of Leon Kent in the name part, who is also directing; Jack Livingston, Malcolm Blevins, Mina Cunard, Hart Hoxie and Bud Osborne. The Quarter Breed, accustomed to kicks and cuffs, is induced to lead a lawful life by the sister of the Western town sheriff, when she comes to the village for a visit.

"Little Boy Blue" to Be Screened

The poem of Eugene Field, "Little Boy Blue," has been adapted for the screen, and is now being produced by Rupert Julian. In this there are two parts, that of man and wife, played by Mr. Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson. Little Boy Blue is the son of the couple, and serves to reunite the man and wife when all other means fail.

"Keeping It Dark" is the title of the Nestor comedy of the week, produced by Horace Davey, and the title refers to the wedding of a father and mother, who attempt to keep the secret from their respective children. The boy and girl return from college, and one is induced to act as maid, and the other as butler. All goes well until the youngsters have a case, and then the secret comes out. Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher are the youngsters, Harry Rattenberry and Stella Adams the aged honeymooners.

Owing to injuries received by Directoress Cleo Madison, when she failed to dodge a small stick of wood tossed at her, she is unable to appear in pictures, and is directing the making of a one-reel subject, featuring May Gaston and Jack Bryce. The title of this is "His Return," and the story is of the love of a woman for children, and how her longing causes her to answer a newspaper advertisement of an artist who desires a woman to pose as a mother. Misunderstandings result, but these are swept away by the arrival of a son. Ray Russell appears in the part of the artist.

"The Road to Paradise" is the title of the episode of the Terrence O'Rourke series being filmed by Director Otis Turner. This scenario was adapted from the Louis Joseph Vance story by F. McGrew Willis, and adds another film romance to the list of J. Warren Kerrigan, who appears as Terrence O'Rourke. Scenes for this are laid in an imaginary principality in which the Irish adventurer prevents royalty from causing an unhappy marriage. The entire cast of this is composed of Lois Wilson, Maude George, Harry Carter, J. Morley, Bertram Grassby and William Holland.

Desiring to get far ahead of the release date has caused Director Richard Stanton and company, headed by Hobart Henley, producing the serial "Graft," to work day and night. By the end of the week, the third episode of this story will be finished. The title of this is "The Traction Grab," and portrays the adventures of the young politician serving as prosecuting attorney in his fight against graft. The principals of the cast supporting Mr. Henley are Jane Novak and Glen White, and other members are Nanine Wright, L. M. Wells, Mary Ruby and J. F. Abbott.

Big Court Scene for Lasky Picture

Court room scenes of the New York Appellate Court were reproduced on the Lasky stage this week for scenes in the coming Fanny Ward production, which has been named "The Chief." Between two and three hundred people took part in these scenes, which were presided over by Judge Arthur H. Williams, formerly of the New York Appellate Court.

Director George Melford was a busy man during the past week, when his producing company consisted of about five hundred people taking part in the Lasky-Suratt subject entitled "The Immigrant." A big mill dam was built across a mountain stream of such strength as to hold the water back for several weeks. A small city was built below this, and washed away when the dam was destroyed. A certain press agent sent out a story that a cloud burst in the mountains had flooded the San Fernando valley, and had caused a near panic among the ranchmen there.

Manager Keraline, of the Kinema theatre, Fresno, has made arrangements with Anita King, who recently motored across the United States, to appear at his theatre in the near future, when a benefit to raise funds to purchase phonographs for the public schools will be given. Miss King is to tell stories of her trip. She has a number of other similar engagements, and will be accompanied by Kenneth McGaffey, of the Lasky publicity department, who will talk to exhibitors on publicity for theatres.

Mammoth Skeletons for Ham Comedy

The skeletons of the mammoths taken from the La Bray asphaltum pits in recent years which heretofore have never been used in motion pictures, will serve as atmosphere for the Kalem Ham comedy entitled, "Bud in a Museum," from scenario by M. E. M. Gibson. Many of the interiors will be made at the Los Angeles Museum under the direction of William Beaudine. In this comedy Bud and his partner are hired as caretakers of Egyptian mummies, and when one is stolen Bud impersonates the missing mummy.

NEWS OF THE WEEK IN AND ABOUT SAN DIEGO

San Diego, Cal., Nov. 11.

Recently the members of the Lubin company at Coronado put on a one-reeler, "Out for the Day," with Edward Sloman directing, as usual. There was one exception from the general rule, and that was that the cast included all the stars and the wardrobe, carpenter shop, stage force and office management as well. In other words, the company from director down, or up, according to viewpoint, spent the day at La Jolla, a pretty suburb of San Diego, where Lubin Day was being celebrated.

AL CHRISTIE AND THE NESTOR COMPANY AT THE CELEBRATION OF THE FOURTH BIRTHDAY OF UNIVERSAL CITY, OCTOBER 27

Motion pictures were taken of the fancy high driving done by Glen Gardner, Joe Cannon, Francis Thomas and Frank L. Thompson, and also of the crowds which had gathered at the bathing beach.

After dinner the fine new $180,000 municipal playgrounds recently presented to the city by Miss Ellen Scripps were visited, and all the varieties of games and amusements were tried in their turn, between visits to the well equipped departments of the grounds and the community house connected with them.

Then the members of the party were whisked away in automobiles for a hurried visit to the state biological station. Included in the party, besides those already mentioned, were Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Shumway, Adda Gleason and her mother, Mrs. Gleason; Mrs. Sloman, Mrs. Hayward, Mr. and Mrs. George Routh and two children, Sheridan Hall, Miss Manlove, Mrs. Gardner, Bert Carrier, E. L. McMurtrie, C. F. and Mrs. McMurtrie, Henry Russell and The Motion Picture News representative.

ALFRED VOSBURGH AND VIVIAN RICH IN A CHARMING SETTING, ONE OF MANY SEEN IN "THE BLUFFERS" (American-Mutual)

Jane Vernon has been engaged as leading lady with the Dudley Motion Picture Company, and is making her first appearance in "The Land Just Over Yonder," a story by Peter B. Kyne. The writer himself is down from San Francisco to witness the closing scenes in the production. Among the other members of the company are George Chesebro, formerly on the legitimate stage, making quite a reputation in "Money," and Elsa Fox. Julian Frankenberg is directing this five-reeler. When it is completed the company will work on another of Kyne's stories.

The production of "One of the Chosen," a three-reeler by the Lubin Company at Coronado is necessitating a great amount of work in preparing the sets, as everything used in the play is being made up at the plant. There are such elaborate scenes as the Russian embassay at Washington, the ambassador's library, a street in a typical Russian city, with its stores, vodka shop and homes, and other detailed sets which are requiring an extra large force in the preparation. In one of the scenes there will be used two troops of United States cavalry, costumed as Cossacks, who will charge down the street, scattering the inhabitants of the Jewish pale right and left. In this play Edward Sloman, director, is taking the part of the main character. Mrs. Bronti, Miss Gleason, Miss Billington, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Ben W. Hopkins, formerly with the Universal and New York picture companies, L. C. Shumway, and Helen Wescott are also in the cast. B. C. Hayward is doing the camera work.

There are several more changes in the Lubin staff, R. E. Bradbury having returned to Los Angeles, while Miss Billington and Miss Walcott are planning to leave when "One of the Chosen" is completed. Henry Russell, who has been with the company, leaves for Philadelphia soon.

Allen H. Wright.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

A LITTLE known romance lies in the marriage either just coming or just past, of Florence Reed and Malcolm Williams, two well-known dramatic players. They will honeymoon in Jacksonville, where Williams will play in a coming Gaumont feature.

One notices faces of Metro players on many theatrical magazine front covers: Mme. Petrova on the Theatre Magazine, Mary Miles Minter on several front covers; Hamilton Revelle on the Mirror and so on; also an abundance of special articles in magazines and dailies. Give the credit to Arthur James, head of the Metro publicity department.

Lubin is a good brand on which to keep a watchful eye these days. Time was when Lubin films did not lead the world in point of excellence, although they must have been right among the leaders in point of sales. The first part of this statement is entirely allowable. In fact the Lubin company itself sent out a statement to that effect a short time ago, and one paper printed it under the heading, "Confession Is Good for the Soul."

But if judicious expenditure of money can put Lubin in the forefront that same firm will soon occupy a very leading position. On a recent trip to Philadelphia, the most notable thing at the big plant at Twentieth street and Indiana avenue was the esprit de corps of the big family.

Incidentally the personnel of the family has undergone considerable of a change in the past few weeks, and it is clear that an effort is being made to get the best talent in the industry. Among the new comers are Joseph W. Farnham, advertising and publicity; Edgar Lewis and John H. Pratt, directors; Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman and Anthony P. Kelly, scenario writers, and Raymond Hitchcock, House Peters, Nance O'Neil and Warner P. Richmond, players.

Anyone who thinks Philadelphia slow would have received a severe shock had he been at the entertainment given by the Lubin Players' Benefit Association, of which Peter J. Lang is president. The entertainment was a cracker-jack, artistically and financially. Raymond Hitchcock and Billy Reeves were the individual hits of the evening. Hitchcock's offering was so plainly extemporaneous that its entertainment value was doubled. George Spink, of the scenario department, was the official accompanist. Jack Pratt unloosed his baritone voice. Jack has sung leading roles in Broadway comic operas for years, a fact which many forgot when he became a director. Guests were present from far and near, including a goodly contingent from New York, including "Wid" Gunning and O. A. C. Lund.

It is worthy of note that "Destiny; or, the Soul of a Woman," a Rolfe-Metro feature, was used in connection with evening services in the Roman Catholic Church of the Most Holy Redeemer at 224 East Fourth street, New York City, recently. The following Sunday it will be the basis of a sermon: "Destiny" was not produced for church use. It is not a mawkish attempt at sentimentality. But when Tony Kelly wrote it he conceived a strong modern morality play with the Virtues and Vices personified. Incidentally the picture is technically one of the best things ever done.

One case of motion picture competition killing a theatrical offering may be found in the withdrawal of the Joseph Brooks all-star stage production of "Trilby." The World film "Trilby" was booked by opposition theatres when the play went on tour, with disastrous results for the play.

Newspaper reports tell of the purchase by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, of the holdings of Harry E. Aitken, former president. The stock is valued at $720,000.

Where can we get stories? That is the question agitating every leading producing company. The field of plays is rapidly becoming exhausted. Heavy inroads have been made upon the literature of the world. Now comes the inevitable result. Good stories must be had, and noted authors will be called upon to furnish them. Two items worth citation are the recent purchase by Lasky of all of Mark Twain's works available, and the fund appropriated by Equitable to go after famous fiction writers.

But the established scenario writers may gather consolation from the fact that they will be in demand for several years to come to adapt the stories for the screen and all scenario writers, whether established or not, may feel happy in the knowledge that, if their output is good, they can soon demand for scenario prices as high as those paid for books or plays. But the material must be good.

The moving picture folk, headed by Samuel Goldfish, will help raise a part of the million dollars for the Actors' Fund.

Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, tells the following interesting story, which he says Sarah Bernhardt told him in a letter when she was negotiating for the Universal production of "Jeanne Dore."

"Mash notes," you call them, n'est ce pas?" she wrote. "Well, I received a very funny mash-note once in a small town of your Far West.

"'You are adorable,' my mash-note ran, 'and I'd have preferred to send you orchids; but in this one-horse town I am reduced to molasses candy, of which I am forwarding you a two-pound bag. Will you take supper with me tonight? If you consent, blow your nose on the stage, and I will understand.'

"And the worst of it was," continued the great Sarah, "I had a bad cold at the time, and was afraid to blow my nose all the evening!"

BARING THEIR PASTS

Jim Kirkwood, Famous Players director, never ate butter till he left home. He was raised in a little Michigan town where lard was comme il faut.

Captain Leslie T. Peacoke, scenario writer, used to be "The Terrible Turk," and appeared as a strong man in English reviews. At the close of his act he carried Connie Ediss off-stage at arm's length.

Jim Gordon, feature director, owes his giant frame to his early work as a blacksmith.

John Henry Goldfrap, Fox publicist, wrote juvenile fiction till he heard the call of the screen.

Winfield Sheehan, of Fox, was a newspaper man, and a good one.

Walter W. Irwin was a flourishing attorney until he became general manager of V-L-S-E.

Edwin August, matinee idol, started life as Edwin August Van Der Butts.

Hugh Hoffman, publicist and writer, played the caliope in a circus.

Jim Young, director and husband of Clara Kimball Young, headed his own company on tour in Shakespearean offerings at eighteen.

Douglas Fairbanks, actor, and Joseph Farnham, press agent, were messenger boys for the same firm in Wall street. Fairbanks left Farnham outside Trinity church graveyard one noon, and announced he was going on the stage. He was right.

Hughie Mack, actor, was an undertaker.

PATHE SYRACUSE OFFICE WILL GO TO ALBANY

Fred Flarity, manager of the Syracuse branch of the Pathé Film Exchange, has just returned to that city from New York and announces that the Pathé exchange will be removed from Syracuse not later than November 30 and new offices will be opened up in Albany.

The Buffalo office of the Pathé exchange will become a buying branch and cover the state as far as Syracuse, while Mr. Flarity in charge at Albany will cover the entire eastern half of the state and the entire state of Vermont.

Hodkinson Ideals Realized in Paramount Films

"Quality Basis Is Only Reliable Basis on Which to Build," He Says, and Feels That Future Depends Upon Company's Ability to Increase Efficiency of Certain Limited Number of Reels, So That an Exhibitor Is Sure of Steady Patronage Through Merit of Pictures

WHEN 24,211 people crowded into The Strand theatre, New York, in one day to see the Lasky-Paramount Picture, "Carmen," in which Geraldine Farrar is the star, there sat at the premier a quiet man who said little but saw as the drama unfolded on the screen the realization of an ideal.

That man was W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who eight years ago used the word "photo opera," meaning the pictured version of the famous operas played by famous stars and accompanied by specially prepared scores based upon the original music.

Astonishing the theatrical world by placing Geraldine Farrar, the favorite prima donna of the greatest opera house in the world, under contract, Samuel G. Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Lasky Feature Play Company, brought to its fulfillment Mr. Hodkinson's conception.

Following the performance Mr. Hodkinson said: "The presentation of the best that there is in music, drama and literature on the screen at prices the public can afford to pay will mean the survival of the legitimate theatre only in the larger centers, for the legitimate theatre will be the motion picture house.

"It is safe to predict that once having seen Geraldine Farrar in 'Carmen' the photo play fans of this country will not only rush to see her in her other pictures, 'Temptation' and 'Maria Rosa,' but will insist upon seeing her in 'Carmen' again and again.

Quality Versus Quantity Is Aim

"What the more farsighted producers and exhibitors today are aiming to do is to get away from the old idea of quantity as opposed to quality, of cheap prices where higher prices will purchase a better grade of pictures. The quality basis is the only reliable basis on which to build.

"Our future depends on our ability to increase the efficiency of a certain number, a very limited number, of reels so that they can be made to do for us the following things: Bring in larger rentals, aid the best houses by giving them a consistent program which they can advertise and thus attract a steady patronage and tend toward an ultimate elimination of inferior reels. The nickelodeons are bound to be very largely superseded by the better class of motion picture entertainment. Reduce the number and multiply the calibre, ought to be the scheme adopted.

"The daily change is coming to be a thing of the past as far as Paramount is concerned. 'Carmen,' 'Madame Buterfly' and other pictures which we plan to have, should eliminate this crowning evil of the business. The daily change, in the first place, is based on superstition and the desire of one theatre avariciously to grasp and exploit everything put on the market, leaving nothing for competitors.

"There positively is no sound reasoning back of this. The greatest advertising medium known is the human tongue. But the daily change of films prevents the exhibitor's taking advantage of it.

"Wherever the less frequent change of film is practised and really good pictures are secured, figures will prove that business is much brisker the second or third night than it was on the opening night. Films such as those which Paramount are now booking on their own best advertising mediums.

Trend of Picture Upward

"What is the real trend of the motion picture? Its trend is toward the highest development possible. Nothing short of realizable perfection ought to be countenanced as an ideal. The public is the true criterion. To the public must eventually be put the proposition: 'What do you want?' This is what we do:

"The success of the Ladies Home Journal has been largely based upon the fact that it is edited by its readers. The Paramount Program is edited by its patrons. The live, wide-awake exhibitors who book our pictures realize this and lend us every aid in obtaining the opinion of the public on our pictures.

"It is an undoubted fact that the Famous Players Film Company, Lasky Feature Play Company, Oliver Morosco Photo Play Company and Pallas Pictures, have as regular artists some of the greatest stars of our legitimate stage. They are artists who have proven their worth.

"The motion picture producer is and is not dependent upon the talent which would ordinarily exploit legitimate drama in making our better grade of pictures. That is, we aren't entirely dependent upon artists who have made great successes on the stage, or who are especially qualified to attain pre-eminence in that department of the theatre," continued President Hodkinson.

"Present to me two pretty girls as candidates. Let one be an actress and the other a clerk in a candy store. My first choice would probably be the actress. But she need not necessarily prove the better equipped of the two.

"There are very wonderful artists who cannot adapt themselves to the screen with any degree of success.

"On the other hand, there may be artists who never could hope to attain more than relative prominence on the legitimate stage who yet become very bright motion picture stars. Both branches of the art require special qualifications.

"Through our system we can tell whether or not a star is drawing, and it is interesting to note that some whom we have tried and found wanting are seized by producers who have no means of knowing what we have learned by statistics.

Picture Theatres Monopolize Amusements

"An actor or an actress who can register a high grade of motion picture efficiency can demand an enormous salary and can also increase his or her popularity to a very great extent. The legitimate stage could not begin to compete with the film stage in this particular.

"The film producer is destined to dominate the legitimate stage, simply because he can monopolize the material. This refers to writers as well as performers. Some of the biggest playwrights are now devoting their entire time to the productions of motion picture scenarios.

"This is significant. The ultimate theatre will be the moving picture theatre. The profession of acting, in its older, legitimate form, will continue, of course, to find openings in a few of the larger centers. But the stage in its broader sense, is irrevocably signed over to the film."

Formal Fox Invasion of Canada Begins on the 17th

Exchange of the Company at 322 St. Catherine Street West, Montreal, Will Be Opened with Its President Presiding Amid Throng of Prominent Citizens

THE branch of the Fox Film Corporation, 322 St. Catherine street west, Montreal, will be officially opened on November 17. William Fox, president of the company, will preside at the opening, and it is expected that a number of prominent Canadian citizens will be present.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the company, was in Montreal last week supervising the preliminary arrangements for the inauguration of the Fox pictures in that part of the Dominion.

A big electric sign is going up outside the offices, another innovation for the Canadian exchanges, for such has never been attempted before.

Every modern appliance has been installed in the office to save time. The staff grows larger each week, and in the next two weeks the first Canadian office will carry as big a staff as any office in the country.

The value of the Fox features is apparent in the fact that not a single line of advertising has been used, and there is no important city that has not yet made application for service in the Dominion.

KALEM COMPANY BACK FROM MOJAVE DESERT

The company of Kalem players working on Kalem's newest series, "Stingaree," has just returned from the Mojave Desert, where "To the Vile Dust," the fourth episode, was filmed.

Wind storms, one of which almost caused the death of Marin Sais, and the terrific heat, made the Kalem Players' stay far from pleasant.

She was engaged by D. W. Griffith, then with the Biograph company, where she appeared in feature pictures for two years. She was starred in "The Moth and the Flame" with the Famous Players, and appeared in support of Hazel Dawn in "The Heart of Jennifer." In vaudeville she was known as "The Manhattan Girl."

FOX "CARMEN" PACKS EMPRESS IN SAN FRANCISCO ELEVEN HOURS A DAY

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

San Francisco, Nov. 8.

Although the Empress theatre is one of the largest vaudeville houses in San Francisco it is proving much too small to care for the throngs desiring to see Theda Bara in "Carmen" this week. For eleven hours each day the house is packed and it is not often that patrons can secure entrance without a wait in the foyer.

Manager Sid Grauman has been so well pleased with the interest taken in the production that it will be shown for a second week and a longer engagement may be necessary.

To serve as an introduction, an attractive stage scene has been arranged and a company of Spanish artists engaged to put on an act typical of "Carmen" and of old Spain.

Selections from the opera are rendered by Mlle. Andree Tarney, formerly with the Western Metropolitan Opera Company, and the French Grand Opera Company, while Spanish dances are given by Angelita and Lolita, popular exponents of this art.

The hit of this part of the performance, however, is being made by a tiny tot of less than five years, whose rendition of Spanish dances is creating nothing less than a furore.

The picture itself has been creating much more applause than the regular vaudeville acts, although the balance of the bill is considered a strong one.

EVEN A DIRECTOR IS NOT IMMUNE FROM PRACTICAL JOKES

There is a good laugh on Rene Plaisetty, the new Lubin director.

Last week in the taking of "The Wonderful Wager" with Raymond Hitchcock, Mr. Plaisetty, who directs with a whistle in his big ensemble scenes, was working in Fairmount Park. Some one cruelly stole his little whistle and substituted one of the police variety, with the result that there the greatest number of bluecoats imaginable came flocking around to see the new Lubin director work.

GILMORE LEAVES PACIFIC COAST FOR RAVER STUDIO IN EAST

Paul Gilmore's train pulled into the Pennsylvania Depot, New York, Sunday morning, November 7, at 9 a. m., after a transcontinental rush from Los Angeles.

He was in costume and was rushed by motor car to the Staten Island studio of the Raver Film Corporation to enact the part of the Reverend Clifton Bradford in "The Other Girl," by Augustus Thomas.

LIBERTY MAKES "JEAN," WITH SADIE LINDBLOM, FOR ASSOCIATED

Sadie Lindblom is the lead in a photoplay entitled "Jean" at the Liberty studios at San Mateo, Cal., which will be released on the Associated Program in the near future.

It is a southern story and her part shows

Miss Lindblom as a bare-footed girl, almost in rags, and carries her through to scenes in society.

On her birthday the company presented Miss Sadie with a handsome mirror encircled with electric lights.

DAVIS, FIRST TO SUCCEED WITH TRAGEDY IN VAUDEVILLE, A UNIVERSAL STAR

Edwards Davis, M. A., recognized during the present decade as one of the "high-brow" authors of the stage, a producer and an actor, has been engaged by the Universal to appear in the forthcoming production of "The Strength of the Weak." Mr. Davis, under the direction of Lucius Henderson, is to appear on the screen in the part then essayed by Tryone Power.

About ten years ago, Mr. Davis was selected by Martin Beck, as the headliner of the Orpheum Road Show. Mr. Davis was the first dramatic star to successfully present tragedy in vaudeville, appearing over one thousand times in his two-scenes tragedy "The Unmasking." Among his notable successes are "Found Out," "The Part of Life," "All Rivers Meet at Sea" and by arrangement with the first publishers of Oscar Wilde's masterpiece, the Lippincott's, his dramatization of "The Picture of Dorian Gray." Then followed under the personal direction of E. F. Albee and Martin Beck, his symbolic poem "The Kingdom of Destiny." His latest metropolitan appearance was in "The Peace Cry," a ten-people sketch in which the dominant motive was a protest against Christian participation in warfare.

NIGH, METRO DIRECTOR, MASTER OF CHARACTER DELINEATION

William Nigh, of the Metro staff of directors, is a master hand at character delineation. A remarkable example of this is in his latest production, "Emmy of Stork's Nest," in which the characters of Emmy, Bije Stork, Si Stork, Crissy Stork, Jim Whitlicka and Benton Cabot are widely differentiated and stand out in bold relief like cameos.

HAL FORDE, HIS DIRECTOR, RICHARD GARRICK, AND THE GAUMONT COMPANY AS THEY APPEAR IN "LESSONS IN LOVE," COMING RIALTO STAR (Mutual Feature)

CLOSE-UP OF HUMAN BREATH ROSEN FOR FOX SUBJECT

Spirit photographs and ghost photographs are common. They are common for the reason that they are fakes—with all due respect to those who believe that departed spirits deign to pose for the camera. Double exposure is the answer.

No everyday photographer, however, and but few of the so-called experts, can furnish you with a picture of the human breath.

While the camera has for several years been used to register the pulsations of the heart and the functioning of the other internal organs, it has remained for Phil Rosen, chief camera man for J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the William Fox masterpiece, "The Unfaithful Wife," to use it first in recording human respiration.

In "The Unfaithful Wife," in which Robert B. Mantell will be starred with Genevieve Hamper, by William Fox, a mirror is held before the face of Count Fabio Romani to ascertain whether or not life is extinct. The Count, it develops, is not dead; hence his breath is supposed to be revealed on the mirror.

How to make a close-up photograph of so intangible a quantity as the human breath at first non-plussed Mr. Rosen, but by calling into play ingenuity and by the proper arrangement of lights, he secured the desired effect.

DUSTIN FARNUM IN EAST FOR VACATION IN MAINE

Dustin Farnum, the Pallas Pictures star, who temporarily discontinued his activities on the West Coast, arrived in New York City Friday evening, en route to his home in Bucksport, Me.

Mr. Farnum came East to take a few weeks' vacation in the Maine woods, where he will enjoy a hunting trip. He has just completed his second production for the new Pallas Pictures-Paramount organization, "The Call of the Cumberlands," Charles Neville Buck's well-known romantic drama, which the former thinks is even a bigger production than his first subject for this company, Booth Tarkington's "The Gentleman from Indiana."

Immediately upon the termination of his short vacation he will return to the Pallas Pictures studios to commence work on his third subject, which it is expected, will be "Davy Crockett."

Mr. Farnum spoke much of his latest "find," Helen Eddy, the clever little girl who appears with striking success in several scenes of "The Gentleman from Indiana."

COLONEL DRAPER, THANHOUSER, IS DEAD

Colonel T. Waln-Morgan Draper, known for his interpretation of types, died on November 8, after a brief illness. Colonel Draper was an American by birth, but received his education abroad. After fighting in the Franco-Prussian war he returned to the United States and followed his profession of mining engineer.

Some years ago he got in motion pictures by accident and remained at the work until the time of his death. He has appeared mostly in films made by Thanhouser. His last picture was directed by George Foster Platt at the New Rochelle studios, in which he played opposite Gladys Hulette and Arthur Bauer.

KLEINE FORCES SETTLED IN THEIR NEW HOME

Last week was a busy one for George Kleine employees, when the entire business was removed from 11 East Fourteenth street to the Bronx studios at 805 East 175th street. All departments were moved, including the auditing, advertising and scenario divisions of the business. Six producers are engaged in preparing forthcoming Kleine features and are now working on subjects scheduled for release during the late winter.

Order has been restored from the chaos of moving and the conduct of business is again normal.

SELIG TOO BUSY TO ACCEPT SCHOOL BOARD HONOR

While appreciating the honor conferred upon him, William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, upon his recent return from Los Angeles to Chicago, declined the nomination to membership on the Chicago Board of Education.

Mr. Selig was recently nominated as a member of the board by Mayor William Hale Thompson, of Chicago. Mr. Selig finds his business interests too extensive to permit giving attention to the duties of a school board member.

ELEANOR WOODRUFF TO WEAR GOWNS BY MAURICE

Gowns valued at $10,000 and designed by M. Maurice, head of the modiste concern, Maison Maurice, will be worn by Eleanor Woodruff in the new Vitagraph five-part feature, "Colton, U. S. N.", now being taken under the direction of Paul Scardon.

Thanks to the artistry and courtesy of M. Maurice, Miss Woodruff will be suitably garbed to portray the exacting role of one of Newport's leaders of fashion.

OTIS HARLAN'S LITTLE DAUGHTER TO MAKE FILM BOW IN HOYT PLAY

Little Marion Harlan, only daughter of Otis Harlan, the comedian, is going to emulate her father and enter motion picture work. She will make her initial debut in Hoyt's "A Temperance Town," now in course of production at the Chicago studio of the Selig company.

Powell, Star Finder for Films, Joins Equitable

Man Who Discovered Theda Bara and Staged All Nance O'Neil Subjects Will Direct "Chain Invisible" for Spiegel, Who Signs Teddy Sampson for a Feature

EQUITABLE MOTION PICTURES CORPORATION, which appropriated one hundred thousand dollars with which to purchase film stories and adaptations, announces that it has secured Frank W. Powell, the man responsible for "A Fool There Was," the discovered of Theda Bara and the man who staged all the Nance O'Neil pictures for William Fox.

Mr. Powell signed with Equitable after lengthy conferences with Arthur H. Spiegel at the Sherman House, Chicago, where Powell is producing "The Fourth Estate" in conjunction with the Chicago Herald.

TEDDY SAMPSON — FRANK K. POWELL

Mr. Spiegel announced that Powell's first effort for Equitable would be "The Chain Invisible," the Richard Le Gallienne story, in which either Emmett Corrigan and Gail Kane will co-star or Brandon Tynan and Lily Cahill will work jointly.

Mr. Powell, whose production of "A Fool There Was" proved to be the most sensational picture of its season, was responsible also for each of the film plays in which Nance O'Neil has appeared.

For the Equitable corporation, Mr. Powell will devote his time to the production of original works from the pens of the various authors on the Equitable scenario staff.

Mr. Powell will complete his directorial obligations with the William Fox concen December 1, and will report to Equitable immediately thereafter.

Teddy Sampson, in real life Mrs. Ford Sterling, and for the past two years associated with D. W. Griffith at his Hollywood studio, became a member of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's stars this week, when she entered into a long term contract to appear exclusively for that company.

Miss Sampson arrived in New York last Sunday after a trip across the continent, during which trip she stopped at seventeen cities and appeared personally in theatres at which films in which she was featured were playing.

Miss Sampson will, in all likelihood, be seen in the production of "A Man and the Desert," in which it is now the intention of the Equitable to offer Emmett Corrigan or Frank Sheridan.

Miss Sampson created her most favorable impression by the work she did in "The Fox Woman," one of D. W. Griffith's most liked photodramas of last season.

In vaudeville Miss Sampson was considered one of the most graceful of dancers and received a special commendatory epistle from the famed Pavlowa.

However, during a performance at the Orpheum theatre, Los Angeles, she was approached by a representative of the Griffith studio and but recently completed her two years' course under him.

In addition to "The Fox Woman," Miss Sampson has appeared as a featured member in "The Outlaw's Revenge," "The Escape," "Home, Sweet Home," in which she played the heavy part, and was co-starred with Helen Ware in "Cross Currents," which is a forthcoming Triangle release.

Miss Sampson will begin work at the Equitable studio within the week and will appear in one of the S. E. V. Taylor productions before beginning her feature under Frank Powell or John Ince.

Ford Sterling, who is the other half of Miss Sampson's immediate family, has written a stirring five-reel story, which he is forwarding on to Russell Edgar Smith, of the Equitable scenario department, and he has expressed a wish that it be used as Miss Sampson's first vehicle with her new company.

Real Food from Eating-House Man for Arrow

Restaurateur Furnishes Dining Set for "Grist of the Mill" and Estabrook Takes Enough Chicory Salad to Keep 7 Manganese Snail-Hounds Alive 9 Minutes

INTIMATE SNAPSHOTS OF THE ARROW STUDIO DURING THE FILMING OF THE FIRST EPISODES OF THE PATHE "WHO'S GUILTY?" SERIES

CATERING to the motion picture studio promises to open up a new field from restaurants. Howard Hansel, director of the Arrow studios, had occasion to call for the services of one of them last week, when a cabaret scene for the second episode of "Who's Guilty?" the new Pathé series, was being filmed.

Mr. Hansel insists that the restaurant scene be perfect in detail, which was found impossible with the regular studio "props." So a restaurant man was sent for. He provided a dozen tables with complete outfit of linen, silver and china, and then real food.

In order to prove that there was no deception, Mr. Hansel sent for a party of newspapermen, considered the greatest experts on the handling of real food in the world, to go over the set and make sure it had the proper atmosphere.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is therefore able to state on its own authority, that the following are facts: During the rehearsal and "take" of the scene, Emmy Wehlen, star of the "Who's Guilty?" series, drank two cocktails, composed of cherries and canned beef boullion, and drank 97 cents worth of cider, posing as champagne; Howard Estabrook, co-star, ate enough chicory salad to keep seven Manganese snail-hounds alive for nine minutes, and the china broken by newspaper men, who crowded into the scene, presumably as elephants, if laid end to end, would reach from a point just south of Yonkers to the fifth chapter of Exodus.

To insure absolute thoroughness in this scene, Mr. Hansel secured the services of Miss Bernice Sibeck, premier danseuse at Shanley's, to appear as a cabaret dancer. Tables had been reserved by one of the most prominent "extras" in New York, and their appreciation of the entertainment provided, as well as the presence of actual food, gave a distinctly professional atmosphere to the setting. P. A. Parsons, of the Pathé exchange, and Albert Levino, of the Arrow Film Company, wrote the "business" for the newspaper men.

The second episode of the series, of which this scene will form a part will be known as "Grist of the Mill."

FIVE KALEM PLAYERS SHAKEN UP IN AUTO CRASH

Five players who took part in "The Luring Lights," the four-act Kalem drama based upon George H. Brennan's novel, "Anna Malleen," received a severe shaking up when an auto in which they were riding crashed down an embankment during one of the scenes.

Fortunately, however, their injuries were not serious and they were able to resume work the following day. "The Luring Lights" features Miss Stella Hoban.

New York Papers Pay Tribute to "Madame Butterfly"

The "Mail" Carries Good Tidings, the "Tribune" Shows Magisterial Approbation, "World" Voices Everybody's Opinion and "Sun" Makes Performance Shine with Its Approval

THE screen adaptation of John Luther Long's classic, "Madame Butterfly," produced by the Famous Players Film Company under the direction of Sid Olcott, with Mary Pickford starring in the role of Cho-Cho-San, has created one of the screen sensations of the year.

The fact that the Paramount picturization of the idyllic love tragedy of old Japan, already celebrated as an opera, novel and play, presented Mary Pickford in the first Oriental characterization of her career, attracted attention to the production.

That Little Mary rose superior to the great difficulties imposed by the exacting role, and not only equaled but surpassed her success in the depiction of Occidental characters was attested by the reviews of her impersonation of "Madame Butterfly" that appeared in the New York daily newspapers following its initial presentation at the Strand theatre.

As a compliment both to Lasky's "Carmen" and a tribute to the Famous Players production of Long's immortal story, the Evening Sun headed the review: "Mary Pickford in 'Madame Butterfly' Drawing Like 'Carmen,'" and continued: "A submissive 'Madame Butterfly' follows the tigerish 'Carmen' at the Strand theatre, but the effect on the attendance seems about the same. As Butterfly Mary Pickford headed the Strand for another record yesterday. The first day's business equaled 'Carmen's.'

"And Mary Pickford deserved it all. She has never done anything better than this impersonation of the naive, quaint, high-souled Butterfly."

The Evening Mail said: "A patiently waiting line that extended from the box office of the Strand theatre to half way up the block around the corner on Forty-sixth street proved Sunday night that Mary Pickford as a drawing attraction is equally magnetic in a Japanese kimono as she is in a plain American frock.

"If it were not for her smile, we would have had our doubts if the girl on the screen really was Mary Pickford.

"She could step from the screen into a busy street of Nagasaki and arouse no suspicions at all, for she has acquired the Japanese trudge, the Japanese meekness and the Japanese giggle with delightful accuracy.

"'Madame Butterfly' draws deeply upon one's sympathy."

The New York Tribune decisively says that "Mary Pickford, a great artist, does some of the best work of her career in the picture version of 'Madame Butterfly.' Mary Pickford has been able to carry not only the manners but the appearance of a young Japanese girl with such a degree of success that the illusion is preserved even when she is close to the camera.

"In particular Mary Pickford has copied the Japanese walk with fidelity. Anybody who could sit through Mary Pickford's 'Butterfly' without wiping his eyes is shy either a heart or a handkerchief."

The Evening World, concurring in these opinions, said: "A new Mary Pickford was seen last night at the Strand theatre, and scored a new triumph as the beautiful little heroine of John Luther Long's story."

The trade press as a whole was also very commendatory in its remarks concerning this Famous Players offering.

Horsley Prepares Detective Series for Centaur

Crane Wilbur Is the Author of "The Adventures of Allan Dare," Each Episode Complete in Itself, and Will Also Take the Star Part of Pictures, for Mutual Release

DAVID HORSLEY has had prepared and has just begun the production of a detective series to be known under the general heading of "The Adventures of Allan Dare," which he will release as Centaur Star Features on the Mutual program.

The first picture is sub-titled "The Phantom of the Road," and will be released December 22.

The fact that "The Adventures of Allan Dare" is a series does not mean that it will be a succession of disjointed episodes.

In this case each release will be in itself a complete story, built upon a new adventure of Dare, and carried through to its final solution.

One adventure will have no bearing upon the preceding or subsequent one in the matter of the story, the only connection of one release with the other being in the use of the same characters throughout.

In this manner the trouble usually coming from a serial and series—that of theatre patrons missing an episode and then losing interest because the thread of the story is broken—will be entirely obviated.

Instead, interest will be increased, a point which has been proved by the biggest magazines of the country applying the same principles of production.

A few cases in point are the Reeve "Craig Kennedy" stories, the Booth Tarkington "Penrod" adventures and others of a like nature. These stories have built up a big cumulative following for the magazines that could not have been obtained had they been published serially.

Mr. Horsley in following this idea feels sure that the series will be highly successful.

The series is written by Crane Wilbur, whose stories, "The Blood of Our Brothers" and "Could a Man Do More?" were recently picturized by Mr. Horsley.

In the first picture, "The Phantom of the Road," Mr. Wilbur portrays a mysterious gentleman of leisure who appears on the road in a big black motor car and wearing black cloak, cap and mask.

A murder mystery occurs and the guilt is fastened upon an innocent girl. The mysterious gentleman solves the problem and places the responsibility upon the proper party.

In the cast are: Crane Wilbur, who plays Allan Dare; Carl Von Schiller, Edward Collins, Gordon Mullen, Celia Santon, Mrs. Williams and a host of others.

The length of time the series will run has not been decided.

Metro Boosters Gather for Banquet at Henkel's

Club Assembles for Merry Time in New York Over Specially Prepared Dishes, and Listens to Informal Addresses by President Rowland, Treasurer Joseph Engel and Several Directors

THE first of a series of dinners arranged for the Metro Boosters Club, the new social organization within the Metro Pictures Corporation and its allied manufacturers, was given early this month at Keen's Chop House in Forty-fourth street, New York, and the new organization was launched with a preponderance of the element known as "pep."

Paul Henkel arranged a special menu of Metro dishes and covers were laid for thirty-five. Informal addresses were made by President Rowland, Treasurer Joseph Engel, producing directors, Noble, Carewe, Jones and Belmore and then the makers of pictures had a chance to learn what the sellers of pictures thought of them and their product.

Louis B. Mayer of Boston, Harry Weiss of Chicago, E. M. Saunders of New York, James A. Fitzgerald of Detroit, John D. Clarke of Philadelphia and Cresshon Smith of Des Moines, Metro managers in their respective territories, all spoke of the satisfaction expressed by their exhibitors with the consistency of Metro pictures and congratulated the manufacturers of the great strides in the high artistic quality and increasing popularity of their pictures.

Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., Lawrence Weber, president of the Popular Plays and Players, and George A. Wiley, manager of the Quality Pictures Corporation, spoke for the manufacturers.

At the close of the dinner Treasurer Joseph W. Engel distributed tiny gold pins, with the word Metro in letters of attractive design on a blue enamel background, among the diners. Every Metro booster is expected to wear one of them in his coat lapel and the demand has already exhausted the supply.

The menu was as follows:

More Artistic Unity Sought in Edisons by McChesney

He Divides Studios Into Several Companies with Permanent Directors to Enable Film Stage Managers to Get Better Acquainted with Players' Abilities

AMONG the several changes which Manager Leonard W. McChesney has instituted since he took hold of the Edison studio is the dividing up of the stock companies into practically an organization of several stock companies, each with its own director.

Mr. McChesney believes, although it has been customary for years with Edison, that by assigning certain players with certain directors, each will get to know better the other's capabilities and work out pictures of more artistic unity and fuller dramatic expression.

Under this new arrangement, Mabel Trunnelle will be permanently associated with Director Richard Ridgley with whom she has worked much, even under the old system. Like many of the other coupling of players who have not been usually playing together, Robert Conness will play with her.

Director John H. Collins, who has directed Viola Dana a great deal, will have her permanently, but Edward Earle, who has played little in productions with Miss Dana will hereafter appear opposite her.

Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt, who for years have been associated in the public memory almost as much as Irving and Terry, will play together again after quite a time apart under Director George Ridgwell.

Pat O'Malley, who played with Miss Dana, will now be seen with Leonie Flugrath, the featured child player of the stage, under Director Burton George. Under Director E. C. Taylor will be Bessie Learn and Bob Walker; Director Langdon West, Margaret Prussing and Carlton King; Director Frank McGlynn, Grace Williams and Richard Tucker; while Comedy Director Will Louis will have Jean Dumar and Ray McKee, as before.

Other members of the stock companies will be subject to assignment to the different directors' companies because of the characters they play as in the cases of Sally Crute and Bigelow Cooper, being much in demand by practically all the directors.

Thanhouser No Advocate of Nude in Motion Pictures

New Rochelle Producer Issues Statement Correcting Impression Spread by Wrong Captions Put on an Interview Sent Out by His Publicity Department

EDWIN THANHOUSER has issued a statement to correct an impression that he advocates the nude in motion pictures. An erroneous idea has been created through the use of wrong captions over an interview with Mr. Thanhouser in some of the trade papers. Mr. Thanhouser absolutely repudiates the suggestion or inference that he believes in the introduction of nude figures in motion pictures just for the sake of using the human form for this purpose.

Mr. Thanhouser's letter follows:

"There has appeared in several trade papers an interview with me which has been wrongly captioned, insomuch as it conveys the impression that I advocate the nude in moving pictures. The original caption of this interview as submitted by our publicity department was "Inspiration, a Study in Thanhouser Ideals," and any change that tends to create the impression I favor the nude in pictures is wrong and should be corrected.

"I am absolutely opposed to the nude in motion pictures unless employed to serve a definite and unquestioned purpose in a subject which can be exhibited before any audience with perfect propriety.

"The fact that our five-reel Mutual masterpicture, "Inspiration," was viewed and passed on by the National Board of Censorship, without a single alteration, will indicate that it is an example of the kind I stand sponsor for, and that must speak for itself."

LUBIN'S DON COMEDIES MAKE HIT IN AUSTRALIA

D. L. Don, the Lubin comedian, whose work has placed him within the few weeks he has been appearing before the camera, among the leading comedians of motion picture players, is the recipient of a letter from Australia, stating that his pictures have met with wonderful success.

Don was for many years a strong favorite of Australians, having appeared for several seasons as the feature of "The Belle of New York" and "The Girl from Paris" productions.

"DAMAGED GOODS" DRAWS CROWDS IN WASHINGTON, D. C., RUN

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10.

"Damaged Goods" had an exceptional run of one week at Moore's Strand theatre. The production was given a very serious presentation in keeping with the theme of the play, with a spoken prologue and epilogue.

Children were not admitted. There was no attempt at the sensational as the spoken drama of the same name had been heralded in this city a few seasons ago, and for this Mr. Moore has received commendation by those who believe there is a strong teaching element in "Damaged Goods."

"How Molly Made Good" Pleases Gotham Audiences

Six Reel Feature Showing Stars of Speaking Stage in Their Homes Give Spectators in Six Theatres an Intimate Knowledge of Playerfolks' Life

"HOW MOLLY MADE GOOD," Kulee Features, Inc., was shown to New York audiences last week at the Audubon, Spooner, Crotona, Nemo, the Academy of Music and the Riverside theatres.

The picture is attracting attention because of its novelty. The six reels show a cast of well-known stars of the speaking stage. The home life of the playerfolk and the intimate side of their personalities are revealed to the public. Their wives, children, their very pets are woven deftly into a pleasing motion picture story in six reels.

The six reels of film are concentrated personality. From the time that Lulu Glaser, in calico apron, basket in hand and dog at heel is discovered by the reporter heroine of the story in her vegetable garden at Mount Vernon, until the sixth reel of film leaves Henrietta Crosman waving goodbye to Molly from the porch of her home in Wilton, Conn., it is one flashlight of personality after the other.

MARGUERITE GALE

In quick succession the film carries the audience from May Robson at Sheepshead Bay to Henry Kolker at Pelham, and then along a fascinating route of the homes of Cyril Scott, Julian Eltinge, Charles Ross, Mabel Fenton, Robert Edeson, Leo Ditrichstein and Julia Dean and Madame Fjorde in turn.

The "Molly" interest is the pivot upon which the star plot is hung. And the interest is cumulative from start to finish. A gage has been thrown at the young reporter's feet—and the constant possibility of her losing in "the great game" she is playing keeps the story keyed up to top-notch interest and enthusiasm.

Ocean Film Company Finishes "Life Without a Soul"

Director Smiley Completes After Five Weeks' Work, Adaptation of Mrs. Shelley's Famous "Frankenstein," by Jesse J. Goldburg, Vice-President of Corporation

AFTER being engaged for a period of five solid weeks, without one day's let-up, Joseph W. Smiley, the head director of the Ocean Film Corporation, lately organized, completed the initial release of that company, "Life Without a Soul," adapted by Jesse J. Goldburg, the vice-president and general manager of the company, from the classic "Frankenstein," written by Mrs. Shelley.

The story is an unsual one, dealing with the experiences of a young scientist, who discovers a life-giving fluid and attempts to create a human being superior mentally and physically to his fellow-men.

A love theme pervades the photoplay, and the scenic effects can best be judged by the statement that the company travelled to Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Florida, Savannah and Dahlonega, Georgia, Arizona and northern New York, where the exterior scenes are largely laid.

George De Carlton, manager of productions of the Ocean Film Corporation, as well as Mr. Goldburg, were present through out the making of the entire multiple reel production.

A private showing, for the benefit of exchange men, state right buyers, and the trade generally, will be held at the Candler theatre, New York, Sunday, November 21, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Because of the unusual subject, and the scientific as well as lay moral, brought out by the photoplay, a short address, it is expected, will be delivered by a prominent minister as well as a prominent physician, at the close of the private performance.

The Ocean Film Corporation will proceed to immediately produce two five-part features a month, for a period of three months, after which it is expected that the organization will be so complete, as to permit of the producing and releasing of one five-part feature a week.

Negotiations are now pending for the purchase of a large tract of land in Westchester county, where the company intends building its own studios and laboratory for the housing of its eastern organization. Winter quarters, it is expected, will be erected in southern Georgia, where the climatic conditions are more even and favorable than in Florida.

An offer has been made by the Savannah Board of Trade to provide every convenience to the Ocean Film Corporation, and unusual advantages in the event of the company erecting its southern studio in that city.

Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West" Makes Third Appearance on Lasky-Paramount

VICTOR MOORE'S third Paramount photoplay produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and his second appearance as the Bowery boy, Chimmie Fadden will be shown on November 22, when Mr. Moore will be seen in "Chimmie Fadden Out West."

Cecil B. DeMille and Jeanie MacPherson wrote the comedy and Mr. DeMille personally directed it. The Lasky Company was fortunate in being able to retain for the principal roles all the players who took part in the original "Chimmie Fadden," which was released on the Paramount Program last July. In the cast are Camille Astor, Mrs. Lewis McCord, as Chimmie's mother; Raymond Hatton, as the brother; Ernest Joy, Tom Forman, Harry Hadfield, and Florence Dagmar.

For this comedy they have taken Chimmie Fadden far from his old haunts on the Bowery and placed him in a Western environment. Chimmie leaves New York for the gold mining district of Nevada for the purpose of making an announcement that he has found gold and starting an advertising propaganda for the railroad which runs through the territory.

All this he manages to do, but not without difficulty. It happens, however, that his employers, seeing the opportunity to capitalize on Chimmie's publicity, issue stock for the fictitious mine. Chimmie turns on them in time to save hundreds of persons from financial ruin.

DREWS FILMING SECOND MONTGOMERY FLAGG SUBJECT

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, assisted by Mary Maurice, are busily engaged in the production of "Is Christmas a Bore?" the second story from the pen of James Montgomery Flagg to be produced by the Vitagraph Company.

GIRLS ON LAKE STEAMER ALMOST DROWN IN SHIP SCENE FOR ATLAS

The Atlas Company of Detroit, while making a comedy for the Associated Program called "The Parson Slips a Cog," in which they used the largest Great Lake steamer, "The City of Detroit III," had an accident which almost proved fatal.

While making this production, the spectators crowded against the rail with such force that the rail broke and some of the girls were thrown into the water.

The steamer stopped at once and the tumult was on. Some men jumped in to rescue the fair damsels, the older ones either were stupefied or fainted, and general chaos was on for a few minutes. Thanks to the timeliness of Capt. Fred Simpson no accident resulted to anyone outside of a scare and a little ducking.

Hornung Got Material for "Stingaree" at First Hand

Author of Story Picturized by Kalem and Released in 12 Two-Part Episodes, Founded Character on Life of Outlaw He Learned of in Australia

IT was due to the wanderlust which caused a young newspaper reporter to resign a perfectly good position on a leading London daily and desert the fleshpots of England for the relative discomforts of the Antipodes that "Stingaree," one of the most striking characters in fiction and motion pictures, was born.

Ernest William Hornung is the man who brought "Stingaree" into being. The Kalem Company is now engaged in giving this famous character life on the screen in a series of twelve two-act episodes. The first of these is "An Enemy of Mankind," and it will be issued on Wednesday, November 24. The succeeding episodes, each of which is complete in itself, will follow at weekly intervals.

It was at the impressionable age of eighteen that Mr. Hornung resigned his position and left for Australia, where he obtained a position on the editorial staff of the Sidney Bulletin.

At that time the country was still agitated over the deeds of the notorious Kelley gang, the Gardiner gang and other bushrangers. In the latter band was a young lad named Gilbert, who, although of a respectable family, deliberately chose a criminal career.

Although these gangs had been wiped out before Mr. Hornung's arrival in Australia, the outrages they had perpetrated were still one of the principal topics of conversation. The newcomer collected all the data he could concerning the careers of the outlaws, making a special study of Gilbert. The latter was undoubtedly the source of Mr. Hornung's inspiration when he wrote "Stingaree."

Mr. Hornung knew how best to use his material. Fresh from Australia, he was forcibly struck, on his return to the mother country, by the fresh, youthful unconventionality of the one, and the prim, stiff social traditions of the other. After writing a number of stories which became popular, Mr. Hornung gave further evidence of his ingenuity in the weaving of plots in "The Amateur Cracksman," the first of the stories in which Raffles made his appearance.

Encouraged by Raffles' popularity, Mr. Hornung decided to create a character which would be to the Australian bush what his first outlaw-hero was to polite English society. The result was "Stingaree."

The central character of the tales issued under this general title is an Englishman who is forced into exile and resolves to make mankind pay a heavy toll for the wrongs inflicted upon him. Throughout his career of crime, however, this remark able character refrains from staining his hands with blood.

True Boardman, who enacts the title role, makes the motion picture Stingaree exactly the sort of character that Mr. Hornung had in mind. Seldom has any player fitted a role more perfectly. Howie, the ruffian who, although utterly unprincipled, restrains his bloodthirsty desires because of his love for the brainier criminal, is portrayed by Paul Hurst.

LEGAL LIGHTS GIVE UNIVERSAL DIRECTOR POINTS ON LAW FOR A PICTURE

Two legal luminaries were among the visitors at Universal City this week, Professor F. C. Woodward, head of the legal department of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University of California, and Alfred Wright, one of the leading attorneys of Los Angeles.

These two gentlemen were very much interested in the making of the pictures, but nothing interested them more than a legal play entitled "His First Case," in which Sydney Ayres plays the leading role.

They watched the filming of a number of scenes of this picture, and were able to give Director Lynn C. Reynolds a number of pointers that were of assistance to him in making the scenes perfect from the aspect of the legal mind.

Burning of Four-Story Brick Building for "Children of Eve," Edison, Is Thrilling Sight for Spectators

FIRE SCENE IN "CHILDREN OF EVE," A CURRENT KLEINE-EDISON RELEASE

DESTRUCTION by fire of a four-story, especially constructed brick factory building in Fort Schuyler, N. Y., last Sunday, while making the final scene for "Children of Eve," the Edison Feature to be released November 10, through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, provided more thrills than bargained for, and furnished at least one narrowly-averted tragedy that for a time threatened to cause a panic amongst the five hundred women and girls engaged in the scene, and an equal number of spectators who had motored out to witness the spectacle.

The leap for life from the roof by a fireman, and the rescue of girls from the topmost floor of the blazing building by firemen who slid down life ropes, and by others who carried them down ladders, was realistic to the utmost, but the actual near-tragedy sprung a bit of realism not expected.

A camera operator, to get a certain viewpoint of the conflagration, had climbed a platform atop scaffolding about sixty feet high. He had no trouble getting up there because a fire ladder was available, but this means of ascension was wrecked when a brick wall of the factory crashed to the ground, burying ladders, hose, axes and other fire-fighting apparatus.

And when the building was fired and the immense quantity of waste film, powder and gasoline stored in it, began to burn, Mr. Cameraman's perch became quite the hottest place on the map, and there was no way aside from jumping, for him to get down.

He was game, however, and stuck to his job, notwithstanding the scaffolding was scorching in a dozen places and threatening to burst into flames every instant. His tripod was blistered and the leather casing of his machine fairly smoking, but he never wavered.

It looked serious for the plucky photographer, but he continued turning the crank of his camera, getting, perforce, a magnificent view of the raging fire.

At last, when it appeared as if he must succumb or leap to probable death, the front of the burning building collapsed and the terrifying heat abated, and he was rescued.

Serial Photodramas Draw Crowds to Boston Theatres

List of Players from Lubin and Vitagraph Who Will Attend Ball on December 1 Announced —Reward Offered for Recovery of Stolen "Fanchon the Cricket" Print

Special to Motion Picture News

Boston, Nov. 10.

THIS city is daily becoming more and more entranced by the silent acting of Mary Pickford. Without doubt she has won over to the films more people who had been prejudiced against them than any other actress on the screen. This is particularly true of Boston.

In certain circles players whose abilities are confined solely to the screen are discussed with marked forbearance, and sometimes almost with a supercilious sneer. It is not so with Miss Pickford. Wherever her name is mentioned it brings forth only serious discussion and nearly always nothing but unstinted praise.

All of which is prefatory to the fact that the Pickford "Butterfly" has taken its place in artistic Boston side by side with the many operatic "Butterflies" who have appeared here.

Miss Pickford's acting has never shown so much of that repose which is so characteristic of it; it has never revealed more clearly the studious application to her work which helps to make her acting thorough down to the nicest detail; it has never been better proof of the fact that the screen is a medium for an acting which is an art in itself, and which does not depend at all upon the usual histrionic qualifications necessary to the player on the speaking stage.

A print of Mary Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket" has been stolen from the Auditorium theatre in Norwich, Conn. A reward has been offered by the theatre for information which will lead to the recovery of the film.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company and the Vitagraph Company of America have announced the list of stars who will attend the annual Movie Ball in the Boston Arena, December 1. The Vitagraph stars who will attend are: Earle Williams, Anita Stewart, Wally Van (Cutey), Edith Storey, Mrs. Mary Maurice and Hughie Mack.

The Lubin stars are: Richard Buhler, Billie Reeves, Joseph Kaufman, David L. Don, Francis Joyner, Ethel Clayton, Vinnie Burns and Rosetta Brice.

"Neal of the Navy," the Pathé serial, is scoring a remarkable success in New England. The busy Sam Bernfeld, who divides his time well between the Minerva, where he sleeps, the St. James theatre, where he chats with Manager Brennan, and the Pathé exchange on Tremont Row, where he is usually surrounded by a group of as busy exhibitors, has placed the serial in no less than 179 theatres in this district.

Of these, eighteen are in Boston, seventy-one in Massachusetts outside of Boston, thirty-five in Maine, sixteen in New Hampshire, eighteen in Vermont, seven in Rhode Island and fourteen in Connecticut.

The Boston theatres in which the serial is drawing crowds are: Scollay Square Olympia, Boston theatre, St. James, Globe, Bowdoin Square, Beacon, Palace, Old South, Hub, Eagle, Superb, Egleston Square, Supreme, Roslindale, Winthrop Hall, Everett Square, Gem and Day Square.

The Pathé Gold Roosters are being used at the Boston theatre, and the Wallingford series is attracting much patronage to the Bijou.

BICKEL TO HEAD KLEINE COMEDY COMPANY THE SIXTH

Another comedy company has been added to the six companies now working at the Kleine Studios. This will be headed by George Bickel, of Bickel and Watson, and will produce a series of laugh-makers especially written for him.

In certain character roles such as that of the musician which he handled so successfully in the Ziegfeld "Follies" shows, Bickel has no equal. Characters of a shabby-genteel, old gentleman type will in general constitute his line of work.

Supporting Bickel are Millicent Evans, Eddie Boulden and Susan Westford. Millicent Evans is remembered as Douglas Fairbanks' leading woman in "Officer 666," as the dainty leading woman of "The Blue Mouse" and many other successes under the Klaw and Erlanger management. Her film experience has also been extensive. Miss Evans has been starred in Universal and Biograph productions.

Eddie Boulden, familiar to picture patrons through his several years' experience in Edison stock, needs no introduction. Susan Westford, who is the sister of Lillian Russell, is another well-known photoplayer who will appear in support of George Bickel.

EMMY WEHLEN IS UNDER LONG CONTRACT WITH METRO

In order to correct an error regarding the status of Emmy Wehlen as a Metro star, the Metro Pictures Corporation announces that Miss Wehlen is under a long-time contract to appear in Metro pictures produced by Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc.

She has been granted permission to appear in a serial now being made by the Arrow Film Corporation for Pathé, and at the conclusion of her work in this serial she will appear in Metro pictures until the completion of her contract.

This announcement is made because of a report that Miss Wehlen had completed her contract for Metro pictures.

KITTY GORDON JOINS WORLD FILM

Kitty Gordon, one of the most noted of beautiful English women and a highly accomplished actress, has been engaged by Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, for the forthcoming production of "As in a Looking Glass."

KITTY GORDON

The speaking drama of this name was played in this country and England by Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Bernard Beere in hot rivalry when both actresses were in their prime.

The story, which first appeared in book form, was written by the well-known English novelist, F. C. Phillips, and created a great sensation in Europe and America.

PRESENT KRITERIONS FORM PROGRAM "AD INTERIM"

"Of the films being released by the Kriterion Sales Corporation, a number of the reels are those previously released in restricted territories.

"These reels are not the ones that will constitute the new Kriterion Program, but are being released in the interim until the new program is completed."

This statement was made by Joseph Engelman, in charge of Kriterion publicity, yesterday.

Bush, Indian Film, Entered Industry Via Pathé

Eastern Manager Handling Chicago Tribune's "German Side of the War" Pictures Opened the Peerless Exchange of Illinois After Training in Gold Rooster Methods

PAUL HENRY BUSH, Eastern manager of the Indian Film Company, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, handling the "German Side of the War" pictures of the Chicago Tribune, started in the film business about two and a half years ago, coming from the Pacific Coast, where he was in the tobacco trade.

His entry into the motion picture business was with Pathé Freres. In the four months he was connected with that company he made himself thoroughly familiar with certain phases of the business and, deciding to branch out for himself, succeeded in interesting capital in an exchange he was then forming, the Peerless Film Company of Illinois. This exchange operated three branches and soon became well known.

Withdrawing from the Peerless, Mr. Bush became associated with the Indian Film Company. Mr. Bush believes that by applying to the film industry business principles he had familiarized himself with in regular mercantile lines he would put his plans into successful operation in a comparatively short time.

"THE RING OF THE BORGIAS"

(Edison-General—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A SWIFTLY-MOVING melodrama, with its types all drawn from the higher social levels, and its scenes laid amid wealth and luxury, such as this, will find a big public awaiting it. Such a picture need not be over careful in its regard for the truth, or even the logical probabilities of life, and so long as the dramatic crises are frequent enough, and skillfully handled there probably will be little criticism from the box office.

The author goes back to the practices of mediaeval Rome for the foundation of his story, and the attempt to apply the villainies of that period to modern life is thrilling. The villainess who reads of Lucrezia's famous ring, dipped in the venom of the cobra, takes it literally, buys a "Borgia" ring, procures a cobra and extracts the venom. She then uses the hidden barb of the ring to kill the wife who stands between her and her desires. She does this by a simple handshake at a mask ball.

Cora Linton plays the adventuress. She is an excellent type for such a role, but her face is never that of a murderess. There may be more alluring screen stars than Cora Linton, but right at the moment we cannot recall their names. She throws herself into her part admirably, and shows a certain ability in the shading of expression, which is not only effective, but becoming.

Augustus Phillips is convincing as the banker who is attracted to the adventuress, and Margaret Prussing gives a pleasing interpretation of the part of his wealthy ward. Carlton King and Richard Tucker also have accomplished some creditable work.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE SEA"

(Equitable—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

A SIMPLE story, logically constructed and pleasingly told, is something of a rarity on the screen. But these three elements have been assembled in this offering.

It is logical because Russell Smith, an experienced scenario writer, made the script; it is pleasing because Muriel Ostriche is given a real opportunity to display her charms, and because other members of the cast also show genuine appreciation of the story; and its simplicity arises out of the locale in which the action is staged.

The scenes were taken at Block Island, where shore and water were used as a background for the experiences of a fisher girl, who, left motherless, yearns for the glitter of life among the society folk just across the Sound.

An accident to a yachting party brings the fulfillment of her desires, but she remains unspoiled throughout her subsequent career in drawing rooms and at teas.

Not until she has been cleared of a false accusation of murder, not until she is about to go back to the fishing hut with her father, does her love for the rich young man clear its path of all obstacles.

Miss Ostriche makes Margot, the fisher girl, genuinely appealing, in the wild, free life of the village as well as in the conventional settings of society. Good characterizations of the old fisherman and the society woman who takes Margot to educate because Margot had saved her from drowning, are given by W. H. Tooker and Catherine Calhoun, respectively. The other principals—Clara Whipple, Clifford Gray, Roy Applegate and Miss Langtry—are cast properly.

Charles Seay, the director, used his happily chosen locations to good advantage in the making of a picture whose minor faults do not affect in the slightest the pleasure it gives as a whole. A fair amount of suspense and a little comedy mixed with pathos, have much to do with keeping the spectator's interest to the end. Francis Marion wrote the story.

"THE WOMAN PAYS"

(Columbia-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

SPREAD out into a quadrangle by the addition of a fourth dimension, the eternal triangle is a dangerous thing to fool with. One result is apt to be complicated plots, and dramatic situations are apt to increase in the ratio of the cube of like dimensions.

This is the situation in "The Woman Pays," yet the body of the plot has been held together in compact form, and the thread is straight and easily followed to a more or less logical conclusion.

"THIRTY THOUSAND DOLLARS MISSING"

The play is one of modern life in its more intense form. The struggle is that of a young husband and wife against the overwhelming odds of a powerful man and woman, both disappointed over the marriage, and combined for the purpose of wrecking it.

The title is a misnomer; they fail to wreck the two lives, and the woman does not pay. But she skates on pretty thin ice, and comes near enough to paying to keep the spectators wrought up for several tense moments.

Edgar Jones has employed a number of striking sets in reproducing the interiors of elaborate homes, and there are several touches of nature which show unusual thought and care in the picturization of every-day life. For the master of an elaborate and well-ordered home to rise and answer the doorbell, telling the maid who enters from another room that he will attend to it, is a simple thing, yet thousands of us will recall having seen the same thing done in real life, and immediately he establishes personal connections with the picture.

Many poorer pictures than this have been made pronounced successes just by such touches.

There is a striking thunder storm, in which lightning blasts a tree and hurls part of it into a ballroom during a dance, and the young wife is struck and disfigured for life. This storm is most realistic and is well adjusted to the incidents which hang on it.

Valli Valli plays the wife with appeal and conviction. Marie Empress is a magnetic figure as the disappointed woman who helps scheme to separate the couple. She works with a sort of vim which makes her a little live wire of wickedness, and one is tempted to walk up and slap her, but for the fear that he would get an electric shock if he did.

Edward Brennan is forceful and sincere as her co-plotter, and John Bowers, as the husband, does some excellent work. Paul Lawrence, Julia Hurley and Mae De Metz are also well cast in minor parts.

"THE CONCEALED TRUTH"

(Ivan Film Productions—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IVAN ABRAMSON'S latest addition to his list of features is a very candid and frank sex melodrama that bids fair to travel the same popular path before such houses as his previous productions have done. The picture points a strong moral which is driven home by clear, concise action that makes no pretense in veiling its force in a multitude of unintelligible scenes. Mr. Abramson always comes to the point, however delicate the point may be.

To gain his desired ends—that is, to complete a strong, morally good photoplay—Mr. Abramson relies much upon the emotional ability of his cast. Practically every player, whether a star or merely in a minor part, has a series of emotional scenes to undertake. In the case of "The Concealed Truth," every member of the named cast is taxed to his or her utmost ability, and to the credit of the general strength of the picture, all of the players acquit thmselves very well. They produced the desired results in making every important incident in the action clear.

Gertrude Robinson as Dorothy and James Cooley as Victor Gilmore, featured in the picture, ably display their emotional prowess, while Frank Whitson as Robert Gilmore does equally as well in the heavy's role. The support furnished by Frank de Vernon, James McDuff, Sue Balfour and Carrey Lee is of a like sort and renders the picture well balanced in respect to its cast.

In consideration of the story, little need be mentioned besides its frankness. It is developed with a nice rapidity and comes to an exciting close when the pardon arrives in the nick of time. In many respects it is of a pronounced melodramatic flavor, particularly so in regard to the pardon which is sent by automobile when a telephone might have been brought into play. But of course this would do away with the desired thrill and one may content oneself in believing that there is no telephone connection in the prison. Such a small point is perhaps not worth dickering about after all.

Mr. Abramson's photography is very clear and his light effects arranged with a pleasant appropriateness that is entirely satisfactory. The settings are quite fitting and are never allowed to intrude on the advancement of the action.

"THE FORBIDDEN ADVENTURE"

(Mutual Masterpicture—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A HIDDEN and lost city in the desert, ruled by Moslem fanatics, is the setting for a thrilling and spectacular bit of melodrama, from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan. Although the story it tells is not new, it is given a freshness by unusual and unexpected surroundings, and a thoroughness is shown in arranging the sets, which doubles their value.

In addition, there are vast sweeps of desert—not the sage brush of the West, but the deep shifting sand of the East, with caravans of horses and camels plodding their way across to the horizon; oases of palm trees, and deserted, wind-swept rocks which give an unmistakable and impressive atmosphere to the story.

The subject was originally entitled "The City of the Dead," as this "city" figures largely in the story. A young tourist, traveling with a caravan, comes upon the lost city, and on his first walk about the streets, sees and falls in love with a priestess of the temple, who is forbidden by the rites to ever speak to a man.

The lovers are discovered, and sentenced to the "city of the dead," which is simply a vast pit in the desert, with lofty walls of rock, from which there is no escape.

But they do escape, by dint of crawling days and nights from one foothold to another. When they reach the top, exhausted, they are attacked by a priest who had come to the pit to gloat over their fate.

They make their way over the narrow rope bridge which leads across a chasm, and the man falls unconscious on the opposite brink. The priest crawls out after them, but the girl cuts the ropes and precipitates bridge and pursuer into the chasm below.

Plenty of thrills are provided, and the story is well knit together. It should prove a popular picture. Louise Glaum is effective as the priestess, and Charles Ray is well cast as her lover. Others are: Thomas Eurihara, Herschell Mayall and J. Frank Burke.

TRIANGLE STARS AND TRIANGLE PICTURES FROM LATEST KNICKERBOCKER PROGRAMS

SEVENTH KNICKERBOCKER TRIANGLE PROGRAM

("The Winged Idol"—Kay-Bee—Four Parts. "A Submarine Pirate"—Keystone —Four Parts. "Jordan Is A Hard Road"—Fine Arts—Five Parts.)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN this, the seventh of the triangle bills, the four reels of Keystone farce are presented in the form of one picture, "A Submarine Pirate," an exciting and amusing feature with Syd Chaplin starring. The dramatic numbers contributed from the Kay-Bee and Fine Arts studios are alike in general theme, as they both depict the regeneration of wicked men, but the comparison ends here as the stories are treated in entirely different ways and under most contrasting circumstances.

"A Submarine Pirate" has more laughs intermingled with wondrous thrills than any comedy of the same length that we can call to mind. Its plot is of the burlesqued melodramatic variety and during its development offers plenty of farcial novelties.

Much of the action is staged in, on and about a United States submarine loaned to Mack Sennett and his company by the federal government. Under the erratic guidance of Admiral Syd, this under-water craft leads a most adventurous career, finally being shot full of holes by a cruiser.

The field for fun-making offered by the submarine has been utilized to considerable extent by the co-directors, Charles Avery and Chaplin.

Syd is a capable comedian under any circumstances, notably when cavorting about in a dining room juggling plates as he does in the previous part of this number, but when set at random on a submarine he is, if possible, funnier than ever.

Imagine him trailing through the water, hanging on to the southeast end of a torpedo, or picture him stranded on the deck of the under-water craft after it has started to submerge.

Of great import are the trick, mechanical effects that form the picture's thrilling climax. A liner is blown up and sunk by a torpedo and the submarine itself goes down with pandemonium raging in the interior.

Syd finally seeks to escape through the torpedo tube, but a shark catches him on the outside and that's the last of him in "A Submarine Pirate."

The plot of this farce is altogether most thrilling, while a lot of funny business perpetrated by the leading comedian and his aides helps it fulfill its comedy mission materially. Phyllis Allen, Glen Cavender and Wesley Ruggles lead a large supporting cast.

In summary conclusion it may be remarked that for novelty and humorous eccentricities, "A Submarine Pirate" is quite unusual if not marvelous.

"The Winged Idol," Ince's picture written by C. Gardner Sullivan, is the sort of production that easily stands being seen twice before its full significance is realized. To be appreciated it must be watched closely and even then a situation is often passed before its exact meaning becomes apparent. The action might be made clearer by the moderation of the subtitles, which are written in a style that is sometimes ineffective when read from the screen at a glance.

The direction is commendable down to the last degree, the ideas contained in the scenario being expressed as significantly as possible. The settings furnished are in every instance tasteful, always being offset by consistent and pleasing camera work.

The story tells how an inebriate falls under the spell of a Russian seeress, and how through her influence he becomes cured of his malicious craving, only to desert her finally for his wife and baby. The seeress even influenced his course to this end, although she hardly expected her man to do it, but when he does, she becomes resigned.

Katharine Kaelred as the seeress makes the role prominent with regard to its strength and force. House Peters gives an excellent performance as the regenerated derelict, while Clara Williams as his wife, and Jacob Silbert and Harry Keenan complete the cast. "The Winged Idol" has a strong and unusual story, but as said before it will bear, perhaps even necessitate a double showing, which may or may not be to its credit.

"Jordan Is a Hard Road" is an adaptation from one of Sir Gilbert Parker's novels, supervised by Griffith and produced under the personal direction of Allan Dwan.

As in many of Parker's works, the action is laid in Canada in a period some years since, and too, that action is often influenced by motives of religion. This latter instance has caused the introduction of a number of allegorical scenes, showing the Christ, and an impressive picture of the road to Jordan, crowded with folk of all kinds. These last, and the others as well for that matter, are handled with a careful sense of the artistic. Such scenes might have been abominably pictured, as the chances to go wrong are many, but thanks to Dwan they are as perfect as one could ask for.

Frank Campeau as Minden, the reformed bandit, and Dorothy Gish as his daughter, who never learns his identity, are the leads of the production. Campeau brings to the screen a wonderful character face, strong and impressive, while Miss Gish can always make one laugh or cry at her own will. Sarah Truax, as her guardian, and Moore, as her lover, are principals in the large assisting cast.

The picture is by no means all character work, as Campeau, while acting the bandit, and the three villainous McMahons furnish enough thrills by their deeds, and the execution of them to satisfy anyone. Besides in "Jordan Is a Hard Road" the scenes are wonderful and the photography excellent.

Dwan's picture is on the whole the most enjoyable feature on the program, although for sheer thrills "A Submarine Pirate" stands in a class by itself. It is the excellent acting of Campeau and Miss Gish that make "Jordan Is a Hard Road" notable.

WALLOCK JOINS BALBOA TO MAKE FEATURE WITH SAUNDERS

E. N. WALLOCK is a new member of Balboa's producing staff. He is putting on a multiple reeler in which Jackie Saunders, the Balboa girl is the featured player. John Mackenzie, the veteran cameraman, has been assigned to this company, and he is getting some splendid shots.

Mr. Wallock is one of the most experienced directors in the business. For many years he was with Selig's, prior to joining Balboa.

HENRY B. WALTHALL AND WARDA HOWARD IN "THE RAVEN," ESSANAY'S STRIKING PICTURIZATION OF THE LIFE OF EDGAR ALLAN POE

"THE RAVEN"

(Essanay—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THAN "The Raven" no better vehicle could have been found for the exploitation of Henry B. Walthall's gifts, insofar as they have to do with the expression of fear, disappointed hopes, and sorrow made more sorrowful by the wild moods of a disordered brain.

In this field, Mr. Walthall is all but supreme. Recognizing this fact, the Essanay people evidently sought a version of Poe's life that would give him the fullest opportunity for displaying these powers of his. The result is a highly specialized form of picture, in which the story is subordinated in the latter reels, so that it converges on a single point—the poet's grief over the death of his wife.

From the novel and play by George C. Hazelton, Charles J Babin adapted and produced the piece. No attempt is made to give the facts of Poe's life in their entirety, those events being retained which bear directly on Poe's ancestry, his adoption by the Allans after the death of his parents, his checkered career at the University of Virginia, his marriage to Virginia Clemm, his losing fight against poverty, the death of his beloved, and his own overwhelming grief at her loss. Historically, of course, Poe died in a Baltimore hospital, under circumstances that have never been cleared of mystery; but in this picture he dies at the end of his interview with The Raven.

At least two reels, we should say, are given up to this interview, and here it is that Mr. Walthall portrays in a manner that is apt to be unapproached for some time in screen annals, the changes rung by grief on the heart.

Trick photography plays a large role in the production, and plays it, on the whole, to good effect. One wishes at times that there had been fewer angels crossing the sky, but mechanical devices are necessary to make the poet's dreams intelligible. There are several double exposures, and a plentiful supply of close-ups. One trick in particular shows the camera's great possibilities: the poet dies; his spirit rises from his body and walks across the room, while the body still remains seated in a chair; then the spirit turns to view the inert body.

In support of the star are Warda Howard, who appears successively as Virginia Clemm, Mrs. Whitman, the lost Lenore, and finally as a spirit seen by the poet in a vision; Ernest Maupain as John Allan; Eleanor Thompson as Mrs. Allan; Marion Skinner as Mrs. Clemm; Harry Dunkinson as "Tony," Poe's chum; Grant Foreman as George Graham, the publisher; Hugh E. Thompson as David Poe, Jr.; Peggy Meredith as Mrs. (Hopkins) Poe, and Frank Hamilton as David Poe, Sr. Another member of the cast deserving of mention is a large raven, trained to perch upon the bust of Pallas in an entirely satisfying fashion.

In the main, "The Raven" is a psychological drama, distinctive for its delineation of powerful, complex emotions, which an actor of lesser magnetism than Walthall possesses, and who resembled Poe less strikingly than Walthall does, could not have made convincing.

"THE VALKYRIE"

(Than-o-play—Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

DIAPHANOUS dances by Mlle. Valkyrien, the Danish danseuse, through sunny glades and on the brink of waterfalls, are the features in this picture, which gives the audience glimpses of lawn parties, magnificent estates, a steeplechase, and a few other attributes of high life which are attractive and interesting as a series of pictures. There is no doubt the whole will find a welcome among a large class of motion picture goers.

The adventures are those of a rural girl in Denmark, whose fondness for dancing about the woods alone gave rise to the belief that she was a "valkyrie" and had lured many to death.

She is sought by a count, whom she despises, and who vows to pursue her to the ends of the earth, but she finds a protector in a young American, who also falls in love with her.

The girl becomes a famous dancer, and comes to America. Here she finds her former protector, and is in time to overhear a plot to hold back his horse in a race. She goes to the stables, dresses as a jockey and rides the horse to victory herself. Then everything ends happily.

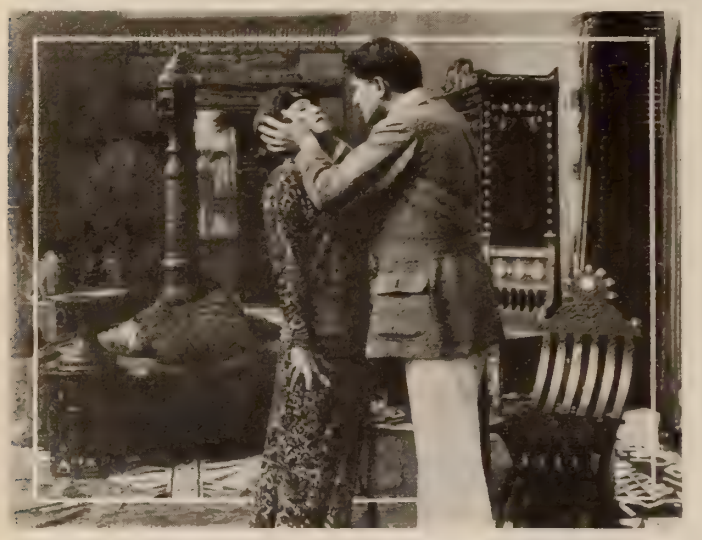
Good color and the dash of real action mark the racing scenes, and much care has been devoted to the perfection of the settings in nearly every case. The star is well supported by a cast which includes: Ernest Howard, Wayne Arey, Louise Emerald Bates, Ethel Jewett and Nellie Parker Spaulding.



"BELLA DONNA"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

"AND so she went out into the desert—into the darkness," and so the final scene shows her, in the grip of the simoom, with the sand of the Sahara drifting across her lifeless body; yet, although it had glimpses of her whole evil life, the audience greets her fate with more of a sob than a cheer, showing that not only is a happy ending unnecessary to the success of a picture, but that an actress, if she be an actress, can make her own way to the hearts of an audience.

In a recent interview Pauline Frederick is quoted as saying that her ambition in Bella Donna has been made to win for the despicable women the sympathy of the audience. No one can decide on her success except the audience itself, and this is how the crowded Strand theatre voted last Sunday night: when the woman, whose character showed not one redeeming trait, went out to the terrible fate she had so well earned, the customary applause over the punishment of the villain throughout the play, started in the twenty-ninth row; it was taken up farther back in the auditorium, and soon three persons had joined in. And only three.

If Miss Frederick aims her art at the Great Public, she will be gratified by this tribute. There is remarkable versatility in her work; her Bella Donna wrecks lives and deals out death in a pathetic and appealing manner, but altogether in a matter-of-fact way; one can almost imagine her saying: "I've got to poison this loving husband of mine, and Gosh, how I dread it!" As an adventuress she is entirely detestable, but as a murderess she is of the type which would have made De Quincey happy.

Miss Frederick is one star who does not attempt to "grab" scenes; this may be one reason why Julian Johnson calls her "Frederick the Great," but this trait has allowed other actors of sterling ability to register a high quality of work. Julian L'Estrange's Baroudi is artistic from make-up to manners, and stands out as a piece of screen acting, and Thomas Holding, as the husband completes a trio which lift the story above certain slips in production which would have been serious in many another subject.

Among these slips is a view of palms and pyramids, lowered into a desert scene by means of a back drop. The locale is Egypt, but the pictures were actually taken in pyramidless Florida, but can not the impression of Egypt be given without pyramids? Nor does a title with such approximation of English as "Nigel is now nearly convalescent" enhance so elaborate a production as this. These crudities are fortunately few, and in its general settings, brilliant photography, elaborate costuming, and faithfulness in details of atmosphere, the production is fully up to the Famous Players standard—and it is hard to say more.

"CHILDREN OF EVE"

(Kleine-Edison Service—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"CHILDREN OF EVE," contributed to the Kleine-Edison feature service from the Edison studio, exhibits a vastly popular appeal, which is particularly appropriate at the present time.

It dwells quite largely on the needed improvements regarding factory conditions, and to substantiate its plea, a most realistic series of fire scenes has been introduced. The walls and floors of the building collapse, flames completely devour the structure, and a fireman jumps from the shaky roof to a life net below.

These pictures have been blended with flashes showing crowds of little children attempting to beat their way to safety, trying to escape from the stifling smoke and scorching flames. The entire effect is one of tremendous realism, a tribute to the dramatic sense of Director John Collins.

But Collins has done much more than stage an excellent series of fire scenes. As the author of "Children of Eve" he has written a story that carries touches of pathos, bits of pleasing humor and a sympathetic appeal for its little lead in every scene throughout the play.

Collins is to be thanked for his omission of a forced happy ending, for by so doing he has made his whole work more significant than it would have been if such a conclusion had been thrust upon it.

Much of the sympathetic character of the picture lies in the fact that the wrong done by an erring man is never set aright—he can never make amends for his thoughtless act, but permission would have been granted him by a happy ending. In this respect as in many others throughout the picture Collins' dramatic judgment has served him well.

Viola Dana has the leading role. As the child of the underworld who comes under the influence of a social worker and is reformed by her love for him, Miss Dana is delightful. She has the happy faculty of expressing any emotion that her part calls for, with remarkable realism.

Her characterization of little "Fifty-Fifty" Mamie is complete

"THEY DON'T COME BIG ENOUGH FOR ME, MAMIE"

in its understanding and charm. Bob Walker, as Madison, the social worker, meets the requirements of his part adequately, as does Robert Conness as the capitalist.

Thomas Blake as the East Side tough is typically natural in that part.

Once again we must turn to praise of Collins' work. His scenes of the East Side dance hall, of the squalid little room that Mamie calls her home, and the little bits of comedy that have been introduced from time to time, combine in making the atmosphere of the entire picture entirely convincing.

In fact, "Children of Eve" in story, direction and acting is unusually good. A house that shows it is mighty sure of pleasing its patrons.

"A WOMAN'S PAST"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THE central incident in this picture—the scene upon which Director Frank Powell lavished painstaking effort with excellent results—is enacted in a courtroom, and its action reveals nothing less than the defense by a son of his mother who is accused of murder. The son is unaware of his mother's identity until the trial is almost over.

Nance O'Neil, the outstanding figure in a series of tense emotional scenes, portrays with a fine appreciation of the part an erring woman whose initial misstep brings inevitably a train of woes in its path. Few of these scenes call for anything more than the expression of utter hopelessness, despair, and grief, on the one hand, and fierce maternal love on the other, so that when we say Miss O'Neil shows a true appreciation of the role, we mean she knows when to be stormy, and when not to be.

It is in the courtroom that her restraint manifests itself at its highest point. Close-ups bring out to the fullest the strength of her emotions. This scene throughout is skillfully managed. Several lines of parallel action are kept going, and a remarkable collection of types is assembled in the jury. It is one of the best trials ever put on the screen.

At other climaxes, as well, superior direction is in evidence. The most striking of these leads to a murder, staged in semi-darkness. The husband, a soldier, just returned from the Philippines, learns from the first time that another is the father of the child whom he had thought his own. Standing outside the room, he hears a struggle proceeding inside, and when he enters, his wife is lying insensible on a couch, while her evil companion turns to hurl a lamp at him as the door swings open.

Another struggle, and the soldier-husband has accomplished the death of the rake. All this time, the wife, in the person of Nance O'Neil, is stretched full length on the couch in the rear of the room, with a bright light streaming upon her.

It was such effects as these, coupled with unusually good acting, rather than any great coherence in the story, that made last Sunday's audience at the Academy of Music applaud the picture at its close.

Alfred Hickman, in the double role of the evil father and the son who defends his mother, is excellent.

Clifford Bruce and Carlton Macy are the other principals, and their work is entirely acceptable.

Director Powell adapted the story for the screen.

"FLORENCE TURNER IMPERSONATES FILM FAVORITES"

(Mina—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FLORENCE TURNER, that most versatile actress, has, in this subject, made a comedy that is a decided departure from the usual run of such pictures. Miss Turner offers a series of highly amusing imitations of various film celebrities and two burlesqued scenes taken from pictures of the old school.

Ford Sterling, Mabel Normand, Broncho Billy and Sarah Bernhardt have been duly impersonated by Miss Turner. The pronounced characteristics of each player have been brought out with a fine sense of their comedy value by the able actress.

Sterling is characterized in a scene typical of Keystone comedies; Wild West Billy lives through Miss Turner in a Western barroom wherein the action is ever mindful in its exaggerated way of Anderson's subjects; as Bernhardt she "emoshes" with imitative skill; and as Keystone Mabel she does the coquette with ease.

The scenes representing bygone pictures are exceedingly humorous. Miss Turner playing the out-of-date French leading lady of innumerable Pathé subjects, tightly laced, with hair piled high and with darkened eyes and painted lips, is the villainess in a howling melodrama down to the last degree of laughable excellence. In a scene from an ancient Biograph, wherein stately, expressionless action, cluttered with dozens of flashbacks and unnecessary close-ups dominated, Miss Turner has again demonstrated her ability.

To a real motion picture fan, one who is acquainted with pictures of the past, and who knows the popular players of today, Miss Turner's impersonations will come as a humorous revelation. It is a true comedy, although a certain knowledge of the picture game is necessary if it is to be fully appreciated. The picture, however, partly furnishes this knowledge, so its reception at the hands of any audience will undoubtedly do justice to the remarkable talent of Miss Turner.

"COULD A MAN DO MORE?"

(Centaur-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

MUCH of the value of the average story, written or pictured, is in the telling. This is emphasized in this offering, and a successful attempt has been made to bring the spectator into the action by a direct and forceful appeal at the start, and a continuous and logical flow of events throughout the progress of the piece.

There is nothing of startling originality in the story, but it is a dramatic tale, which has many of the elements necessary to hold the interest of an audience, and enough of melodrama to bring out the inherent love for a noble hero which almost any audience is eager to give.

This hero is Crane Wilbur, He is a good type for such a part, and has already proved himself sufficiently popular in many sections of the country to warrant his being featured in pretentious productions. His work is of the style which his admirers expect, and they will find him at his best in "Could a Man Do More?"

The locale is the South of two generations ago. The hero, a village preacher, has been charged by his dying mother with the care of his younger brother, and he fulfills his task well, although it demands that he give up the girl he loves, bear guilt and shame which belongs to his brother, and finally allow himself to be driven from the town after shouldering his brother's crime. The death of the criminal, and a hastily scrawled confession bring about his return and happiness.

There is a large cast, which includes Jean Wolfe, Paul Willis, Roland Sharp, Allen Williams, Carl Von Schiller, Victor Rottman, Celia Santon, C. A. Scheafnocker, Georgia Seheart, Margaret Gibson and B. M. Rice.

SUCCESSFUL VAUDEVILLE AND DANCE SWELLS TREASURY OF LUBIN BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Nov. 10.

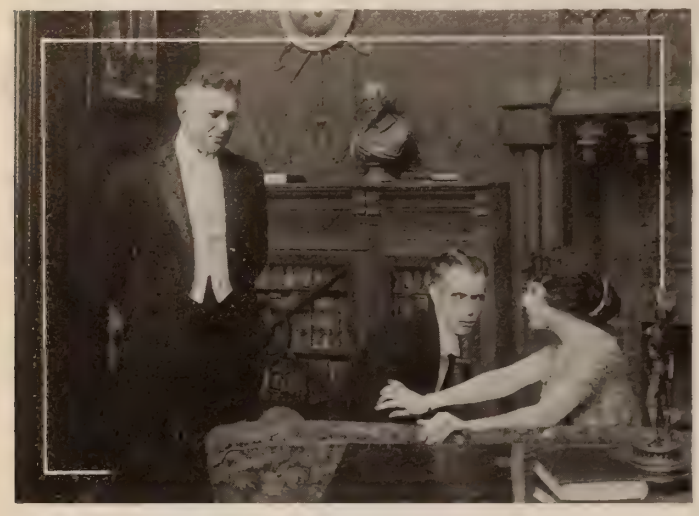
THE successful vaudeville and dance planned by the Lubin Beneficial Association came off as scheduled. A large crowd assembled and enjoyed every moment of the affair.

The vaudeville performance, which preceded the ball, offered as many good stunts as may be seen at any of the regular houses.

As added attraction, Mr. Singhi himself appeared as accompanist to several of the performers. Many of the Lubin stars added interest to the jolly occasion. Candy and other trifles were sold by some of the attractive ladies of the company.

Dancing was the order of the night after the "show" had entertained the audience for several hours. When all returns are in, it is expected that a considerable sum will be added to the treasury of the association.

Encouraged by the success of this first dance, it is purposed to have one each season. It is hoped, however, this will not keep the company from repeating their successful musical comedy work of last spring, when "Fifty Miles from Boston" was put on in excellent fashion.



"IN LOVE'S OWN WAY"

(Lubin—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THOUGH this picture dwells upon a theme more or less familiar to the patrons of program releases, its subject matter is quite large in both interest and appeal. A good director and an appreciative cast have managed to lift a scenario of rather mediocre construction to a higher level, transforming it into a picture that will fulfill the desires of the majority of photoplay patrons.

The story concerns the honest governor, a welcome figure that always creates a stir of interest by his presence, for one never knows what product of political intrigue may befall him. As impersonated by John Ince, the familiar governor is endowed with a forceful personality and a carriage and appearance that befit such a station.

The governor forsakes his old love and marries the daughter of his strongest backer and for a time all goes well until the wife incurs heavy gambling debts. A disreputable senator is the creditor. With a scandal ever in danger of coming before the public, the story advances with increasing interest until at last the situation is saved by the quick wit of the forsaken country girl who appears just in time to avert the scandal.

Most remarkable of the things contained in the picture are the particularly appropriate sets, that are at all times in perfect taste. The rooms of the governor's house are most notable in this respect. They are large, impressive and well arranged, and although noticeable at all times, seem never to retard the acting. Of the rest of the cast, Mary Charleson as the former sweetheart of the mayor, Josephine Longworth as his wife and Francis Joyner as the senator are the most important and able.

A MODEL'S ADVENTURE

(Kalem-General—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS is a story of the half-underworld of Paris art student life, with Alma Ruben cast in one of the Lorelei parts which fit her so well. This time she is a model, and a well-known character of the Latin Quarter, beloved of Arthur, an American artist. She seeks a wealthy suitor, and spurns the artist's affections until the latter, on receipt of some mysterious news, suddenly leaves for America.

His lawyer, mistaking Jack Addison, an American sculptor, for Arthur, tells friends that Jack has inherited an immense fortune, and the model, hearing this, cultivates him assiduously. She comes between Jack and his sweetheart, Yvonne, who is posing for a piece of sculpture, and induces the sculptor to take her instead.

The bust produced is hailed as a masterpiece, but the model, on discovering she has been courting the wrong man, becomes furious, steals into the studio, and smashes the sculpture. Later Arthur returns to Paris, but the model is unmasked, and the faithful Yvonne is returned to her lover.

The settings provided for the picture are elaborate and true to the conception of this stratum of Parisian life; the types are also good, and the acting without exception capable. Others in the cast are Paul Gilmore, Philo McCullough and Ethel Fleming.

"THE MUMMY AND THE HUMMING BIRD"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MUMMY AND THE HUMMING BIRD" is one of those rare melodramas which after getting away from a weak start, gathers strength as it proceeds, finally culminating in a series of strong scenes that make an intense climax. In many respects the picture is elementary, its theme has long been favored by the attention of picture producers, but from this it may be derived that the story is close to every human's heart. Because of that familiar theme it is appealing and some nicely drawn characters, together with a villain with waxed moustache and polished manners give just the right finishing touch.

Charles Cherry effects his picture debut as the Mummy, the man who neglects his wife. Cherry is not taxed severely by his part, but makes a consistently good showing, especially in the latter part of the picture. Arthur Hoops, that polished heavy, registers melodramatically as the Humming Bird, an Italian novelist whose specialty is breaking up happy families.

Lillian Tucker is very good as the Mummy's wife. William Sorelle as the Italian has a difficult character part and fairs fairly well with it. James Durkin directed. In respect to scenes and realistic atmosphere he has done a very creditable job, except in the instance of the Italian coast fortifications which are quite mindful of our own United States.

As previously remarked, the story is well built. Its commencement is hurt just a little bit by acting that is a little mechanical but afterwards developments cause the interest to materially increase.

A QUINTETTE OF GLIMPSES AT "ONE MILLION DOLLARS," THE CURRENT ROLFE-METRO FEATURE PRODUCTION OF MYSTERY AND ROMANCE IN WHICH WILLIAM FAVERSHAM IS SEEN IN THE STELLAR ROLE

"ONE MILLION DOLLARS"

(Rolfe-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

AS the "doctor" must give way to the physician; as the press-agent must give way to the director of publicity, and as the movie must give way to the photoplay, so must the detective give way to the "criminologist." In the pentasyllabics of the newer word is found all the difference between thick-soled Scotland Yard and William Faversham. It is for the detective to tread the muddy alleys and trap-doors of the slums, but the criminologist hides behind an assortment of fresh laundry, and moves majestically through drawing-rooms, creating his "atmosphere" as he goes along.

From this one may assume that "One Million Dollars" is a story of crime in high life. It is, and as such has been skillfully handled. The dramatic action is fast, and the interest cumulative—so much so as almost to hold the spectator positively breathless at certain points.

There are evidences that the producers have shown their skill in being able to play with their spectators at will—and make the spectators glad of it.

A detective (or criminologist) picks up the loose ends of his clues by projecting his astral body into the secret presence of those he suspects; a crystal ball, brought from India, gives him flashes of the private lives of those he is studying; and a Hindu mystic, in native dress, runs unmolested and unnoticed through city streets to bring him other important information. Armed with these advantages almost any detective ought to do pretty well. They are not true in the situations they create, but they are terribly interesting.

William Faversham, as the criminologist, is ever the stern, unbending, uncompromising protest at any invasion of the Faversham personality. He has managed to screen this personality as hard and coldly glittering as the crystal sphere which screens alongside it, and it must be admitted that it adds a certain magnetism to the picture.

His support is unusually capable, and they manage to knit the story so closely together that little rifts in probabilities will be overlooked, and the whole hugely enjoyed.

There are a few mechanical and technical defects unusual in Metro offerings, such as underexposure of interiors, and the sudden flashing in of dissolves which would have been much softer and more effective if shaded more gradually in the printing, but these have too small an effect on the picture to be really deserving of criticism.

Henry Bergman gives a finished performance of the Count D'Este, and the other principals show themselves excellent screen actors. These include: George Le Guere, Mayme Kelso, Carlotta De Felice, Arthur Morrison, Charles Graham and Camilla Dalberg. The production is a real achievement on the part of the director, John W. Noble.

"THE REPROACH OF ANNESLEY"

(Biograph-General—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

MAXWELL GRAY'S novel has proven a strong subject for picturization, and has been handled by Travers Vale and a cast composed of some of the most popular members of the Biograph company in skillful fashion. Although the picture is of conventional type, and no apparent attempt has been made to achieve sensational effects, it has good dramatic action, and is good average entertainment.

Striking and appropriate outdoor scenes have been found in Central Park, and elsewhere in and about New York, and although the action is laid in England and France there is nothing which jars on the conception or knowledge of life and its surroundings in those lands. The story tells of the rivalry of two cousins over a young girl, and a struggle, following which the unsuccessful suitor, thinking he has killed the other, faints, and falls over a cliff into the sea. A third suitor, who has witnessed the quarrel, tells the other, who was unconscious at the time, that he pushed his cousin over the cliff, and believing himself to be a murderer, he disappears.

Many months later, the supposedly murdered man is found living as a monk in France, and returns with his cousin, just as the girl is about to be married to the villain. Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Herbert Barrington, Jack Drumeir and Gus Pixley compose the cast which interprets the story.

"THE NEW ADVENTURES OF TERRENCE O'ROURKE"

(Universal Special—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FOLLOWING the last chapter of "The Broken Coin," this, the first of Terrence O'Rourke's new adventures, entitled "The Palace of Dust," will be released as the Universal Special Feature.

J. Warren Kerrigan will be remembered for his romantic and adventurous interpretation of Terrence O'Rourke in the preceding series depicting his activities. Kerrigan endows the character with all the heroic and manly qualities for which he is noted. He is an adventurer of an ideal type. The stories by Louis Joseph Vance could hardly have been awarded a better lead.

In this number Terrence has a very exciting time in Turkey. A band of villains plan to lead a massacre against the English, and they want the fearless Irishman to head the charge. He refuses, so the conspirators assign a woman (Carmen Phillips) to convince him. But instead she falls in love with him and aids him in his escape from the villainous band.

The settings, scenes and photography are all very good. The story creates an air of exciting suspense, that patrons of Universal pictures will not fail to enjoy. Jacques Jaccard and Kerrigan collaborated in the direction.

"KEEP MOVING!" "THE DANGER SIGNAL" "KEEP MOVING"

"A NIGHT IN THE SHOW"

(Essanay-Chaplin—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE question was, could Chaplin put the funny business over, sans the usual eccentric makeup? The question may now be conveyed to Goldberg and listed with that gentleman's formidable list of foolish ones, for Charlie with or without is the same Charlie. Any clothes while on Chaplin serve to cover a multitude of laughs, which duly uncover themselves as the picture progresses. (Editor's note: The clothes remain intact.)

"A Night in the Show" introduces Chaplin via two characters. He is very much the ridiculous man-about-town, arrayed in neat fitting dress suit, and human sized shoes, who goes to a vaudeville show and bothers everyone else in the orchestra. Besides he witnesses the performance from the gallery attired as a bum, not as the usual Chaplin bum, but much more bummier than usual.

Although from time to time the bum and his ten cent associates (all very funny) hold the screen, the center of attraction is dapper Charlie down below who has loads of trouble stomaching the awful acts going on on the stage. The snake charmer irritates him considerably, so he strikes a match on her foot.

The act goes wrong and the orchestra is swarmed with reptiles. He takes to throwing pies at two singers while the bum upstairs throws ice cream cones. He becomes charitable and essays to lift a ponderous dancer who has fallen on the stage, but when almost lifted she falls on him. And none of the members of the orchestra please Charlie and he gets into worlds of trouble with them.

Perhaps the most amusing thing in the entire two reels, if it is possible to discriminate at all, is the spectacle of Chaplin crawling over a row of people to get to his seat, crawling back again to change it, and back again to get it again.

It's uproarious, because it's a burlesque of something we all abhor and duly do.

"THE DANGER SIGNAL"

(Kleine—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

"THE DANGER SIGNAL," adapted from "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way," a Saturday Evening Post story, featuring Arthur Hoops and Ruby Hoffman, made a distinctly favorable impression on the audience at the pre-public showing at the Candler theatre, New York City, last Sunday evening, November 14.

There was nothing superfluous in the production. The movement of the plot conveyed the idea that nothing could have been left out without sacrificing some vital part of the story. The picture has all the attributes of interest set by the standards of the speaking stage.

Clever acting of the cast in subordinate situations raises these minor incidents to a plane of importance. In these episodes the players of ability show their training and talent by the manner in which they are able to keep up interest by accentuating the cross purpose of the persons they are impersonating. Arthur Hoops and Ruby Hoffman never failed to give the spectators full measure of this difficult side of the actor's art.

Danny Canavan, played by Mr. Hoops, is not only lazy, disgusting his father and the industrious assistants in the elder man's prosperous blacksmith shop, but he appears to be a hopeless coward, cringing at the merest feint made by any individual.

The old blacksmith, also played by Mr. Hoops, goes so far in his distaste for the youth that when Danny is run over and seriously hurt by a carriage passing the blacksmith shop, he apologizes to the occupants because his son happened to get in the way of the horses.

But there is a change of character in the coward when he gets a position on the subway and is told by a gang boss to hold a flag during the blasting. The feeling that he is invested with authority brings out all the admirable qualities hidden so long in the young man.

A telephone operator has summoned the police on hearing the girl's cries in the office, and the sharpers are captured, while the boarder and the girl reach a complete understanding. Isabel Rea and Alan Hale head the cast.

"Cartoons in a Sanitarium." (Edison. Wed., Nov. 24.)—The animated grouch-chaser is used to good advantage by a young man, in love with a nurse, who has himself carried to the hospital in order to be near her. When the thief comes to a bunch of withered roses, which were carried by the wife, the young man's anger overcomes his infirmity, and he makes his way to the spot, felling the thief, and then falling helpless with the withered roses clasped in his hands. "Oh, Doctor!" (Kalem. Tues., Nov. 23.)—Bud and Spike, as plumbers, are at work on the pipes in the doctor's house, when Pansy, a patient, calls. On seeing her both decide at once to be doctors, but Spike, the heavier of the two, hurls Bud down into the flooded cellar. Bud, in revenge, gets into the bathroom, where the water is already knee deep, and boring a hole in the floor, floods the consultation room, below.

Then Dr. Brown and a policeman arrive, and the two amateur doctors are conducted to safety. Ethel Teare, Bud Duncan, Charles Inslee, Harry Griffith and Margaret Rand compose the cast.

"A Society Schemer." (Kalem. Fri. Nov., 26.)—Marguerite Courtot, in this episode of "The Ventures of Marguerite," is wooed by a fortune-hunter, who is in league with a pickpocket. The pickpocket steals a magnificent necklace, and hands it to the fortune hunter, who gives it to Marguerite. Hal Worth, who loves Marguerite, sees the necklace change hands, and takes a picture of the operation with a watch camera.

At a ball that night, Marguerite wears the necklace. The fortune hunter attempts to place the theft on Hal, but the latter clears himself by showing the pictures he has taken. Others in the cast are Richard Purdon, Otto Miemeyer, Freeman Barnes and Bradley Barker.

"The Dynamite Train." (Kalem. Sat., Nov. 27.)—Helen, the Lone Point operator, sees a party of fugitive cattle thieves climb onto a car which is loaded with dynamite, loosen the brakes and send it down grade. She pursues the car on an electric speeder, overtakes it and climbs on; meanwhile the crooks, who have discovered the contents of the car, escape.

Helen sees a train stalled ahead, and signals a brakeman in time to have the runaway switched onto a siding. She then leaps to safety just before the car is derailed and blown up. Helen then climbs from the bridge ahead, down onto a dry river bed, in time to aid detectives in the capture of the fugitives. Helen Gibson, Robyn Adair, Thomas Means, Frank Henderson, and Clarence Burton are in the cast.

"The Wall Between." (Lubin, Mon., Nov. 15.)—A drama of the West written and produced by Paul M. Powell, the chief figure of which is an unfaithful wife. The ending of the picture is not definite and the action is at many times not clear. William R. Parsons, Velma Whitman and L. C. Shumway are the leads.

"An Accident Policy." (Lubin. Tues., Nov. 16.)—New treatment is here afforded a conventional comedy plot with results that are averagely entertaining. David L. Don, takes out a policy and then succeeds in geting hurt and collecting the money, but later he is swindled of it all. Eleanor Blanchard and Carrie Reynolds are most prominent in the support.

"In Love's Own Way." (Lubin. Three reels. Wed., Nov. 17.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Margie of the Underworld." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 18.)—A fair drama, a little unconvincing in its construction but evenly entertaining throughout. It depicts the regeneration of a girl of the underworld. The subject is very well photographed and is realistic all the time. Lucille Young, Melvin Mayo and Jay Morely are the principals. Wilbert Melville directed from a story by Marc Edmund Jones.

"The Death Web." (Lubin. Fri., Nov. 19.)—A conventionally built western melodrama that has some very intense moments and a plot of strong heart-interest. Lucille Young, L. C. Shumway and Melvin Mayo are the leads. The scenario is by Robert Winehart while Leon Kent directed.

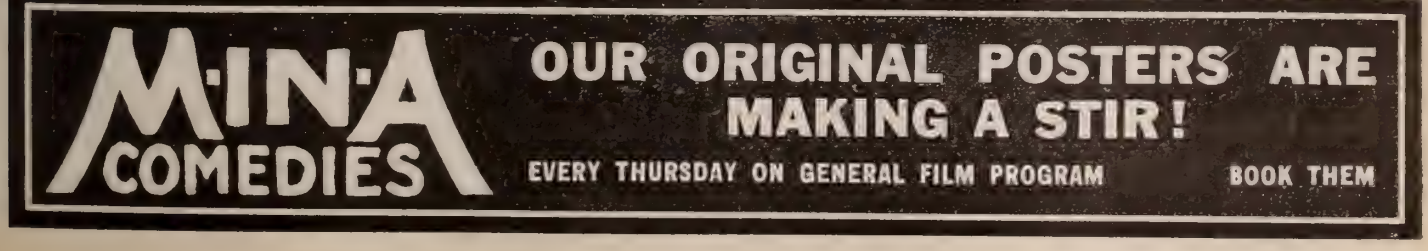
"His Wife's New Lid." (Lubin. Sat., Nov. 20.)—Billie Reeves again, sans his old tramp makeup, accoutered in civilian clothes. Reeves appears as the ultra-jealous husband never satisfied with the doings of his wife.

The scenario, by Mark Swan, contains a humorous though familiar idea, which has been made the most of by Director Earl Metcalfe. "His Wife's New Lid" has more laughs in it than the old Reeves comedies.

"A Thing or Two in Movies." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 22.)—Will be reviewed next week.

"The Impersonation of Tom." (Selig. Tues., Nov. 23.)—This Western comedy featuring Tom Mix is typical of the Mix school of productions. The atmosphere is that of the plains, the situations are mainly conventional, and the acting has more virility than subtlety.

Tom's father wants him to marry the daughter of his old chum. Tom is already in love with another girl, so this proposed alliance does not meet with his approval. Tom discovers that the daughter of his father's friend is also engaged, and so all four of the young people conspire to thwart the parental wishes.



Tom's girl poses as the daughter of the chum, while the fiancee of the real daughter impersonates Tom. When the parents discover the fraud they agree to forgive the ruse.

Supporting Tom Mix are Hazel Daly, Sid Jordan, Babe Chrisman, and Pat Chrisman.

"Young Love." (Selig. Sat., Nov. 27.)—A rather dreary story, acted with average ability. Jasper Leigh calls on Professor Hunt to ask for his daughter Mary's hand in marriage. The professor informs the young man that although Mary believes her mother to be dead, she in reality has eloped with another man. After three years, however, the marriage of Jasper and Mary is announced.

A seamstress delivers the bridal gown on the wedding day, and asks Mary to allow her to assist in putting it on. The dressmaker then watches the ceremony. As she is leaving the house she meets the professor, who recognizes her as his wife. Overcome with his old love, he takes her into his arms.

The cast consists of Lafayette McKee, Marion Warner, Lillian Hayward, and Leo Pierson.

"Sis." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—A very conventional though pretty little romance of the country, with Arline Pretty, Frank Mills and Garry McGarry. The city lover proves a coward when it comes to rescuing a baby adrift in a rowboat and so the country boy is at last rewarded for his love. It's an enjoyable subject with a little thrill during the rescue scene and pleasing acting all the way through.

"Romantic Reggie." (Vitagraph. Fri., Nov. 12.)—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a fairly good vehicle by Templer Saxe. Rexie is overly romantic and falls deeply in love with a lunatic before he becomes acquainted with the state of her mind. Drew is very much the lunatic himself, wearing at all times a vacant expression.

"The Woman's Share." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 13.)—This drama was made by western Vitagraph and like all of these subjects contains fine scenes and photography. The story by Rev. C. J. Harris is notable for its freshness and original development although its moral force could have been made clearer by a more significant climax. Anne Schaffer, George Holt and George Kunkel do very good work in the leading parts. A desert sandstorm is one of the features.

"An Eye Too Many." (MinA. Thurs., Nov. 11.)—A comedy number of fairly good quality although it takes some time in settling down to its main theme and the ending is rather abrupt. A penniless actor strives to impersonate a lost sailor boy and win his fortune, but fails.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"World's Championship Baseball Series." (Novelty. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 15.)—A complete picture record of the games at Boston and Philadelphia, with glimpses of the leading players, President Wilson, Mrs. Galt and other notables who witnessed them.

In many cases the flashes are too short to give a good idea of the play, but baseball "fans" will recognize their favorites and the critical moments in the games, and should appreciate them immensely.

"See America First," No. 10. (Gaumont. Split Reel. Tues., Nov. 16.)—Portland, Maine, and the vicinity, with its historic landmarks, are viewed by the Mutual Traveler. There are striking glimpses of the rocky Maine coast, and old ocean in its wilder moods, and a trip to the White Mountain and Bretton Woods. "Keeping Up With the Joneses," on the same reel, shows Pa McGinnis's little flyer in "Bettin'em Brass" which resulted in disaster.

"A Polar Romance." (Centaur. Two reels. Thurs. Nov. 18.)—The Bostock animals are here shown in an arctic setting, and polar bears predominate. A noted explorer is pursued by his rival in love, who hires the mate of his ship to make way with him.

He is thrown overboard, and the ship comes back without him. His sweetheart, however, refuses to believe he is lost, and fits out an expedition to seek him, taking along the rival, who has exacted her promise to marry him if the explorer is not found. The explorer, however, has made his way to an ice floe, where he is beset by bears and other arctic creatures, but has managed to live, and there he is found.

Irving Cummings, Josephine West, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Charles Whitman, Fred Gamble and Clarence Baker are in the cast. The picture was directed by Jay Hunt from a script by L. V. Jefferson.

"A Cunning Canal Boat Cupid." (Falstaff. Thurs., Nov. 18.)—Old Arthur, cook on the canal boat, hears that his employer's daughter, of whom he is very fond, has been made sole heir under an uncle's will, provided she weds a cousin, whom she detests.

So when the cousin calls, Arthur puts him through such a "course of sprouts" and when he is asked whether he will marry the girl, he firmly declines. As the girl has not refused, the legacy is still hers, and Arthur has won his point. Winifred Lane, Claude Cooper and Arthur Cunningham are in the cast.

"The Fighting Four." (Cub. Fri., Nov. 19.)—Jerry (George Ovey) escapes from the penitentiary, together with three companions. They seize the automobile belonging to a motion picture company, and find four officers' uniforms, in which they appear before Jerry's sweetheart as heroes of the trenches. An elaborate welcome is prepared for them, which is interrupted by the arrival of the prison guards and the owners of the auto, and Jerry and his companions are conducted back to "the trenches."

"Drifting." (American. Fri., Nov. 19.)—A trivial story, saved from mediocrity by the exotic scenery and the acting of Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, and George Field.

Gladys Manners, a society girl and heiress, is roughing it in the mountains. She compares her brave, manly guide with the soft-handed man to whom she is engaged, and her fiancee suffers in the comparison.

She finds herself beginning to feel more than admiration for the good-hearted guide. But a gang of rowdies capture her, and her fiancee shows such bravery and quick wit in effecting her rescue, her contempt is changed to love.

Charles Bartlett was the director.

"Anita's Butterfly." (Beauty. Sat. Nov. 20.) No picture with Neva Gerber and Frank Borzage in the cast can be entirely uninteresting, so in spite of the tritest plot imaginable, this comedy cannot be wholly condemned.

While pursuing a butterfly with her net, Anita stumbles upon Jack, a wealthy young bachelor. Jack is so struck by her personality that he disguises himself as a gardener, and gets work on the grounds owned by Anita's father.

The father gets into financial difficulties, and it is necessary for him to sell his estate. Jack purchases the property, and when the father recoups his losses, and wishes to repurchase, the young man consents on the condition that he may live there as Anita's husband. This satisfactory arrangement is made.

"A Romance of the Alps." (Reliance. Two reels. Sun., Nov. 21.)—Mysticism, in the form of mental telepathy, existing between Wally, a Tyrolean girl, and Andreas her sweetheart, is introduced in this subject. The girl is persecuted by an army Captain, and Andreas feels her needs, though far away, and rushes to her rescue; in the struggle which follows, the Captain slips over the abyss.

Andreas saves his life. In later years, Andreas, drafted into the army, deserts, to see Wally, and is condemned to death. Wally appeals to the general, who is the Captain's father, but a pardon is refused, until the girl tells the old man how Andreas saved his son's life.

The pardon is granted, and Wally arrives with it just as the squad is about to fire at Andreas. Marguerite Marsh, William Hinckley, Carl Formes, Jr., Kate Toncray, Charles Gill and Alfred Paget compose the cast.

"Beneath the Coat of a Butler." (Thanhouser. Sun., Nov. 21.)—The young man, on his graduation from college, learns that his father, whom he supposed dead, is working as a butler in the home of a millionaire, and has used his savings for the boy's education.

The boy is true blue, and gives up his sweetheart to look after his father. The girl, however, is also true blue, and so are her parents, who aim only at her happiness, and all call at the millionaire's home to see the butler.

When they see the attitude of the young people, the millionaire reveals the supposed butler as his wealthy partner, masquerading as a servant to test his son, and all are happily united. Grace De Carlton, Charles Compton and Morgan Jones are at the head of the cast.

"Beauty in Distress." (Casino. Sun., Nov. 21.)—Harry Vokes, of the famous Ward and Vokes team, has ample opportunity for his comedy as a beauty doctor. He calls on the society woman in her husband's absence, and has her well plastered with patches and creams, and is chiselling off her features when the husband unexpectedly returns. There is a comedy duel, and then the doctor takes flight, finding a refuge in an insane asylum, from which the husband is excluded on the ground that he is crazy.

"The Alternative." (Clipper. Three reels. Sat., Nov. 20.)—Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, who are featured, are very effective in the emotional parts of this intense drama. The story is melodramatic in the extreme, but has considerable power. Woodburn and Pendleton are both suitors for the hand of May Van Buren, a society girl. Pendleton is accepted, and in his bitterness, Woodburn sets out to ruin his rival financially. The bride helps in this scheme by her extravagent purchases. On the verge of ruin, Pendleton appeals to his secret enemy to help him. Woodburn proposes a poker game, the stakes to be Pendleton's wife against the money necessary to save the husband's fortune. Pendleton loses, but rather than to give up May, he decides to shoot her, and then commit suicide. before this plan is carried out, Woodburn discovers that Pendleton's father once saved his father from bankruptcy. To make amends, Woodburn gives up his claim to May and advances the money to save her husband's fortune. The picture was directed by Arthur Maude.

"The Key to the Past." (American. Two reels. Mon., Nov. 22.)—Will be reviewed next week.

"The Drummer's Trunk." (Beauty. Tues., Nov. 23.)—This is a comedy that compares favorably with the "Beauty" standard of entertainment. John Steppling, John Sheehan, and Carol Halloway are the principals. James Douglass was the director. A drummer stopping in a small-town hotel greatly impresses Sadie, one of the hotel employees. Her evident infatuation enrages the desk clerk, because he is in love with the girl. When the salesman takes his leave, Sadie hides in his trunk, and is carried to the city apartment of the young man. The express man, hearing noises inside the trunk, believes the salesman to be a white-slaver. The drummer has a hard time explaining matters, especially to his irate wife.

"The Valley Feud." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 26.)—There are some remarkable outdor scenes, superb photography, wonderful horsemanship, and a hackneyed plot in this picture. The "Mustang" leads, Anna Little, Jack Richardson, and E. Forrest Taylor, maintain their usual excellence in Western roles. In this modern 'Romeo and Juliet," the Montagues and Capulets are rival sheepmen and cattlemen. Both factions try to drive their enemies from the country, by cutting fences, damming streams, burning houses, and other similar methods. The feud is finally ended by the marriage of the children of the warring leaders. The directing was done by Frank Cooley.

"The Bluffers." (American. Fri., Nov. 26.)—This is a mildly amusing comedy, as well given as the tenuous plot permits. Patty and Tom get married against the wishes of Patty's father. They have a hard time trying to live on their income, and their difficulties are further increased when Tom's father-in-law writes that he is going to visit the newly-weds. To put up a front, they borrow their neighbors' furniture, and surprise the pater familias with their cosy home. As soon as the guest takes his departure, the bluffers begin to return their borrowed furnishings, but the father happens to see this. When the installment men are later taking away the couple's furniture, Patty's good-natured father sends them a generous check to prevent any bluffing in the future. Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh are the principals. Reaves Eason was the producer.

"Cupid Beats Father." (Beauty. Sat., Nov. 27.)—Neva Gerber and Frank Borzage are their usual delightful selves in this picture, and the cast is supplemented by some very good acting on the part of two small children, but the plot is very thin. Frank and Neva are determined to get married. Neva's father pretends to be much opposed to the alliance. Neva's little brother and sister overhear their sister consenting to an elopement, and pretending to be grown-ups, re-enact the scene for their parents' benefit. The father holds up Frank with a revolver when he comes to get Neva, and forces him to come into the house. There the guilty pair find a minister and all their friends. The ceremony is performed before the dazed pair realize their good fortune. Director James Douglass was in charge.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." (Pathe. Two reels.) "The Bang Sun Engine" is the title of an especially diverting episode in this series. Wallingford and Blackie, attempting to get even with a rural banker, begin to buy up land, and offer him such an exorbitant price for his holdings that he gets suspicious. The girls, Violet and Fanny, get options on all the other land in the vicinity, and when the banker hears that Wallingford is about to exploit a new "sun engine" he buys the options for $70,000. He then attempts to resell them to Wallingford, who offers him a bad nickel, while the conspirators, from the side lines enjoy the adventure to the fullest.

Miller, transcontinental walkers, reach Kansas City, Mo.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Broken Coin." (Universal Special Feature. Twenty-second Episode. Two reels.)—This, the last number of the serial, entitled "An American Queen," finds Count Frederick on the throne of Gretzhoffen and married to Kitty. The concluding instalment is, like all those preceding, full of exciting action. The halves of the coin are at last joined and the hidden treasure found.

"My Old Dutch." (Broadway Universal feature. Five reels. Mon., Nov. 22.)—Reviewed at length in issue of November 20.

"When Father Was the Goat." (Nestor, Mon., Nov. 22.)—Billie Rhodes has the leading part in this story of a young couple who need $500 for their honeymoon. The young man's wealthy father refuses it, but later, when he is mixed up in a raid on a gambling house, and escapes arrest after a heart-breaking chase up fire escapes and across roofs, the youth discovers that the detectives are looking for him, and when "properly approached" father gives up the necessary $500.

"In Search of a Wife." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 23.)—A very plain little story apropos of Thanksgiving time. It is full of homely touches that go to create a delightful effect. There is no rapid action while the story itself accomplishes little, yet due to the excellent treatment tendered it by William Worthington, it is sure to please. Agnes Vernon, Herbert Rawlinson, Helen Wright, and T. D. Crittendon are the leads.

"When Willie Went Wild. (Imp. Tues., Nov. 23.)—The Englishman with his valet in the wild west again. Vic Potel is the valet, a very funny figure, while his boss creates many laughs on his own account. The situations and the interpretation are both good and the comedy as a whole will heartily please.

"Stolen Hearts and Nickels." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 24.)—Willie Ritchie has the lead in this, as an aristocratic car conductor who feigns a much higher position before his numerous lady friends. Others in the cast are Louise Orth, and Reggie Morris. The two reels introduce a little that is funny and Ritchie is practically the same as ever.

"The Trap That Failed." (Big U. Wed., Nov. 24.)—A well worked out and surprising detective story, impossible and often contradictory in places, but interesting nevertheless. Murdock MacQuarrie, Arthur Moon, Edna Payne and Duke Aldis are the principals.

"The Mayor's Decision." (Laemmle. Three reels. Thurs., Nov. 25.)— A political melodrama of good quality produced with an eye to the value of sensationalism. The setting of Dragon Alley is noticeable for its elaborate detail and its destruction by fire is a very good scene. William Dolan and Gloria Fonda are the leads and do very good work. The story is complicated and corrupt politics plays a large part in it, making it gripping in most respects.

"Kidnapping the King's Kids." (Powers. Thurs., Nov. 25.)—A baffiles and Duck farce of unusually large mirth provoking qualities. The usual cast appears in an ancient setting. There is the pretender to the throne who would kidnap the king's kids aided by Lady Baffles, but Detective Duck prevents the proceedings by interfering.

"Man or Money." (Imp. Three reels. Fri., Nov. 26.)—King Baggot is featured in this number which allows him to register all those heroic emotions for which he is famous. All the players act with a sincere show of feeling throughout, while the story, following conventional lines, is converted to a typical Baggot picture. Ned Reardon, Edna Hunter and Robert Fisher have the remaining leading parts.

"Saved By a Skirt." (Nestor. Fri., Nov. 26.) In order to get a large legacy, Jack must be married within 24 hours. His sweetheart (Billie Rhodes) is away at school, so he induces her brother to dress as a girl, and they are "married." The next day the lawyer for the estate notifies Jack that he will call with the papers, which must be signed by the "wife" and Jack hastily telephones for Billie's brother. The brother again dons his skirts and starts out, but is arrested on the way, and while the lawyer is waiting impatiently, he is languishing in a cell. The situation is saved when Billie herself arrives unexpectedly, and quickly grasping the situation, signs the papers as the "wife." Then Jack hurries her out to a preacher and she becomes wife in fact.

"A Desperate Leap." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 27.)—Another Helen Holmes feature, sure to be enjoyed by the lovers of highly thrilling railroad melodrama. The fearless heroine proves her lover's innocence by bringing a group of bandits to justice. Her leap from the station roof to the swiftly moving freight train is hair-raising in all senses of the word. The rest of the action is by no means stilted in comparison with this sensational act.

"The Mirror of Justice." (Powers. Sat., Nov. 27.)—This merely depicts the adventures of Robert during the time that he is making himself felt in the business world and also while he is winning a wife. The suspense is slim although the action is always pleasing. Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Val Paul are the main players.

"The Kingdom of Nosey Land." (Rex. Three reels. Sun., Nov. 28.)—One of H. C. Mathews' products, with Elsie Albert. It is almost exclusively a picture for juveniles as it contains a fairy story, a goodly quantity of fantastic action, and a simple plot. The various inmates of the jungle, all impersonated by humans, cut capers that will thrill the young, while the long nosed characters, the gorgeous costumes and the light theme complete a desirable picture for children. It's a real old nursery tale, or, if original, so much resembles others, that its narration is hardly necessary.

"Inside Facts." (Laemmle. Sun., Nov. 28.)—A conventional short melodrama, interesting because of its rapid development. It is by James Dayton and is enacted by a fine cast including Jack Nelson, Myrtle Gonzalez and Hayward Mack.

"Universal Animated Weekly," No. 193. (Wed. Nov. 17.)—Football makes its way into this weekly, by way of the recent Yale-Princeton game, while college sports are otherwise represented by the clash of the eight oared crews of Columbia and Yale. Other interesting topics are the trial trip of a water craft whose motive power is furnished by an air propeller; Thomas Edison laying a cornerstone at Universal City; a view of the new mammoth French liner Lafayette; and several scenes connected with the world war.

"Universal Animated Weekly. No. 192." (Wed., Nov. 10.)—Ruins of the Diamond factory in Brooklyn, N. Y., which was recently destroyed by fire causing great loss of life; Olive Whitman, daughter of New York's governor christening a U. S. airship; views of the water carnival held in San Francisco Bay; more fashions worn by Universal film stars; an interesting picture of Captain A. C. Thomsen who has traveled across the Atlantic four hundred times; and a glimpse into the daily life of the French army showing the handling of the big guns, are the events of most importance in this weekly. Hy Mayer's cartoons are unusually good.
